ARMED PLUNDERERS SWOOP DOWN ON CITY, STAGE 16 HOLDUPS AND OBTAIN RICH LOOT

Georgia Tech Junior Killed in Mysterious Accident

RALPH COLLINS, 23 BELIEVED VICTIM OF SPEEDING AUTO

Police Puzzled by Fact That Youth Apparently Was Wearing No Shoes When Run Down.

TORN BODY FOUND ON PONCE DE LEON

Mrs. Lee Cline, 31, Just Released From Hospital, Meets Death in Auto-Truck Collision.

Two Atlantans were killed in automobile accidents late Saturday afternoon and night—one a young woman who was fatally injured when a truck in which she was returning to her home from Grady hospital after being treated for a spell of faintness, crashed into a passenger car, and the other a student of the Georgia School of Technology, whose body, fully clothed with the exception of shoes, was found in the middle of the car tracks on Ponce de Leon avenue between Myrtle street and Penn avenue.

The death of Ralph Collins, 23, junior cooperative student at Tech, baffled police, providing a mystery that had not been solved early this morning. Whether he was the victim of a hit-and-run driver, or had been killed in a crash of automobiles, or whether he had met his death in another manner could not be determined. The mystery was deepened by the inability of investigators to account for the absence of his footwear.

Mrs. Lee Cline, 31, of 131 Short street, was the woman victim. Shortly after 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon she applied at Grady hospital for treatment after a fainting spell. She was treated, and her husband notified. He sent a truck driven by Ernest Wyatt, a negro, to bring her home, and en route to her residence the truck struck a car near Hill and Fair streets driven by J. Hilton Spivey, according to police reports.

Body Found on Street.

At 11:30 o'clock Saturday night the body of Collins was discovered by passersby on Ponce de Leon avenue, and a few moments later motorcycle policemen called an undertaker's ambulance. The youth apparently had met instant death. His head was crushed and it was believed his right leg was broken.

Inquiry at the place where he and several fellow Tech students roomed, 602 Williams street, elicited the information that young Collins, who is employed by the Georgia Power Company, had abruptly abandoned writing a letter to a girl friend, and had put on his clothes and left his room without saying where he intended going. His roommate, Bill McGowan, said he noticed nothing unusual about the departure of Collins, thinking that he was going to work, as he had done once in a while at that hour.

Subsequent information revealed that he had visited another apartment in the building and had left.

Search for the shoes of the student was instituted under direction of Captain Archer J. Holcombe, but the footwear worn by the youth could not be found. F. L. Laird, of the Pig 'n' Whistle sandwich stand at Ponce de Leon and Argonne avenues, told policemen that a passerby had told him that "three fellows in a flivver" had struck a man down. The identity of this person was not ascertained.

Driver Identifies Body.

W. D. Leach, of Scottdale, a taxicab driver, viewed the body at Greenberg's about an hour after it was taken there. He said that Collins was one of two men he had "picked up" in front of an apartment house on Ponce de Leon avenue not far from where his body was found. It was some time after 10 o'clock, Leach said, and the Tech student's companion was described as being a "tall boy."

The couple of young men, the driver said, were undecided as to where they wanted to go at first, arguing a bit over this point. The tall youth insisted on going to an address on Fowler street, and after a bit of discussion, the man he identified at the undertaker's acceded. Arrived there, however, Leach said, the young men suddenly decided they wanted to proceed to "Fifth and Spring."

At Fifth and Springs streets, Leach said, he discharged his passengers, and that was the last he saw of either of them until he viewed Collins' body.

VALUABLE DIAMOND OF LEGUIA IS FOUND

Lima, Peru, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A diamond collar purchased from one of the most famous jewelers in Paris for $150,000 has been found in a safe deposit box held by former President Augusto B. Leguia, the court of sanctions disclosed today.

The discovery was made in connection with the trial of the president's son, Juan Leguia, who was imprisoned with his father under charges of irregularities in the disbursement of treasury funds during the Leguia administration. The collar, it was said, is now in the possession of an Italian bank as a guarantee for credit in the son's favor.

Escape Artist Fails, Is Almost Drowned

FRANKFORT, Ky., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Genestra, billed as an "escape artist" at a local vaudeville theater, narrowly escaped death by drowning tonight when he failed to extricate himself from a barrel of water in which he had been locked.

The time he set to free himself from the barrel was two minutes, and when he failed to emerge after the set time, three men on the stage with him broke the barrel open. Genestra was apparently lifeless, but a physician was hastily summoned and revived him.

DR. S. D. WARNOCK, EX-CITY PHYSICIAN, DRAWS $250 FINE

Two more sentences were meted out Saturday as a result of Atlanta's war on alleged grafters when Dr. S. D. Warnock, former city physician, drew a three-month jail term or a fine of $250, and Jack White, former business partner of ex-Councilman Harry York, heard Judge Edgar E. Pomeroy add a year's chain-gang term and a fine of $1,000 to sentences received on a previous conviction.

Dr. Warnock, who entered a plea of guilty before Judge Pomeroy, paid the fine. He entered his plea to an indictment containing eight counts accusing him of extorting various sums from women prisoners he was called upon, in his official capacity as a city physician, to treat at police headquarters.

Assistant Solicitor-General J. Walter LeCraw, who was to direct the prosecution of Warnock at his trial which had been set for Tuesday of this week, approved the sentence given by Judge Pomeroy, stating that Dr. Warnock was more than 60 years old and already had lost his position with the city as a result of his acts.

White, who was sentenced Saturday morning by Judge Pomeroy, was found guilty Friday night by a jury of having given York a bribe of all or part of $1,000 he is alleged to have obtained from D. F. Seybold, then salesmanager for the Georgia branch of the Indiana Truck Company, for obtaining an order from the city for two trucks purchased for the construction department.

He immediately filed notice of appeal and an appeal bond was set at $2,500 by Judge Pomeroy. It was furnished for White by a surety company. White now is under sentence of four years on the chain gang and to pay fines totalling $4,500. He has three bonds posted, two totalling $12,500 are appeal bonds while the third for $10,000 is to guarantee his appearance in court to answer other indictments pending against him.

HEAVY "GRAFT" DOCKET FACES SUPERIOR COURT THIS WEEK

The heaviest docket of "graft" cases since the launching of the municipal investigation almost a year ago confronts Judge G. H. Howard in Fulton superior court this week. One or more cases are docketed for each day.

The first case to be called is that of Dr. John G. Wilkins, former city physician, accused of extortion, who is to face a jury Monday morning. The true bill against Dr. Wilkins alleges that he extorted various sums from women prisoners at the city jail for medical treatment in lieu of sending them to the municipal clinic as provided by law.

The case of Dr. S. D. Warnock, former associate of Dr. Wilkins, had been set for trial Tuesday but was

MILITARY REVIEW TODAY LAUNCHES ARMISTICE RITES

12th Anniversary Tuesday To Find City and State Commemorating Peace Pact.

Observance of Armistice Day in Atlanta this year will combine private, public, military and ecclesiastic participation in one of the most widespread celebrations since the order to cease firing was received by a war-ridden world. It will have its beginning today and will reach its climax Tuesday, the anniversary of the date when the guns on the western front were silenced.

A brilliant full-dress parade and review, in commemoration of America's war dead, will be staged by the 122d infantry, Georgia National Guard, and members of Atlanta Post No. 1, American Legion, at Piedmont park at 2 o'clock this afternoon, which will be witnessed by a large number of distinguished Georgians, headed by Governor-elect Richard B. Russell, Jr.

Impressive ceremonies have been planned by a joint committee of the infantry and the local Legion post, and the program will be initiated by

Georgia's "Big Three" Achieve All Possible Results Saturday

The big three of Georgia football—Tech, Georgia and Oglethorpe—waged battles on three widely scattered fronts Saturday, to emerge with various results.

Georgia's Bulldogs invaded the north and fought their way from behind to win a thrilling game from New York University, 7 to 6. This game is grippingly described in today's Constitution by RALPH McGILL, Constitution writer.

Atlanta's own Yellow Jackets defended the home soil against Vanderbilt, losing to the visitors at Grant field after a brave fight, 6 to 0. ED DANFORTH tells the story of this struggle in his vivid style.

Oglethorpe's Petrels journeyed to Springfield, Ohio, and played Wittenberg College to a scoreless tie in which both teams continually threatened. This game is covered by a special STAFF WRITER.

Notre Dame's magnificent eleven, driving toward a national championship, overwhelmed Pennsylvania, Tech's foe of next week, by a score of 60 to 20 at Philadelphia. GRANTLAND RICE, famous writer, covered the game for The Constitution. In his story he declares that Notre Dame's scoring machine is greater than were the "Four Horsemen" of the 1924 Irish team.

Alabama, continuing its headlong rush through Southern conference opposition, beat the Florida Alligators in Gainesville, Fla., by the score of 20 to 0. A colorful description of this game was written for The Constitution by ZIPP NEWMAN.

Tulane, another undefeated conference team, blanked Auburn in New Orleans, 21 to 0. WILLIAM McG. KEEFE covered this victory.

The sports section contains reports of these games and many others. The sports experts of the ASSOCIATED PRESS have sent accounts of the football war on all fronts, in every part of the nation, to The Constitution.

Among the major games described are:

Alabama 20; Florida 0.
Pittsburgh 7; Carnegie Tech 6.
Cornell 54; Hobart 0.
Ohio State 27; Navy 0.
Notre Dame 60; Penn. 20.

REMUS WITNESS HELD FOR PERJURY

LANSING, Mich., Nov. 8.—Franklin Dodge, former federal prohibition agent, was arrested here today on a federal warrant charging him with giving perjured testimony in a case in federal court in Savannah, Ga., May 29.

Arraigned before a United States commissioner, he was held in bail of $5,000 for a hearing November 17.

Dodge figured in many federal liquor law roundups and was active in the case of George Remus, of Cincinnati. Remus, who was a prisoner in the Atlanta federal penitentiary, named him as corespondent in a cross bill for divorce, charging misconduct at Atlanta during the period of his incarceration.

COTTON ADVANCES DOLLAR PER BALE

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Cotton advanced a dollar a bale net here today on the government crop estimate of 14,438,000 bales, which lowered the estimate of a month ago by 48,000 bales and on the ginnings report of 10,863,601 running bales, which was smaller than expected.

The 20-minute recess observed for receipt of the government estimate was credited by cotton traders with preventing what might have been a break in the market after the first commercial flash to the exchange placed the government figure 200,000 bales in excess of the actual figure announced. The error was checked and quickly corrected.

At the resumption of operations after the suspension, December traded at 11.25 and March at 11.65, the highs of the day, 25 to 31 points above the pre-bureau level and 41 to 42 points above the lows of the morning. Later hedge selling caused a loss of 16 to 20 points and the market closed net 15 to 20 points higher for the day.

At its peak the level was at $1.50 a bale higher on the strength of the government reports

DRASTIC SLASHES IN FULTON COUNTY SALARIES SLATED

Lucrative Jobs To Be Abolished and "Bolters" Ousted, Board Chairman W. L. Gilbert Declares.

The Fulton county payroll, long the target of foes of the current administration, will receive on January 1, 1931, the slash often recommended and once or twice demanded by the grand jury, it is learned authoritatively at the courthouse. Moreover, a number of lucrative jobs are to be abolished both to effect a saving in finances and to remove from office persons who in recent county races have bolted the "courthouse tickets."

Though the county commissioners have refused to commit themselves definitely on the subject, save an unqualified statement from Chairman W. L. Gilbert that "expenses must and shall be reduced," it is known that word has gone down the line that various changes are to be enacted at a special meeting of the commission around December 1, when a new and complete salary schedule is to be drawn up and passed.

Commissioner Edward H. Inman, who never has been in accord with his fellow board members of the salary question, is known to favor more drastic reductions than those contemplated, while Commissioners Paul S. Etheridge, Walter B. Stewart and Walter C. Hendrix are said to have

Husband Sues Self For Mate's Death

ROCKFORD, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Alleging that his own careless driving was the cause of his wife's death, J. H. Krause has brought suit for $10,000 damages against the J. H. Krause Company, holding the company liable because he was its agent on a business trip at the time of the accident.

Krause is president of the company that bears his name. Mrs. Lillian Krause was killed November 13, 1929, in an automobile accident near Elgin, Ill., while she was accompanying Krause.

Suit was started by Krause as administrator of his wife's estate.

U. S. RECOGNIZES NEW GOVERNMENT AT RIO DE JANEIRO

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—First of the major world powers to recognize the new provisional government of Brazil, the United States formally acknowledged today the administration of Provisional President Getulio Vargas to be the controlling political factor in that country.

Recognition by the United States of the new Brazilian regime was announced by Secretary Stimson after a conference with President Hoover and upon receiving from Ambassador Morgan at Rio de Janeiro a report upon the entire question of recognition. In addition the Brazilian administration had made a formal request for such action.

The recognition was accorded 15 days after the government of former President Washington Luis had been overthrown by a coup d'etat, which ended widespread revolutionary activities.

Secretary Stimson made his announcement of recognition in a formal statement.

Stimson's statement of recognition said:

"The American ambassador at Rio de Janeiro received a note some days ago from the defacto government of Brazil, setting forth the composition of the present government, stating that it will respect national obligations contracted abroad as well as treaties and other international obligations and requesting recognition.

"Ambassador Morgan, at our request, has been studying the entire situation upon which the question of recognition depends and the department has received this morning his final report.

"Therefore we instructed him to answer the request above mentioned that this government will be happy to continue with the new government of Brazil the same friendly relations as with its predecessors."

Unlike the immediate recognition of new regimes recently in Argentina, Peru and Bolivia, the formal announcement was delayed pending the receipt of the report from Ambassador Morgan as to the exact status of the new Brazilian administration. State department officials had raised the question whether the new administration was a successor to the government of President Washington Luis or an entirely new government. In the former case no re-recognition would have been necessary.

The day before the unseating of Luis, the United States had placed an embargo on arms to the rebels. The rebel coup d'etat came as a considerable surprise to the state department. The fact that it had just forbidden the sale of arms to those who came in power caused the American government to approach the question of recognition cautiously and to await some move of the Brazilian regime itself.

Major General Bliss Dying at Washington

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Major General Tasker H. Bliss, retired, war-time chief of staff, was described by his physicians as "failing steadily" late tonight at Walter Reed hospital.

It was not known whether General Bliss would live through the night. Almost 77 years old, he was stricken recently with a recurrent attack of an intestinal ailment. He has been in ill health, however, for the past six months.

Money, Watches, Jewelry and Clothing Constitute Booty Obtained; Distress Calls Swamp Police

Rampant banditry, unleashed apparently by the lowing threat of cold weather, harassed virtually every section of Atlanta Saturday night, with four armed young white plunderers nonchalantly staging successive holdups in the city's most fashionable sections while independent robbers stalked other areas and lone prowling gunmen kept police headquarters in feverish activity responding to distress calls from victims.

For a time the telephone calls at headquarters were so numerous that the switchboard operator was swamped, and the forces available for duty quickly were exhausted, as additional requests came through. Meantime, in compliance with the recent order of Chief of Police James L. Beavers, the bandit squad of plainclothes officers were patrolling every ward, but no arrests had been made up to a late hour.

Swooping down on the North Side in a manner suggestive of the swashbuckling tactics of eighteenth century freebooters, a quartet of young white men, unmasked and covering the general area of The Prado, Piedmont avenue, Westminster drive and Peachtree circle, pounced upon victim after victim, committing seven individual robberies within a period of less than two hours.

Seize Booty Indiscriminately.

These four bandits, rading in a Ford sedan which their victims said bore no license tag, indiscriminately seized their booty, consisting of money, watches, overcoats, a scarf, a hat and other available loot. Two of the robberies were committed by this gang in the shadow of the executive mansion on The Prado.

Over in another part of town, in the vicinity of Trinity avenue between Whitehall, Pryor and other streets lying to the eastward, two other young white men, unmasked, were holding forth, while from other sections of the city came word that negro robbers, in couples or singly, were infesting South Side streets and alleys, taking their victims as they chanced along.

By 11 o'clock Saturday night the following robberies were occupying the attention of the uniformed headquarters men, the first seven cited being those perpetrated by the four white plunderers:

R. M. Chatfield, of 591 Moreland avenue, N. E., was held up by the four men near Little Five Points on that thoroughfare. He was robbed of his watch.

Deportation of Lavroff, of Tech, To Depend on Washington Hearing

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—Immigration officials announced today that Viachesla Lavroff, young Russian student now enrolled at Georgia Tech, will be given a hearing here by the board of review before final action is taken on the deportation proceedings instituted against him because he took a job to help along in his quest for an education.

Department officials explained that Laroff violated his student's immigration certificate by accepting employment while attending the Georgia school. Under the law, it was stated, a foreign student admitted to the United States to pursue educational training forfeits his status as a student by engaging in outside employment and is subject to deportation.

At the same time, however, officials said he would be entitled to an initial hearing before the immigration officer in charge at Atlanta and would be given a review later by the departmental board here. The Atlanta immigration office, it was said, has been instructed to hold the initial hearing at a time which meets the convenience of Lavroff.

The announcement of the department's decision to give him a final hearing before the board of review here came after the office of Senator Walter George, of Georgia, interceded in behalf of the young Tech student. Senator George was requested to act by Fred Paxon, of Atlanta, in a message received at the former's office today.

Government red tape, that intangible substance that enmeshes all official acts, seems to be largely responsible for Lavroff's present difficulties. According to the record available here, he is now a night student at Tech and works during the daytime. Under regulations adopted by the immigration bureau, if the reverse were true, that is, if he worked at night and attended school in the day, he probably would not be subject to deportation. A fine line of demarcation has been drawn between the two. The department has held that it is all right to work a little while at night while maintaining the status of a student in the daytime, but to reverse the order is all wrong.

So slow does the wheels of the immigration bureau move, though, that the young Russian in all probability will be permitted to finish his present semester before a final decision is made in his case.

GERMAN PROPOSAL LOSES AT GENEVA

Von Bernstorff Plan To Limit Annual Number of Conscripts Is Voted Down.

GENEVA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Count Von Bernstorff's proposal to limit the number of army conscripts called to the colors each year by parties to the League of Nations' preparatory disarmament conference was rejected by the commission today. Approval, however, was voted an alternative principle for limitation of the period of conscript service.

Only five nations supported the German recommendation — Russia, China, Sweden, Norway and Holland. The United States, Great Britain and Canada, while not voting, were understood to approve the proposal in substance, although they believed it useless to attempt to force such limitation on states which rely upon conscription for their military defense forces.

France, Italy, Japan, Poland, Jugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Rumania and other states adhering to the conscript system stood solidly against Von Bernstorff's proposal. The German delegate took his defeat philosophically, contenting himself with reserving Germany's right to renew its efforts toward conscript limitation when a general conference is called.

There was a general agreement on the need for limiting the period of conscript service, but there arose some difference of opinion as to the methods by which this could be achieved.

Great Britain and Poland proposed that the limit should be the same for all parties to the conference. The French delegate, however, feared such a system might conflict with economic, social and political conditions in some states. Most of the others favored a common maximum, but the issue was still under discussion when today's session adjourned.

Max Litvinoff, the Russian delegate, continued to fling satirical jibes at the commission, apologizing at one point for having mentioned disarmament—a word, he intimated, which was totally inappropriate to the work and aims of the commission's members.

Three Distinguished Friends of Education Who Have Been Visiting Atlanta Colleges

After three days in Atlanta, during which they visited the colleges in this vicinity, Dr. E. E. Day, his assistant, Miss Sydnor Walker, and Jackson Davis left at noon Saturday for the east. Miss Walker will stop in Chapel Hill, where she expects to confer with Dr. Howard Odum.

Dr. Day, Miss Walker and Mr. Davis held conferences here with Dr. M. L. Brittain, of Georgia Tech; Dr. Harvey W. Cox, of Emory University, and Dr. J. R. McCain, of Agnes Scott College, and visits were made to the group of negro colleges.

Dr. Day, who is connected with the general education board, as well as the Rockefeller Foundation, stated he was simply making a get-acquainted trip in the south. Three days were spent in Nashville and three here. He expressed himself as pleased with the progress which has been made at the institutes. This visit is his first to the south in seven years.

Mr. Davis, assistant to Trevor Arnett, president of the general education board, is a southerner, and for a number of years was connected with education in Virginia. Mr. Davis said there was no statement he cared to make at this time in connection with the general education board's program for 1931. He said that he felt sure the south was becoming more responsive in matters educational.

Miss Walker, who is also a southerner, expressed herself as delighted with the weather, but had no comment to make on any details of the conferences with college heads here and in Nashville.

Just before leaving Atlanta, Dr. Day, Miss Walker and Mr. Davis, accompanied by Clark Foreman, of the Rosenwald fund, visited the Atlanta School of Social Work, which is one of only three such schools in the south.

ABILITY TO INFLUENCE IS ROAD TO SUCCESS

Howard J. Wisehaupt Draws Large Saturday Night Crowd to Lecture.

To be successful in any line of work, it is necessary for a person to be able to influence people, Howard J. Wisehaupt, widely known business analyst who is delivering a series of lectures here at the Wesley Memorial auditorium, told his audience Saturday night.

Speaking under the auspices of The Atlanta Constitution and the Junior Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Wisehaupt is delivering a series of four free lectures here. He has conducted similar institutes in many of the larger cities of the United States and merchants wherever he has appeared have found a great improvement in business conditions.

Mr. Wisehaupt expressed great satisfaction over the large increase in attendance, in comparison with the opening night. The audience was nearly twice as large, and much greater interest was manifested in the observations Mr. Wisehaupt made.

The fact that a large portion of the audience had also attended the lecture on the opening night seemed to please Mr. Wisehaupt very much. From a count of hands who had attended the first lecture, it seemed that practically all had returned for the second.

Mr. Wisehaupt was introduced by Richard J. Reynolds, Jr., representing the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Reynolds paid high tribute to the ability of Mr. Wisehaupt as a business expert, and heartily commended The Constitution for its part in bringing him to Atlanta.

"Study different types of people and their traits," Mr. Wisehaupt said, "if you want to be successful." He had as his subject, "How to Influence More People."

"If you can influence people," he declared, "you can be successful in any line of business, and your future influence depends on your ability to know people from studying them, and on knowing how to approach the different kinds of people."

Mr. Wisehaupt strongly advised setting a definite goal and working to that end. He pointed out that the small percentage of students to finish school was largely caused by a person not knowing what he was fitted to do and not being interested in the work.

There will be two more lectures in the series and it is expected that the auditorium will be filled nearly to capacity on these. Monday night he will speak on "Citizen or Resident," and for the closing lecture Tuesday night he will have as his subject "Personality: Value and Development."

Mr. Wisehaupt will occupy the pulpit at Wesley Memorial tonight, speaking on "Salesmanship and the Bible."

N. C. County Acquires 4 Sheriffs in 4 Days

LEXINGTON, N. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Davidson county has had four sheriffs in as many days.

Sheriff Fred C. Sink died Tuesday, election day. The count of ballots showed him defeated by his democratic opponent, Major James A. Leonard.

Coroner J. L. Sowers, under the law, succeeded Sheriff Sink. He served one day. Thursday the board of commissioners appointed Frank McCarn, county jailer, to the office. McCarn was sworn in.

Friday he resigned. Roby G. Loflin, chief deputy, was forthwith appointed.

Major Leonard will take office December 1.

Economics Meet To Stress Southern Farm Problems

Pioneer Radio Station To Be Historical Relic

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A homely little shack on Long Island, identified as the first commercial wireless station built in America by Marconi, is to be preserved as an historical exhibit.

Announcement was made today that through the efforts of Major Edwin H. Armstrong, radio pioneer and inventor who developed the first super-heterodyne circuit, arrangements have been completed whereby the building will take its place as an important landmark in the development of the industry.

Information available places the time of the erection of the shed-like structure measuring 12x14 feet, in the late fall of 1900 or the early winter of 1901. This gives it a date in radio history prior to Marconi's experiments in trans-ocean communication and previous to the flashing of the letter "S" in the telegraphic code across the Atlantic.

Third Annual Conference Will Assemble Friday and Saturday; Noted Speakers Coming.

With special attention focused on the agricultural situation in the south, the Southeastern Economics conference, comprising a membership which includes some of the most noted experts in the United States, will assemble here Friday and Saturday for its third annual convention, it was announced Saturday by the Atlanta Convention and Tourist Bureau.

Among the more prominent speakers scheduled to deliver addresses relative to the farm problems of this section are Professor Calvin B. Hoover, of Duke University; Dr. O. C. Stine, bureau of agricultural economics, Washington, D. C., and Professor Wilson Gee, of the University of Virginia. These speakers, it is understood, will point out methods to be used to bring about improvement in the southern agricultural situation.

Dean Walter J. Matherly, president, will preside over the sessions, which will open next Friday morning after registration, which begins at 9 o'clock. P. S. Arkwright, president of the Georgia Power Company, is scheduled to deliver an address during a discussion of the general topic of southern public utility regulation.

At noon Friday the economic delegates will meet in a joint luncheon with the Southeastern Political Science conference, during which teachers from 11 southern states are on the program for brief talks.

Italian Arrests.

FLORENCE, Italy, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A number of arrests are understood to have been made at Prato, 12 miles from here, in connection with distribution of communist manifestos yesterday.

CLARE EAMES PASSES SATURDAY IN LONDON

Famed American Actress Dies in Nursing Home After Operation.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Clare Eames, the American actress who rose to fame as Mary, Queen of Scots, in John Drinkwater's play, "Mary Stuart," died today in a nursing home here after a surgical operation.

It was in 1921 that she made her first notable success in the Drinkwater play, but she had been on the stage three years before that, perfecting the art which was to bring her success on both sides of the Atlantic.

Three years ago she came to London in "The Silver Cord," written by her husband, Sidney Howard, and scored an instantaneous success. She returned two years later in her husband's "The Sacred Flame."

England never saw her in "Macbeth," in which she appeared with James K. Hackett in America, but for the past few years the actress had made her home in England, and it was here that she was first taken ill.

She underwent one operation last week and submitted to the second, from which she did not rally, last night.

Clare Eames was born and educated in the United States and was married there in 1921, shortly after the opening of her husband's play, "The Sword." They had one daughter, now four years old.

Fall Kills Woman.

MELLEN, Wis., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Mrs. John Kunz, 46, fell from a chair, while hanging curtains. Yesterday she died. Her physicians said a hairpin punctured her skull, causing death.

A Double Anniversary

Seventy-five years ago, the Mason & Hamlin Company came into being—musical instrument makers were they, so artistic, so musically gifted that their product was at once accorded the highest rank for tone.

The Mason & Hamlin Piano from its earliest days has had an arresting, individual quality of tone—a soulful mellowness that no other Piano ever possessed. Many have tried, without success, to discover this "secret ingredient." Today—as ever—the Mason & Hamlin stands unequalled in richness, purity and power.

This year, which marks the 75th milestone for the Mason & Hamlin Company, also brings our Golden Anniversary. We are proud that half of our lifetime has been spent in close association with the Mason & Hamlin—musically the most beautiful Piano the world has ever known.

You and your friends are invited to see and hear the Mason & Hamlin Pianoforte at any time without obligation

Notables Review Georgia Tech Army and Navy Units on Institution's First Homecoming Day

Climaxing a day of "home-coming" replete with a remarkable display of the most modern products and processes in the technological field, the Army R. O. T. C. unit of the Georgia School of Technology Saturday morning passed in review at Grant Field. The "open house" maintained by nearly all the technical departments at the school attracted large crowds of visitors from virtually every section of the southeast. The photograph at the top shows the reserve officers' ranks as their units passed before the reviewing stand, in which sat a notable gathering of prominent figures, while the photograph below reveals a section of the stand with its distinguished guests. Left to right, they are G. A. Huddleston, Greenville, Ga.; C. C. King, Covington; Fred Wilhoit, Warrenton; L. P. James, of James, Ga.; Dr. M. L. Brittain, president of Tech; E. H. Ginn, Atlanta; Arthur Neal Robinson, Atlanta; Hamilton McWhorter, Lexington; J. A. Calloway, Washington, Ga.; C. M. Mossock, Lawrenceville; W. H. Griffin, Washington, Ga., and Hugh Rowe, of Athens. BAND OF YOUTHFUL THUGS TERRORIZES NORTH SIDE AREA faced by three of the North Side robbers, the fourth remaining at the wheel of the unlicensed Ford sedan. He reported that he was robbed of "a small amount of cash."

Robbed Near Mansion

Robert Weston, of 129 Palisades road, had just passed the executive mansion on The Prado when the Ford sedan bearing the four hold-up men drew along side the curb. Three of them hopped out and surrounded Weston, holding guns threateningly. One of them searched his pockets and secured only a handful of silver. Disappointed in their quest for more lucrative loot, they stripped Weston of his overcoat and fled.

C. W. Brooks, of 947 Virginia avenue, told police he was confronted by the four bandits as he proceeded along Wakefield drive. In front of No. 102 they held him up, took $6, his watch, overcoat and scarf; bade him "beat it" and sped away.

W. M. Smith, 64 The Prado, was walking toward his home when he was stopped near Peachtree circle by the same group. Smith, in a jocular vein, remarked to one of them that he had "bet on Tech" and did not have much money on his person.

"That's all right," said the one going through his pockets. "You've still got $5 left. We'll take that and your hat. You ought to know a good football team when you see one." They left him bareheaded.

John L. Moyer, of 624 Barnett street, N. E., was robbed by the quartet near the corner of North avenue and Linwood avenue. They took his watch, which was diamond studded and valued at $100, and $3 in cash.

Bandits Take $18.

B. A. Bazemore, 393 Ormond street, was held up by two unmasked white men who emerged from a dark alley opening on Trinity avenue between Whitehall and Pryor. They took $18 and after considering, declined to take "Those things," one of them said his watch or a package of cigarettes, referring to the watch, "are what get a guy in trouble. We'll let you keep that and the cigarets. We don't smoke, see?"

D. Glassman, a grocer of 520 Mary street, reported that two negroes entered his store during a period when he was alone, brandished revolvers and robbed him of $30.

D. H. Etheridge, driver for the Southern Baking Company, said that he was driving the company's electric truck on Connally street near Woodward avenue. The battery was nearly exhausted and the truck was proceeding at a very slow rate of speed. Two negroes yelled to him to stop, but he disregarded their command, whereupon the two sprang upon the driver's seat and robbed him of about $60 in collections.

J. D. Merritts, who operates a drug store at 232 Forrest avenue, reported that two negroes had entered his store with pistols and had robbed the cash register of an amount of money he declined to reveal.

Earl Davis, 267 Glenwood avenue, driver for the Sanitary Dry Cleaning Company, was robbed by a lone white man who wore a red bandanna handkerchief over his face. The man was described as being huge of proportion. Davis said he was surprised by the bandit as he was cranking his truck in front of 922 Fraser street.

Negro Loses $1.

Charlie McFarland, a negro messenger boy, of 951 Lena street, lost a dollar to a negro highwayman who waylaid him at Mayson-Turner avenue and Ashby circle.

Miss Lillian Browder, 683 Mayland avenue, N. E., reported that an unmasked young white man snatched her purse containing about $3 and some papers as she was walking near Stewart avenue and Brookline street.

A couple of negro thugs slugged J. W. Ward, 54, of 92 Ormond street, into unconsciousness near Fraser and Bass streets late Saturday night, robbing him of $10. Passersby found him lying on the sidewalk and escorted him to Grady hospital, where it was said his condition was not serious.

Luther Jackson, address unknown to police, proved a disappointment to two young white robbers in a Ford roadster who accosted him at Linden and Courtland streets late Saturday night. Jackson said he carried no money with him at the time and the bandits, after searching him fruitlessly, got into the car and drove away.

agreed to vote in favor of the general reduction.

"Salaries are going to be cut," Dr. Gilbert stated definitely Saturday. "Personally I have never voted for an increase in wages of any group of employes but the situation has just seemed to come about. Now it must be remedied. The county is deep in debt and the only way to get out is to raise the tax levy or reduce expenses. We do not want to hike the tax rate and our only alternative is to reduce expenses, a reduction which includes a cut in salaries."

Commissioner Gilbert said he believed the county's present poor financial condition was brought about chiefly through the big expenditures of 1928 for county road improvements and that though other current expenses were being met without any great difficulty the board has been unable to make up the ground lost two years ago.

"We are no worse nor no better off than we were two years ago," he said. "But we have not progressed and I am convinced that there will be no progress until a reduction in the present outlay is brought about."

Concerning the elimination of those who bolted the county ticket none of the commissioners would talk but it is known that various employes in widely scattered offices who gave lukewarm support to the Spratt-Griffin-Whitley ticket in the spring primary and who openly supported J. W. Simmons in his successful campaign for the post of a clerk of the superior court when he defeated James M. George, municipal court bailiff, who was the choice of the majority of the commission's membership are "prepared to walk the plank."

No Surprise Anticipated.

Just how their dismissals will be brought about has not been revealed, but from what can be gathered none will be surprised, for had the candidates they supported been successful they would be in a position to demand and obtain higher and better paying jobs.

How far the county commission can go in its general reduction of salaries is a question. Close observers expect that county office holders, now that the incumbents have been successful in defending their posts against two onsloughts of anti-administration forces within six months, are expected to ask that those in their employ be given credit for assistance given in the campaigns and not be asked to accept a cut. The members of the commission, it is said, feeling that they were successful in their campaigns because of the weakness of the opposing candidates, have assumed that the vote given their foes indicates it is the will of the electorate that a reduction in expenses be effected.

A great number of county employes have had their salaries fixed by law but the majority are set by the commission and it is this majority that will feel the heel of retrenchment when it falls the first of the new year.

Ship Aground.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—(AP)—As the Richfield oil tanker Tamiahua settled more firmly today on the sands and jagged rocks of Pescadero reef, which has held her fast 50 miles south of San Francisco since Thursday, hopes of her crew of 39 that the ship would be refloated were fading. The ship ran aground during a fog.

of his 1923 investigations, and his testimony on the witness stand last May at the trial of Harry H. Brown, better known as "Doc" Brown. Brown was tried for conspiracy to violate the national prohibition law, was found guilty, appealed his case to the United States circuit court of appeals, and died last Sunday while his case was pending.

The indictment alleges that Dodge testified he had never heard Brown was in the liquor business, whereas his written reports indicated he had known this; that Dodge testified he had never heard Brown was at the head of W. H. Haar's espionage system at a time when Haar was in the liquor business, whereas his reports were to the contrary; that he had testified that he agreed with Jim Woods, former Savannah police chief, to protect Brown, because he was using Brown to catch Willie Haar, and that he had testified they induced Brown to enter the liquor business with this in view, whereas he had known Brown to be at the head of the espionage system and at the time was in charge of Haar's liquor business.

Dodge was the star witness against a large number of liquor offenders in 1923 and also against what was then known as the "big four" in bootleg circles here. He was under cover man and worked up the cases. On the stand he proved a first-class witness, unruffled by cross-examination of defense attorneys and giving convincing testimony against the defendants. Upon this they were convicted.

At the hearing last May in the Brown case he was used as a witness for the defense. Prosecution of the Brown case was in the hands of Norman J. Harrison and John F. Coldiron, special assistants of the United States attorney general, with District Attorney Charles L. Redding assisting. It was after trial of the "big four" cases here that Dodge was connected with the George Remus case.

Community Chest Campaign Organized Among Negroes

There was never more enthusiasm manifest among colored people in connection with a Community Chest campaign than characterizes the activities of the campaign organization this year. According to the general chairman, J. W. Dobbs, so thoroughly is the organization being set up with a solicitation drag net that every negro citizen will be reached either at home, at church, at lodge meeting, at his place of business or on the job. It will be a disgrace, he says, for any colored person who is able to give not to have a red feather in his hat from November 12 to 27.

The slogan of the house-to-house canvass committee is "A Dollar From Every House and Every House Canvassed."

The following is a partial list of the chairmen of various committees and the workers in various subdivisions:

J. W. Dobbs, general chairman; Dr. H. R. Butler, chairman organization division; F. B. Washington, associate; Cyrus Campfield, chairman individual gifts division; J. M. Chiles, associate; Dr. J. W. Madison, chairman advance gifts committee; W. A. Bell, chairman speakers' bureau; H. S. Murphy and J. O. Thomas, publicity committee; C. W. Washington, executive secretary.

The subdivisions of the organization division are: Lodges, Dr. H. R. Butler; public schools, Agnes Jones; social clubs, A. W. Dent.

The entire city has been divided into four districts with a chairman for each: South Atlanta, L. J. Harper, chairman; fourth ward, Dr. Mark Thomas, chairman; west side, Dr. R. H. Carter, chairman, and Summerhill, A. O. Bomar. These men and women represent a complete cross section of the business, professional and industrial life of the colored people.

Wingait Shoes

With walking the Fashion

The fashion shoemaker presents a new walking shoe last . . . .

WINGAIT

"LET'S WALK"...

Everyone's saying it! Everyone's doing it! It's smart! it's swanky! It's the vogue that has brought about a new tailored mode—and with it, a sensational development in walking shoes — the Wingait last by I. Miller — a Cuban heel welt shoe last that is utterly amazing in its modish lines and extraordinary ease of action.

Is it a departure, you ask, for I. Miller to make a welt shoe? Not at all! As a matter of fact, it was with welt shoes that I. Miller originally established his reputation many years ago.

How natural, then, that I. Miller today of all shoemakers should evolve the exact type of walking shoe which women have longed for — which thousands of women have asked for. A shoe which would free them from the shackles of style-shy "orthopedics" and enable them to step out briskly, youthfully, in true I. Miller fashion — with swanky nonchalance. Now active feet can stride with pride, untiringly, throughout the entire day.

I. MILLER'S THREESOME OF WALKING SHOES

These three models cover every walking shoe need of the modern woman—a type for every foot.

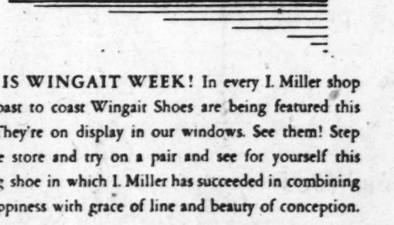

THE STRAP

The ideal slipper for the afternoon tailleur. Ultra-smart for spectator sports.

THE STEP-IN

THE OXFORD

Completing the picture I. Miller presents—

Hosiery and bags created expressly for the tailored mode and matching or complementing Wingait footwear.

THIS IS WINGAIT WEEK! In every I. Miller shop from coast to coast Wingait Shoes are being featured this week. They're on display in our windows. See them! Step into the store and try on a pair and see for yourself this amazing shoe in which I. Miller has succeeded in combining foot-happiness with grace of line and beauty of conception.

WHY WINGAIT SHOES? First, their extraordinary modishness for walking—modishness never before attained in a Cuban heel welt shoe. Secondly, Wingait lasts are "motion-measured" for the ever-changing dimensions of the foot in motion. Ample room in the ball and arch. Snugness at heel and instep. To walk in Wingaits is to tread on a pillowy cushion!

FIRST WIFE OF LEWIS WANTS MORE ALIMONY

Nobel Prize Winner May Have To Pay Woman $1,000 a Month.

RENO, Nev. Nov. 8.—(AP)—Upon the heels of an announcement that Sinclair Lewis had won the Nobel prize in literature with his novel, "Babbit," his former wife, Grace Heggler Lewis, today started proceeding before the Nevada supreme court in an effort to secure $1,000 a month alimony as originally provided in a Reno divorce decree.

When the divorce was granted to Mrs. Lewis April 16, 1928, on a charge of desertion, a settlement was made. It provided that Lewis establish a $50,000 trust fund for a 10-year-old son of the couple and that he pay Mrs. Lewis $1,000 a month so long as she did not remarry and his income did not fall below $48,000 a year.

Some time later, Lewis, who in the meantime had married Dorothy Thompson, author and lecturer, came to Reno and secured a modification of the agreement. The $1,000 a month payment was reduced to $200 a month with the further provision that at the end of each year he would pay the balance based upon one-fourth of his income for the preceding 12-month period.

M'DONALD DENIES SPLIT IN CABINET

LONDON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Prime Minister MacDonald officially put his foot down today on reports that the laborite cabinet was split over proposed unemployment remedies.

A statement issued from No. 10 Downing street referred to the reported attitude of three cabinet members toward suggestions in the recent liberal memorandum on unemployment and declared that the idea that the cabinet was divided on this issue was quite untrue.

VOTE ON AMENDMENTS SOUGHT BY CARSWELL

Nation's Business Leaders To Confer Here Next Week

JULIUS H. BARNES.

WILLIAM R. DAWES.

Mr. Barnes, chairman of the directorate of the United States Chamber of Commerce and one of the nation's foremost business men, and Mr. Dawes, Chicago banker and president of the Mississippi Valley Association, who will be here next week for the meeting of the chamber's directors.

Outstanding figures in the American business world, representatives of many commercial and civic organizations, will assemble in Atlanta during the week of November 16 to 22 for two important meetings—a traffic and aviation conference and the first southern meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Both meetings are being sponsored by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which is making extensive plans for entertaining the distinguished delegates and directors.

The first meeting, November 19 and 20, will be the southeastern states regional traffic and aviation conference, for the discussion of problems of street and highway traffic and legislation made necessary by the increase in air travel. It will be sponsored jointly by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America and the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety. This meeting will continue through two days, and all the sessions will be held at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel.

C. of C. Later.

Beginning Friday, November 21, the first southern meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States will be held at the Biltmore, continuing through Saturday morning. This will be attended by officers and directors of the national chamber from all over the country. The directors usually meet at the headquarters in Washington, but will hold this meeting in Atlanta largely in compliment to the two Atlanta citizens who are directors of the national chamber—William Candler and Francis E. Kamper.

While the two conferences are separate and distinct, it is expected that several of the national directors will arrive in time to attend the traffic and aviation conference.

Representatives of chambers of commerce, safety councils, counties, municipalities, aviation clubs and motor clubs from all over the southeast will attend the conference on traffic and aviation problems. Acceptances have been received from nine southeastern states.

Among the principal speakers will be George W. Elliott, general secretary of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, whose work as traffic commissioner did so much to relieve congestion in Philadelphia; Howard E. Coffin, of Sea Island Beach, and Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce in charge of aviation affairs. Colonel W. M. Wiley, vice president of the southeastern division of the United States Chamber of Commerce, will preside at the opening session.

Officers and directors of the United States chamber of commerce who have indicated that they will be present at the meeting in Atlanta:

Treasurer: John Joy Edson, chairman of the board, Washington Loan & Trust Company, Washington.

Directors: Harry C. Abell, vice president, New Orleans Public Service Inc., New Orleans; Chester I. Barnard, president, New Jersey Bell Telephone Company, Newark, N. J.; Asa G. Briggs, Briggs, Weyl & Briggs, attorneys, St. Paul; William Candler, president, Atlanta Biltmore Hotel Company; E. Asbury Davis, F. A. Davis & Sons, Baltimore; William R. Dawes, vice president, Central Trust Company of Illionis, Chicago; Lammot DuPont, president, E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company, Wilmington, Del.; Charles W. Gold, vice president, Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, Greensboro, N. C.; Henry I. Harriman, chairman of the board, England Power Association, Boston; George W. Holmes, president, First National Bank, Lincoln, Neb.; Francis E. Kamper, president, C. J. Kamper Grocery Company, Atlanta; Felix M. McWhirter, president, The Peoples State Bank, Indianapolis; Edward P. Peck, vice president, Omaha Elevator Company, Omaha; William Pfaff, Searcy & Pfaff, Ltd., New Orleans; A. W. Robertson, chairman of the board, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa.; Matthew S. Sloan, president, New York Edison Company, New York; Oscar Wells, chairman of the board; First National Bank, Birmingham; Junius P. Fishburn, president, Times World Corporation, Roanoke, Va.

Staff representatives: D. A. Skinner, secretary; A. B. Barber, manager, transportation and communication department; John M. Redpath, manager, research department; Ben H. Lambe, promotion; H. H. Ramsdall, secretary to board of directors.

LET REPUBLICANS RUN IT--BANKHEAD

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Senator-elect John H. Bankhead, who defeated Senator Heflin in the Alabama election, said here today that he would oppose organization of either the senate or house by the democrats even if the official results of the national elections should give the democrats a majority.

He came here today to witness a trial cruise of a ship to be placed in the gulf coast trade with Mobile its home port.

"I do not want the democrats to have anything to do with the Hoover administration," he said. "Let the republicans organize and run things as they want until they get out of office and then the democrats will take the situation over.

"I do not want the republicans to be placed in a position where they can alibi their shortcomings on any member of the democratic party. I am glad they will have both the house and senate. The gigantic vote which the democratic party piled up throughout the nation last Tuesday is a rebuke to Hoover and the entire republican party."

ARMY SERVICE CUT PROPOSAL LOSES

GENEVA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The preparatory commission on disarmament today rejected by 12 votes to 6 a German attempt to incorporate the principle of limitation of the annual contingent of conscripts called to service into the projected draft disarmament treaty.

American and British representatives on the preparatory commission abstained from voting. Germany, China, Russia, Norway, Sweden and Holland supported the proposed limitation. France, Italy, Japan and other nations which rely upon compulsory military service joining in defeating the German move.

With the German proposal out of the way the commission voted its approval to the principle of limitation of the period of service for conscripts, put into motion form by Lord Cecil, of Great Britain.

VACANT OFFICE SPACE HIGHEST IN 7 YEARS

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The National Association of Building Owners and Managers reported today that the amount of vacant office space in the nation was the largest of the last seven years.

In a total area of 166,998,875 square feet there was a vacancy of 2,236,040 feet, or 13.92 per cent. The survey covered 1,960 office buildings in 43 principal cities of the United States and Canada. The vacant space, the report said, represents more than the total office space in the cities of Cleveland, Philadelphia and Los Angeles combined.

The association added that 11,054,562 square feet of office space are reported under construction, of which 1,147,269 will be available for occupancy by January 1, 1931.

Negro Is Held.

On a charge of forging indorsement of 25 government compensation checks mailed to a woman who died two years ago, Johnnie Beasley, alias Mable Smith, negro, Saturday was held under $2,000 bond for federal authorities at Knoxville, Tenn., by United States Commissioner E. S. Griffith.

RECORDS SEARCHED FOR CARLING DATA

City Attorney James L. Mayson Saturday still was attempting to ascertain whether the Carling Hotel, Inc., was ever incorporated under Florida laws, in an effort to force that company to accept the 65-year lease contract it holds on the old city hall site, for which Atlanta borough was to get $3,550,000.

He declared Saturday that the search of the court records is in progress and that pending the outcome of the investigation he will take no further steps.

Parade Broken Up.

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A parade of several hundred unemployed in defiance of police orders was broken up with the arrest of eight leaders of the crowd. Ranks of police blocked the route of the parade and a general melee ensued.

Diversified Farm Aid Plan Is Revealed by Bank Group

Association To Merge Efforts With State C. of C. To Assist Agricultural Spread.

Plans of a farm program in as many counties in Georgia as possible, urged vigorously by the agricultural committee of the Georgia Bankers' Association, co-operating with the Georgia State Chamber of Commerce were revealed Saturday night in a radio address over station WGST by Walter N. Harrison, of Lavonia, chairman of the agricultural committee of the Georgia Bankers' Association. The broadcast was the first of a series, one of which will be given every Saturday night under the auspices of the Georgia State Chamber of Commerce.

"It is with a great pleasure," said Mr. Harrison, "that we join hands with Wiley Moore, president of the Georgia State Chamber of Commerce, in spreading the gospel for the concerted movement looking toward a more prosperous Georgia. When his dreams come true, Georgia will not only have more prosperous farms and more prosperous farmers, but also a great winter tourist business.

"Our plans for the immediate future call for the adoption of a farm program in as many counties in Georgia as possible. Our attention has been called to the counties of Taylor, Dooley and Bulloch, which have already adopted their farm programs. It is our hope that every county in Georgia will follow the lead of these progressive counties and adopt farm programs. A meeting attended by farmers, bankers, merchants, vocational teachers and county agents should be held at the earliest moment with the view of adopting a balanced farm program suitable for the peculiar type of farming of each county in which these meetings are held.

1,500,000 to Feed.

"The average Georgia farmer does not feed himself, much less contribute his share toward feeding the almost 1,500,000 population who cannot live on the farm. Many of our eggs, most of our flour, a great deal of our feed and a lot of other things we eat are brought in from far away states. This not only takes money away from us, but increases their cost. You cannot haul things for nothing.

"It is estimated that $75,000,000 is sent out of the state every year to buy feed and foodstuffs which could and should be raised at home. Think what this revolving fund of $75,000,000 would do for the state. It would keep at home $25 for every man, woman, and child in the state. In the mean time many of our farms lie idle and non-productive.

Diversity Is Independence.

"Diversify and be independent is a slogan which I would like to see every farmer in Georgia adopt. There is nothing particularly new about the plan. There is nothing mysterious about it. It is just simply applying common sense methods to a condition that has existed for a long time and about which we have talked a lot. Let's do the thing now that we have talked about so long."

"On next Tuesday, Armistice Day, an all-day meeting will be held at Cochran, Ga., for the purpose of promoting better agriculture in Bleckley and adjoining counties. We commend these efforts and wish that similar demonstrations could be held in every agricultural county in Georgia. The Moultrie demonstration showed what has been done in Colquitt county. What has been done in Colquitt county can be done in almost every other agricultural county in the state. The incentive for such revivals in agricultural activity must come from the leaders of the towns and cities of our state. The responsibility is ours and cannot be evaded or shifted to the shoulders of others. Whatever your calling may be you have equal responsibility in helping place Georgia where she rightly belongs as an agricultural state. Results cannot be obtained within a short period of time. Our farms must be built up to greater production. I want to make this personal appeal to all bankers and other business men in Georgia to join hands with this movement for more food and feed crops on a live-at-home program for the next three years. If Georgia is not placed on a more solid agricultural basis at the expiration of that time I will join with you in your leadership on whatever program you have adopted."

BAPTIST MEETING TO OPEN MONDAY

Preceded by a musicale to be presented Monday night, the 60th annual session of the General Missionary Baptist convention of Georgia will assemble at the Mount Olive Baptist church Tuesday morning for its four-day session with devotional exercises to be conducted by several leading pastors of the denomination from numerous sections of Georgia. Sessions will be held during forenoons, afternoons and evenings each day except Friday, when the night meeting will be dispensed with.

The high spot of the convention will be the moderator's conference, to be held Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time many matters of interest and importance to the convention will come up for discussion. Most of the actual business of the assemblage will be conducted during Thursday's three sessions, with reports of various executives and election of officers for the ensuing year also slated for that day.

Tuesday morning's session will consist of devotions to be conducted by Rev. J. H. Edwards, Savannah; Rev. S. T. Flagg, Sylvester; A. J. Majors, Ellaville, and E. W. Person, Newnan. Memorial exercises will follow under the leadership of the Revs. G. W. Harrison, Augusta; R. G. Cash, Madison; B. S. Parks, Toomsboro, and J. C. Adams, Dublin. Rev. E. G. Thomas, of Macon, will deliver the conventional sermon.

Tuesday afternoon will be devoted to board meetings and a continuance of devotional services.

HARDY TO EXPLAIN FIREMAN STATUS

Mayor I. N. Ragsdale and former Councilman Jack C. Hardy, whose election as a member of the Atlanta fire department while he was under indictment, drew the fire of the mayor Saturday were closeted in a conference.

Neither the mayor nor Mr. Hardy would discuss the matter, but the latter promised a statement to the public within the next few days.

It was said that Mr. Hardy will not serve in the new post until after the disposition of his case, which is set for November 19 on the Fulton county superior court calendar.

HOOVER LAMENTS INDUSTRY WASTE

Points Out Heavy Toll of Conflict in Speech to Heinz Workers.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—President Hoover said tonight industrial conflict was the greatest waste in industry.

Speaking from the White House, he addressed over international radio hook-ups the employes of the H. J. Heinz Company, of Pittsburgh, assembled at banquets in six nations of the globe—the United States, Canada, England, Spain, South Africa and Australia. Howard Heinz, president of the company, is an old friend of the president.

"Wars between nations, wars between groups within nations, industrial conflicts, all end in what appears to be victory for one of the contenders, but the real victory arrives only after the battle has been forgotten and when the human nature of both sides meets in cheerful agreement upon a common solution," Mr. Hoover said.

"Industrial conflict is the greatest waste in industry. It not only delays production and diminishes it, but its most hurtful results are inflicted upon the lives and spirits of men and women. We can measure its productive losses in unmade goods and unearned dollars, but incalculable is its needless toll of suffering."

Text of Address.

The chief executive's address follows:

"It is a pleasure to participate for a few moments in this tribute to Mr. Heinz from his employes throughout the world. His association with me in service during the war and many times since when I have summoned him from his business to undertake public service gives me a right to be in spirit amongst those who join in this occasion.

"It is also a satisfaction to engage for a moment in the anniversary of the establishment which has a record of over 60 years of continuous industrial peace. This long history is proof that there is common ground of mutual interest and humane relations between employer and employe, for this concern could not have weathered all these years of shifting currents in good times and bad times had it been otherwise.

"And year by year do we realize more of our responsibilities in the human relations within industry. Mechanization is so distinctive of our modern civilization that even as a mechanical conception we often tend to forget that the most wonderful and powerful machine in the world is the men and women themselves. It is the human being from which achievement is won far more than the tool.

"However astonishing may be the increase in usefulness of machines as they grow in size and ingenuity, their improvement is little as compared with the enlarged effectiveness of organized intelligence and co-operation when men pool their efforts to achieve a common end. Man's conquest of machines is less spectacular than his conquest of his own will.

Vital to Mankind.

"To build up and preserve unbroken a co-operative spirit between a great group of employers and employes for two long generations is a cheering proof of the possibilities of human nature. The secret of it is more important to mankind than any secret of trade, or any new invention.

"Fortunately there is nothing mysterious about it, nothing patentable or exclusive, nothing that is not free to be used by all. The key to it is as old as the religions we profess. Its origins and its power lie in generations of education and scientific research, in the benignant forces of mutual good will, the spirit of mutual helpfulness, the virtues of patience and toleration and understanding. This spirit of accommodation has won all of the ultimate victories in history. Wars between nations, wars between groups within nations, industrial conflicts, all end in what appears to be victory for one of the contenders, but the real victory arrives only after the battle has been forgotten and when the human nature of both sides meets in cheerful agreement upon a common solution.

"Industrial conflict is the greatest waste in industry. It not only delays production and diminishes it, but its most hurtful results are inflicted upon the lives and spirits of men and women. We can measure its productive losses in unmade goods and unearned dollars but incalculable is its needless toll of suffering.

Higher Purpose Needed.

"Moreover, the purpose of industry is only in part to create objects, articles and services which satisfy physical needs. This is an essential function; but the higher purpose of industry is to provide satisfactions of life to human beings not alone in its products but in the work of production itself. Unless industry makes living men and women and children happier in their work, unless it gives opportunity and creative satisfactions in the job itself, it can not excuse its failure by pleading that at least it has kept them alive. Man learned the art of staying alive long before he learned the art of mechanics. The machine must build him a better life, not alone in time of leisure but in joy of work, than he knew before. I have every faith that in the broad view it is doing so, not only in its products and relief from sweat, but that it increasingly enlarges man's satisfactions in his toil.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the part that you have all played in the task of subordinating the mechanism of industry to the well-being of the men and women who operate it. This experience may not be universal. If it were, the world would be wealthier in spirit by the incalculable enrichments of human happiness."

CuredHis Rupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 357-D Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.—(adv.)

HE SUFFERED FOR YEARS WITH PILES

Bleeding Kind Was So Painful He Slept on a Pillow.

TELLS HOW FINALLY HE OVERCAME PILES

"It was no cinch for me to overcome my pile trouble because I suffered more or less that way for twenty-five years, but in si... eeks' time I was rid of piles and feeling like a new man and thinking it simply wonderful. I am writing to let the whole world know," declares Hugo Miller, a prominent paperhanger of Abbotsford, Wisconsin.

"My piles were the bleeding kind. Pains in the bowels almost doubled me up sometimes and the pain was so bad that I couldn't lay in bed comfortably, so I slept with a pillow under me. Of course I already had tried a number of remedies for piles through the years but they did no good until a ...ple months ago I ran across these wonderful Colac Pile Pills. The first couple bottles began to show results. The pain got less and then stopped. I kept on taking them for a full six weeks and it was marvelous the way they worked. I recommend Colac Pile Pills to everybody now," continued Mr. Miller.

Until the perfection of these pills which you swallow with a little water at meal times, about the only remedies known for pile were a surgical operation, salves or suppositories. Now nobody need suffer any longer. They are guaranteed to completely relieve you of every sign of piles or money back without quibble or question. At drug stores or by return mail on receipt of 75c in stamps or coins. Colac Chemical Co., Brentwood, Md.—(adv.)

Fox Theater Cast Officially "Weighs In" For Fact-Finding, Candy-Eating Test

As one of the features of Candy Week observance in Atlanta, girls appearing this week in Fanchon and Marco's "Box o' Candy" idea at the Fox theater are engaged in a candy eating test to show what effect it has on their weight. The test covers a period of 36 weeks, with the girls being weighed by the city inspectors in each of the places they are billed. They are shown here being weighed Saturday morning at the city hall by Richmond Paul, inspector of weights and measures for Atlanta.

Does candy cause a person to get fat?

These two widely-discussed questions will be called to the attention of Atlantans forcibly this week.

Candy week will be observed here under the auspices of the Atlanta Confectioners' Association, as members of the National Confectioners' Association.

Brooks Morgan, of the Block Candy Company, is chairman of arrangements for the observance of the week. Co-operating in the event are the following manufacturers and distributors:

Nunnally, Norris, Inc., Harry L. Schlesinger, Johnson-Fluker Company, Crown Candy Company, Sophie Mae Candy Corporation, Brower Candy Company, Helfrich Candy Company, Consolidated Candy Company, Willis-Pause Company, Capital City Tobacco Company, J. N. Hirsch, Tenenbaum Brothers, Sugarman & Hirsch Company, and Cohen Brothers.

One of the outstanding features of the week will be a candy eating test arranged through the Nunnally Candy Company and the Fox theater. The girls appearing there this week in Fanchon and Marco's "Box o' Candy" idea are eating all the candy they want to see if it makes any difference in their weights.

The girls were weighed Saturday by Richmond Paul, inspector of weights and measures, at the city hall. They were also given a box of Nunnally's candy which will have a prominent part in their diet during their appearance in Atlanta.

The dietary experiment extends over 36 weeks, and at the close of the period the results will be announced. Next week the show plays in Louisville, Ky., and the same procedure will be followed in that city as well as the other places where the act is billed.

The diet, scientifically worked out by experts, is not, however, designed to cause the members of the cast to lose weight. For fashion and public favor have decreed that the half-starved figure dieted into unnatural slimness by the elimination of energy foods, is being supplanted by the graceful feminine curves compatible with good health.

Fanchon Wolf, dancer, and noted trainer of stage and movie celebrities, is responsible for this experiment. Long convinced that the bed-slat figure, decreed by artists and denounced by medical authorities, is neither beautiful nor a healthy condition, she is now casting only girls whose figures meet the call for pleasing curves and contours.

The semi-starvation meals consisting of a few crackers and an unsweetened drink, will have no place on the menus of the cast of "Box o' Candy" idea. Health building, nergy-producing foods, all the proteins, fats, carbohydrates, sugars, as well as the minerals and vitamins will have a proper place in the diet in scientific proportions.

An unusual feature of the test will be the introduction of candy both between meals and as desserts. Tests under medical authorities have proved that candy is quick energy-building, easily digested food, particularly adapted to the needs of the dancers.

The weekly recordings of the weight and measurements of the cast will be available in all cities where the act is booked. And with Hollywood sponsoring a new ideal figure with willow curves, the unhealthy craze for birdlike diets is likely to pass out of the American scene.

Mayor Ragsdale has issued a proclamation suggesting that Atlantans co-operate in observing the week and has granted those interested in the industry here permission to hold a parade Monday morning at 10:30. The parade will start from the Fox theater, going in Peachtree street to Whitehall, to Mitchell and thence to the city hall.

a band concert starting at 2 o'clock under the direction of Warrant Officer Barbara of the 122d infantry. A silent drill by Company C, Captain Joe Spencer, commanding, will follow, after which will come the regimental parade and military review, with Governor-elect Russell, Mayor-elect James L. Key and other high state and city officials in the reviewing stands.

Reception Committee Named.

In anticipation of unusual attendance, a number of well-known Atlantans has been named to serve as a reception committee. It consists of Frank Kempton, B. P. Gambrell, John M. Slaton, Jr., "Scrappy" O'Sullican, James L. Harrison, Robert B. Troutman, James Bankston, W. A. Sirman, Arthur Duggan, Colonel F. S. L. Price, J. Henson Tatum, George W. West, John L. Westmoreland, Franklin S. Chalmers, Lauren Foreman and Dr. J. D. Cromer.

Immediately following the military program before the reviewing stands, a battalion of the 122d regiment, accompanied by the regimental band, will attend and take part in funeral services for Colonel J. O. Seamans, who died late Friday.

The full dress regimental review of the national guard regiment will mark its first presentation, according to Colonel G. P. O'Keefe, regimental commander. "We have wanted for a long time to give our friends in Atlanta an opportunity to see the regiment in full dress regalia and on a parade and review," he said, "and this will be the first time our organization has ever attempted a turnout of this kind. We feel certain that those who attend this afternoon will witness a most impressive and interesting program."

Tuesday Proclaimed Holiday.

Governor Hardman officially has proclaimed Tuesday as a legal holiday throughout Georgia and has ordered that the United States flag be displayed on the capitol, which will be closed during the day. Churches today will feature special sermons on peace of the world, and Tuesday prayers will be offered for the men who lost their lives in the war.

Mayor Ragsdale, in his proclamation designating Tuesday as Poppy Day and a holiday for the municipality, urges that every citizen stop work at 11 o'clock that morning in a silent supplication for peace and harmony. At about the same time the parade of the Atlanta post of the American Legion, which will march from Peachtree and Baker streets, will have reached Five Points, where the Legionnaires will present a flag to the city through Mayor Ragsdale, who will receive it.

At Decatur Armistice Day exercises will be held at the memorial gateway on the north lawn of the DeKalb county courthouse, beginning at 10:45 o'clock, under the auspices of the American Legion, the Service Star Legion and the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Mayor Scott Candler, of Decatur, will present nine military crosses to veterans of the World War who are descendants of Civil War veterans.

Congressman Ramspeck will deliver an address on behalf of Decatur in receiving the naval gun presented by the naval ordnance department and which is stationed on the courthouse lawn. Music will be furnished by the Veterans' Fife and Drum Corps. At 11 o'clock a silent prayer of one minute's duration will be offered.

Joint Luncheon Planned.

The Atlanta Kiwanis Club and the local post of the Legion will gather at a joint armistice luncheon at 12:30 o'clock, meeting on the roof of the Ansley hotel. William A. Simon, adjutant of the department of Georgia, will be the principal speaker. Miss Minna Hecker will sing a group of songs, and will be accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Paul Bryan, while Miss Maxine Land, well-known elocutionist, will read McRae's "Flanders' Fields."

Armistice Day likewise will see the launching by the local post of the Legion of its "annual peace-time offensive" in a big drive for increased membership. Its goal has been announced as "the largest membership ever obtained in the history of Atlanta Post No. 1, with a minimum figure of 2,500 members." Robert B. Troutman has been named chairman of the campaign.

American Legion Woman's Auxiliary of the department of Georgia will take the initiative in making the day recognizable as "Poppy Day" when scores of young woman will canvass downtown sections in a sale of artificial poppies, the proceeds of which will go to uncompensated and incapacited veterans of the European War, who made the mementoes with their own hands. Mrs. Gordon G. Singleton is chairman of the local poppy drive.

A special radio program has been announced by the local Legion post, which will go on the air over WSB at 8 o'clock and continue until 8:30 Tuesday night, with musical entertainment supplied by Edmund Kneisel and his Marita Melody orchestra.

FT. BENNING PRIVATE KILLED IN WRECK

COLUMBUS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Private Tedd Cloud, 24, of the 29th infantry, was killed and Private Rufus F. Saulters, of the same organization, was injured when their automobile skidded and turned over in a ditch tonight on the Fort Benning reservation. Cloud was the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Cloud, of Stevenson, Alabama.

Small Delicatessen Found on Shoplifter

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—(AP)—When Detectives James Adamson and Michael McGregory arrested Alvin Dulf as a shoplifting suspect, they were a little disappointed to discover he didn't have a bottle of mustard on his person. He had, however, everything else that goes with a traveling lunch counter.

From Alvin's pockets the detectives extracted 10 pounds of assorted cheese—including limberger—several tins of canned goods, including shrimp, and a supply of bacon. Nestling in one pocket was a round of liverwurst. In another a line of frankfurters, and others yielded assorted groceries.

"Aw, that's the boloney," said Alvin. And sure enough it was.

9,349 MILES ADDED FEDERAL-AID ROADS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A total of 9,349 miles was reported today by the bureau of public roads to have been added to federal-aid highways in the continental United States and Hawaii during the fiscal year 1930.

In addition, at the end of the year, 9,915 miles of road were in process of improvement and 3,469 additional miles were approved for construction.

Government disbursements during the year on all active road and bridge projects aggregated $57,880,963, a decrease of $6,200,000, under the total for 1929.

W. L. M'PHERSON, JOURNALIST, DIES

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—William L. McPherson, author, editor and member of the staff of The New York Herald and The Herald Tribune for 43 years, died suddenly today of heart failure induced by ptomaine poisoning. He was 65.

He was born in Gettysburg, Pa., the son of Edward McPherson, a journalist and a member of Lincoln's war congress.

Mr. McPherson's better known books are "Tales of Wartime France," "The Strategy of the Great War" and "A Short History of the Great War."

WOODRING LEADS HAUCKE IN KANSAS

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Semi-official returns from every county in Kansas late today gave Harry H. Woodring, democrat, a lead of 879 votes over Frank Haucke, republican, in the election contest for governor of Kansas. The count: Haucke 215,313; Woodring 216,192.

In most counties the absentee vote is yet to be added. There are about 2,500 absentee votes, which are to be counted next Tuesday.

MISSIONARY AND BABE DIE IN AUTO WRECK

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Officials of the Inland South American Missionary Union announced tonight that Arthur Tylee, their representative at Juruena, Brazil, and his two-year-old daughter had been killed in an automobile accident near there.

METHODIST COLLEGE MERGER GIVEN OKEY

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Consolidation of two more Methodist colleges in Arkansas under a unification plan in which two were merged two years ago, has been approved by one Arkansas conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and awaits only approval of the other conference to be carried out.

The new merger plan, ratified by unanimous vote of the North Arkansas conference at Helena this week, would bring together Hendrix-Henderson College at Conway and Galloway Woman's College at Searcy, the last two Methodist colleges remaining in the state.

The Little Rock conference meets at Pine Bluff next week, and will pass upon the plan recommended by a church committee composed of members of both conferences.

DO-X AGAIN DELAYS START FOR ENGLAND

AMSTERDAM, Holland, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A stiff westerly wind prevented the DO-X, German 12-motored seaplane, from taking off today for Calshot, Eng., next stop on its projected trans-Atlantic flight to New York.

The plane probably will start tomorrow.

HOOVER TO ASK AID FOR JOBLESS

Will Seek Emergency Appropriations for Construction and Seed Loan.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—President Hoover plans to ask congress for emergency appropriations to furnish employment and assist drouth sufferers.

The one will go toward speeding up the government's building program, and the other will take the form of a seed loan.

A statement outlining the plan came from the White House late today after the war department and his emergency employment committee had separately made known further phases of their own relief programs.

The statement follows:

"The president announced today that the administration had decided to recommend to congress a special emergency appropriation to be applied to the further intensification of public works, public buildings and other forms of federal construction which are already authorized by congress but for which no appropriations would normally be made until later periods; and further to recommend the provision of a 'seed loan' assistant to farmers in the drouth area.

"It will be remembered that the appropriations for federal construction were greatly increased upon the president's recommendation by the last congress as aid to employment during the current year. The departments were also authorized to undertake the necessary technical preparations for future construction work which was authorized but not appropriated for.

"As a result of appropriations available during the present fiscal year the construction work of all kinds in the federal government will be increased to a total exceeding $500,000,000. The emergency appropriations that will be requested will be in the nature of an addition to this already enlarged program and will be in anticipation of such construction work as would normally have taken place a year or two hence.

"The necessary technical preparation has been under way for some months and has now been advanced so that the program can be further expanded for emergency purposes. The precise amount for the emergency appropriation has not yet been decided upon but will be determined on a basis of authorized works for which the preliminary technical preparation has been or can be completed. The whole purpose is to provide further employment during the forthcoming year upon work of ultimate necessity."

Earlier in the day Secretary Hurley had agreed to place all available army cots and blankets at the disposal of agencies dealing with acute needs. Meanwhile, the emergency committee was pegging away at its task of stimulating decentralized campaigns to make more work obtainable.

LONDON NERVOUS AS THAMES RISES

LONDON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The sluggish Thames, swollen by persistent rains, threatened the low-lying sections of London tonight; the Seine, overflowing her banks, was causing concern in Paris; the River Oder was higher at Frankfort than at any time since 1854, and throughout central Europe the authorities were vigilant to prevent loss of life and property by menacing floods.

Not since the winter of 1929, when melting snows sent flood waters pouring through France, Germany, Belgium and the Balkans, has the danger appeared so real as now, in the wake of the terrific gales which swept England and the continent last week.

At the high tide today the Thames rose to its highest level since the disastrous floods of 1928 and at Putney and Rotherhite the river overflowed. Basement dwellers were warned to be ready to evacuate quickly, but no serious damage was reported at any point. The next high tide will come tomorrow afternoon.

In Paris the newspapers published pictures of flooded quays and warned that should the rains continue for a few days the situation might become critical.

Police and firemen were installing powerful pumping apparatus at points where the Seine was within six inches of flood. The rain continued as they worked.

Precautions have been taken at Frankfort, where the danger of a flood first became apparent several days ago.

Meantime meteorological stations reported a great low pressure area extending from the Azroes to the Bay of Biscay, with prospects for a rough week-end in the channel.

The weather report held the German seaplane DO-X at Amsterdam, delaying her flight to Calshot on the second stage of a flight to New York via Lisbon, the Azores and Bermuda.

WARNOCK PLEADS GUILTY, FINED $250

automatically removed from the docket Saturday afternoon when Dr. Warnock entered his plea of guilty. In addition, the case of Councilman W. Paul Carpenter, accused of bribery, also is on Tuesday's docket and will be called if the Wilkins case is concluded Monday night.

Four other cases also are docketed for Tuesday, they being against former Alderman Claude E. Buchanan, J. E. (Red) Robinson, former employe of the city construction department; R. C. Turner, former city electrician, and Sam Donelson, an electrical contractor. Buchanan is accused of bribery, while Robinson is charged with simple larceny. Turner and Donelson face a joint indictment charging embezzlement of funds. The latter two were indicted about 18 months ago, some months before the start of the general graft inquiry.

On Wednesday the cases of Deputy Sheriff Frank Calloway, a former councilman; Alderman J. Allen Couch, mayor pro tem., and J. R. Leach, former municipal employe, are docketed, while on Thursday the case of L. L. Wallis, ex-superintendent of the park system, is to be called.

The cases of former Councilman J. T. Osburn and former Alderman Oscar H. Williamson, which also were docketed for trial this week, have been postponed until November 20.

Attending the annual conference of the Fifth District High Schools Association, the group above, representing directing and supervisory executives of district secondary education, took an active part in proceedings Saturday at the Henry Grady hotel, where the educators assembled. Seated (left to right) are W. L. Davis, state high school superintendent; M. C. Bishop, president of the association, and Dr. J. S. Stewart, president of the Georgia High School Association. Standing (left to right) are W. G. Dendy, vice president of the association; O. L. Amsler, in charge of football; M. E. Smith, vice president and baseball director; P. H. Thirty Superintendents, Supervisors and Teachers Hold Business Session and Then Attend Football Game.

Brief talks on matters pertaining to administration, maintenance and curricula of high schools featured the annual conference of the Fifth District High Schools' Association held Saturday morning at the Henry Grady hotel, during which eight of the approximately 30 superintendents, supervisors and teachers of various schools in this area spoke. Following the business session, the educators gathered at luncheon in the ballroom of the hotel, and in the afternoon attended the Tech-Vandy football game.

Among the speakers were Jere A. Wells, superintendent of Fulton county schools; Dr. J. S. Stewart, president of the Georgia High School Association; P. H. Dagneau, executive secretary of the district association; Miss Jessie Muse, principal of Girls' High, of Atlanta, and W. L. Downs, state high school supervisor.

The session was presided over by M. C. Bishop, president of the association. Topics discussed in 15-minute talks included those of school and community co-operation; buildings, grounds and equipment; school records; organization and administration; an adequate curricula for secondary institutions; an outline of how high school superintendents may improve the quality of instruction in their jurisdictions, and a discussion of the essentials of an effective high school system.

Three Arrested.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Three men, said by police to be from Chicago, were arrested in an exclusive uptown apartment here today and were held under charges of being suspicious characters pending an investigation. Chief of Police Reyer wired Chicago authorities to determine whether the men were wanted there. They gave the names of Abe Miller, Morris Reed and Albert Hain.

Cloudy, Warmer Weather Seen For City Today

Accompanied by slowly rising temperatures, cloudy weather conditions will begin to set in today, with the possibility of rain seen for Monday or Tuesday, C. F. von Herrmann, United States meteorologist, said Saturday.

Rain is expected in some portions of south Georgia today, but none here, the weatherman said. The change to cloudy weather will be caused by conditions over the gulf and Texas, he added. Temperatures today are expected to range between 40 and 65 degrees. Saturday's minimum was 34 degrees.

AMELIA EARHART REPORTED MARRIED

NOANK, Conn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Mrs. George Haven Putnam tonight declined to comment on reports that her son, George Putnam, and Miss Amelia Earhart, aviatrix, were married tonight at her summer home here. The couple arrived here earlier in the day.

Judge Arthur P. Anderson, of the probate court of Groton, who earlier had announced in this case he had waived the five-day law regarding marriage licenses, and said he expected to be called later to unite the couple, said late tonight his services had not been requested. The Groton town clerk declined to confirm or deny that he had issued a marriage license.

GEORGIA CHEMISTS TO HEAR M'PHERSON

Dr. William McPherson, professor of chemistry and dean of the graduate school of Ohio State University, will address the Georgia section of the American Chemical Society here Friday, November 28, it was announced Saturday.

Dr. McPherson, who is president of the national society, attended the meeting of the Georgia branch last April, and made many friends in Atlanta. He holds degrees from the University of Chicago and from Wittenberg, and has been for 20 years head of the department of chemistry at the Ohio university.

Women Donate Grave For Unknown Suicide

Interment services for the unknown man whose body was found on the afternoon of November 1 hanging from a rafter in an abandoned shack in Campbell county, will be held at 3 o'clock this afternoon in Kite's cemetery. Burial will take place on the lot of Mrs. J. P. Otwell, who donated the space for the grave, and assisted Mrs. L. H. Inman in soliciting funds from the public with which to defray expenses of burial.

The body was found by Floyd and Clarence Johnson, brothers, who were hunting in the vicinity of the abandoned house. Condition of the body indicated that the man had been dead two or three days. All marks of identification had been removed from the clothing. A coroner's jury, investigating the death, returned a verdict of suicide.

AUSTRIAN VOTERS GO TO POLLS TODAY

VIENNA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Fourteen political parties seeking representation in the Austrian national assembly tonight wound up five weeks of the fiercest election campaigning ever recorded in Austria. The elections will be held tomorrow.

GIRL, 17, TREATED FOR POISON DOSE

Found lying unconscious early Saturday night on a street in Hapeville, Miss Agnes Nation, 17-year-old daughter of Mrs. L. W. Nation, of 3273 Sims street, Hapeville, was revived in the office of a private physician and taken to Grady hospital for treatment.

Miss Nation told nurses that she had swallowed the contents of a small bottle of iodine in Atlanta, just before she boarded a Hapeville street car, and had collapsed while walking towards her home. She is employed by a local overall manufacturing company, she said. Her condition was still undetermined late Saturday night.

"I Was an Ignorant Slave" and didn't realize it---

A HUMBLE CONFESSION BY MARSHALL MASLIN— NOTED WRITER

I swore I'd never own a radio.

I sneered at people who did. I grunted when they talked about all the enjoyment they got out of their radio. I told them things. I said there were so many other things to be done in the world that it was nonsense for any halfway intelligent human being to spend even the smallest part of his time in front of a radio.

Life was more interesting than any radio. Reading a book was more interesting. Actually getting out and going to a concert was more interesting than listening to a thin, reedy broadcast of a concert. A radio was second-hand amusement. I told them a lot of other things, too. . . . In fact, I think I made it quite clear to all my friends that I didn't want a radio—and didn't have any more use for one than I have for a machine gun—and that I'd never have one of the things in the house.

And then, somehow, I got a radio. I was sort of led into it. I didn't mean to get it, but I did. It came in the front door and sat down in a corner, where the phonograph used to be—the phonograph is sulking in another room now—and conquered me. Made me realize all that I've been missing—Life itself.

I'd thought I was free from the need of a radio. It taught me I wasn't free at all, but chained to the past. I was an ignorant slave.

I thought I had enough—the radio showed me how little I had.

I thought I was modern. I wasn't.

I thought I was living in the twentieth century. I wasn't; I was living in the dull nineties.

Suddenly I discovered, through the radio, that a human being cannot reject any part of life without losing by it. Trash, nonsense, pomposity, triviality, commonplace absurdity—all these come through the air and into your room with that radio. But truth, strength, laughter, tears, melody, inspiration, splendor and beauty come, too. A twist of the wrist—and the trash is silenced. Another twist—and your home is filled with glory. The challenge is there and the human spirit must meet that challenge. It must have strength enough to reject what it does not need and claim with joy the food it hungers for and cannot live without.

So I apologize. I apologize to all the comedians and "nuts" and entertainers of the air.

I apologize to Will Rogers and Amos 'n' Andy and Schumann-Heink and Floyd Gibbons and also to Rudy Vallee.

I apologize to preachers and lecturers and football announcers.

I apologize to fiddlers and pianists and pipe organists and splendid symphony orchestras—and particularly to all the great composers of the past, to Bach and Haydn, Handel and Beethoven. . . . And I apologize, more profoundly still, to the spirit of life more abundant, whose offerings I rejected.

I used to say I'd never own a radio. What an idiot I was!

"Where Good Furniture Is Not Expensive"

Government Will Publish Southern Crop Bulletins

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Daily installments of an agricultural outlook report for the southern states will be issued at Atlanta beginning Monday and continuing through Thursday by the bureau of agricultural economics of the United States department of Agriculture in co-operation with the research and extension representatives of the state agricultural colleges from 12 southern states, it was announced here today.

This report is designed to aid southern farmers in adjusting their business to economic conditions and in improving their income by better adjustment of production to market conditions. It is the first time that a general outlook report has been issued outside of Washington or before the first of the year. The bureau will issue this report at this time as a basis for economic extension work throughout the southern states well in advance of next year's production activities in the south.

Many Ramifications

The report will include an up-to-date summary of the facts of both the long-time and present outlook for southern agriculture, of the demand for southern products, of credit conditions and of the market situation with respect to more than a dozen crops and classes of livestock produced in the southern states, according to officials.

Information compiled by the bureau of agricultural economics and by the economists of the several states will be assembled and prepared in summary form by committees of economists, extension workers and commodity specialists, representing all of co-operating agencies, which include the agricultural colleges and extension services of 12 southern states, the federal department of agriculture, the federal farm board and other government agencies.

Immediate release of the outlook information at the end of each of the daily general sessions of the conferences has been arranged so that the public may have the results of the committee work promptly as each item is completed. The bureau of agricultural economics has assembled a comprehensive survey of the facts on the domestic and foreign cotton situation to be used by the conference as a basis for consideration of the cotton problem. Following the Atlanta conference this material will be issued as a bulletin for distribution among farmers.

Following the agricultural outlook conference, the application of the outlook to local conditions in the south will be considered by a conference of southern extension workers in co-operation with research workers.

Cross Sections of Life In Gate City of South

W. R. Johnson, city warden, Saturday was back at his desk following an attack of influenza.

Councilman Wiley L. Moore, chairman of the finance committee of council, Saturday was back from a business tour of the middle west.

Alderman J. Charlie Murphy, of the 11th ward, Saturday returned from Washington, where he argued a case before the supreme court. He also interviewed Louis Titus, representing Atlanta in its census battle, while there.

Manning Yeomans, state entomologist, Saturday announced that new regulations by the federal plant board allow Florida citrus fruit to be loaded in bulk into refrigerator cars and moved into Georgia, where truckers may load up for distribution. The fruit must be graded and washed before loading into the cars, he said.

The federal grand jury will meet at 10 o'clock Monday morning to consider a number of cases involving liquor law and other federal statute violations.

Bruce Moran, vice president of Eastman, Scott & Company, has been appointed governor of the ninth district for the Adverising Federation of America, it was announced Saturday. Mr. Moran came to Atlanta from New York and has been with Eastman, Scott & Company for six years.

Mrs. Rose Mae Ashby, psychologist, will lecture on "The Subconscious Mind and Success" at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon in the mahogany room of the Ansley hotel. The public is invited.

Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer, Saturday announced baby health centers as follows: Monday, Stewart avenue nursery; Tuesday, Luckie Street school; Wednesday, Fair Street school; Thursday, Forrest Avenue school, and Friday, James L. Key school. All centers open promptly at 1:30 p. m.

Post Chaplain Joseph O. Ensrud will preach at today's services at Fort McPherson, sponsored by headquarters company of the 22nd infantry in memory of Armistice Day. The services will begin at 11 o'clock, and will be transmitted to the post hospital through head-sets supplied to patients unable to attend church.

T. C. Bazemore, well-known funeral director, has discontinued his business at Capitol square and Washington street, and will be associated in the future with Awtry & Lowndes Company, it was announced Saturday.

W. W. Tindall, formerly judge of the juvenile court, and teacher of the Young People's Bible class at Haygood Memorial church, will address the Business Women's League of the Second Baptist church at its November meeting at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon. Music will be furnished by choir members of the Druid Hills Baptist church.

Dr. A. J. Moncrief, pastor of the First Baptist church of Decatur, will exchange pulpits Sunday with his son, the Rev. A. J. Moncrief, Jr., pastor of the Oakland City Baptist church.

Assistant Solicitor-General John H. Hudson will deliver an address Sunday to the Couples class of the West End Christian church.

Governor Hardman Saturday issued a proclamation urging Georgians to observe Armistice Day Tuesday by two minutes of silent prayer at 11 o'clock a. m. The proclamation orders the capitol closed for the day.

Judge John D. Humphries, who has been confined to his Morningside home for the last few days suffering with a severe cold, was reported much improved Saturday, though he still was unable to come to the courthouse. At the judge's home it was said that he would be back on the bench Monday.

Assistant Solicitor-General Ed A. Stephens will go to Valdosta today, where he will assist Solicitor-General Clarence G. Spurlin in the trial of an important murder case this week. Five persons are jointly indicted in the killing and Mr. Spurlin called on Mr. Stephens to assist him in trial of the case, which likely will last all of this week. It is to be called Monday.

A. W. Jones, city smoke inspector, Saturday reported progress in the movement to rid the city of the smoke nuisance. The use of city steam will supplant the old heating system of the city auditorium, while automatic stokers are being installed in the Georgia Savings Bank building that will eliminate much smoke in that area, Mr. Jones said.

Chase S. Osborne, former governor of Michigan, was in Atlanta Saturday on his way to fill an Armistice Day speech engagement. Governor Osborne makes his winter home at his estate near Tifton, Ga. He spent the week-end at the Biltmore hotel.

Oscar Gershon was elected president of the United Hebrew school for the ensuing year. Other officers named were Gus Berman, vice president; J. H. Rodbell, treasurer, and J. Mayershon, secretary. The opening address of the school was given by Rabbi Harry H. Epstein, of Congregation Ahavath Achim.

Governor Hardman Saturday issued a proclamation making the week of November 10-15 "Georgia Education Week." The governor's proclamation was a part of the National Education Association's observance of the coming week as "National Education Week."

Miss Lillian Alexander, superintendent of public health nurses of the borough of Atlanta, Saturday received an invitation from President Hoover to attend the White House conference November 19-22 on child health and protection. She plans to attend.

John H. Thomas, vice president of the International Mercantile Marine Company, has announced his decision to retire from the company because of failing health. Mr. Thomas' efforts were instrumental in the development of the Panama Pacific Line, and he is one of the mercantile marine's oldest and most valued executives.

S. Y. Austin, former Atlantan, and lately of LaGrange, has recently been elected commander of the New York Camp of Confederate Veterans. Mr. Austin is associated with the Calloway textile interests in LaGrange, and was at one time lieutenant colonel on the staff of Governor Hugh Dorsey.

W. C. Royer, vice president and executive manager of the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, left Saturday for New York where he will preside at conferences of the International Conference on Hotel Business Promotion, of which he is president.

Y. W. C. A. will open its annual week of prayer and world fellowship at vesper services this afternoon to be held at 3 o'clock in the parlors of the administration building, 37 Auburn avenue. The Rev. Raymond Paty, of Emory University, will be the principal speaker. Music by the choral club of the Y. W. C. A.

Pitts Carminative for Teething Babies

Mother! When your child is fretful, can't sleep or play from cutting teeth, then Pitts Carminative is the medicine formulated over 50 years ago to stop the pain and worry your child has while cutting teeth. Pitts Carminative is a harmless, simple remedy; a few drops given your child, the trouble is righted and the result of these few drops brings restful sleep to your little one. Nothing in medicine can take the place of Pitts Carminative for teething children. It regulates their little bowels and tones up their stomachs. Sold by druggists for a few cents—(a v.)

SCHOONER SINKS OFF WEST COAST IN SIGHT OF LAND

Distress Signals Dot Horizons of Both Oceans; Florida East Coast Is Strewn With Wrecks.

TWO FREGHTERS ARE DISABLED

Coastwise Trader Sinks Shortly After Rescue Ship Removes Crew; Tug Thrown on Beach.

EUREKA, Cal., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The coast guard life-saving station here reported tonight the steam lumber schooner Brooklyn turned over and sank while crossing Humboldt bar at the entrance of the harbor late today. It was believed the 17 men of her crew were all drowned.

The water was extremely rough over the bar, the coast guard said, and apparently the lumber schooner was struck by a large wave and turned over. The coast guard sent boats to look for bodies.

The Brooklyn was owned by the Bayside Steamship Company, of San Francisco and Eureka, and carried lumber between those ports. Captain T. Tuszesson, San Francisco, was master.

The Brooklyn was hit simultaneously by two mountainous waves, the coast guard said, blew her whistle and within five minutes had sunk. Several Humboldt bay fishing boats and coast guard life-saving boats were searching for bodies, but none had been found an hour after the ship sank.

The vessel of 216 net tons was owned by Roy Whittle, of San Francisco, and operated by the Bayside Steamship Company of Eureka and San Francisco.

SOUTHERN SHIPPING CRIPPLED BY WAVES.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Pounding seas along Florida's east coast tonight had claimed a schooner, threatened to break up a tug on the beach and disabled two freighters. Another schooner was burned.

Members of the crew of the four-masted schooner Dunham Wheeler were taken aboard the steamer Aztec shortly before the schooner sank in high waves off Cape Canaveral today. With no radio aboard, the Dunham Wheeler sent up flares of distress which were sighted by the freighter Upshur, herself disabled.

The Upshur relayed the signal by radio and the Aztec, 46 miles away, steamed to the rescue. Shortly afterward the steamer George W. Barnes, also answering the distress call, arrived and finding the schooner's crew safe, took the Upshur in tow.

The Upshur was disabled Thursday night. Reports received by the Radio Marine Corporation's station here later tonight said the line from the George W. Barnes had parted but that the steamer was standing by until the coast guard cutter Yamacraw and the tug McCauley, of Savannah, arrived.

Life lines were brought into use tonight by the Jupiter lighthouse crew, near here, to remove Captain Charles Russell and six members of the crew of the tug Messenger after the tug had drifted into the breakers at Jupiter beach.

With its steering gear disabled and anchors failing to hold, the Messenger drifted helplessly more than an hour until it was washed up on the beach. The lighthouse crew reported that the tug was in danger of pounding to pieces.

Fire, following an explosion of undetermined origin, destroyed the schooner Rose Mary ten miles off Key West yesterday. The Rose Mary was on her way from Mexico to Baltimore.

Captain George A. Eden, the owner, his wife and eight members of the crew were rescued by the U. S. S. Hannibal, government survey vessel.

OLD U. S. CRUISER DRIFTS HELPLESSLY

MARSHFIELD, Ore., Nov. 8.—(AP) The old cruiser Missoula was drifting helpless in a fast running sea 19 miles off Coos bay today while the tug Roosevelt from which she broke loose was attempting to put a new line aboard her. Eleven men were aboard the Missoula which was sold recently by the navy.

CREW TO ABANDON SHIP HELD BY ROCK

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Pinned by a jagged rock to Pescadero reef, 50 miles south of here, the tanker Tamiahua will be abandoned by her crew of 39 at 3 a. m. tomorrow.

A breeches buoy was rigged up today to take off the crew when repeated efforts of tugs and a coast guard cutter had failed to budge the tanker. The early morning hour was chosen as the most expeditious as the tide will be low and receding, lessening possibilities of mishap as the sailors are dragged through the surf.

Atlanta School Activities Lauded by National Expert

Miss Ellen Lombard, personal representative of Dr. William J. Cooper, federal commissioner of education, is shown at the right as she prepared to depart Saturday night for North Carolina to continue her observation studies of the southeast in parent education. Mrs. Clifford Walker, former chairman of the pre-school committee of the National Parent-Teacher Association, and chairman of the state committee on this work, is shown at the left. Miss Lombard was the guest of Mrs. Walker, while in Georgia, and came to Atlanta at the invitation of Mrs. Walker, who has been an outstanding figure in parent-teacher association activities for many years. Miss Lombard will file a report of her findings at the White House conference called on child welfare and protection November 19-22. Staff photo by Bill Mason.

The youth of this generation will develop into better parents than their fathers and mothers, according to the prediction Saturday of Miss Ellen Lombard, personal representative of Dr. William John Cooper, federal commissioner of education. Miss Lombard left Atlanta after praising the activity for parent training fostered by the Georgia State Parent-Teacher association as part of the program of the national body.

"Modern parents as well as modern youths may be off keel on many things, but the younger set should be praised for the progress it has made in the art of living instead of being censured," she said.

"There is no cause for worry. Everything is coming out all right." Miss Lombard will also read the bulletin at the White House conference on Child Welfare and Protection which President Hoover has called for November 19-22.

While in Atlanta she was the guest of Mrs. Clifford Walker, former chairman of the pre-school committee of the national Parent-Teacher organization, a committee dealing with the education of parents in the care of children before they reach the school age. Mrs. Walker at present is chairman of the pre-school committee of the state Parent-Teacher association.

Her report will present a glowing account of the progress of parental education in Atlanta and Georgia will have a prominent place in the bulletin.

She has been a guest of Mrs. Clifford Walker, former national chairman of the pre-school committee of the parent-teacher movement, and at present Georgia chairman.

"Reports at the conference we held at the Henry Grady hotel were enthusiastic. They told better than any other way of the real service which is being conducted in Georgia. Mrs. Walker and her committees are doing a wonderful work in pre-school education. District presidents of the parent-teacher organization, which has the sympathetic aid of the press, and many other organizations, told of the progress in Georgia, placing it to the fore with other progressive states in this line of activity.

"I want to say that my report will tell of an awakened and progressive parenthood in Georgia; that the state is in the forefront in a progressive movement to provide a center to which parents and teachers look for guidance. The work which Miss Martha McAlpin is doing, as an expert, is of inestimable value.

"Some outstanding activities described at the conference follow:

"The sympathetic co-operation of the press, a city-wide program of parent education directed by Dr. Willis A. Sutton, president of the National Educational Association, a center at

COUNCIL TO PUSH CENSUS BATTLE

Action Taken Despite Couch's Bitter Attack on Further Expenditure.

Atlanta Saturday prepared to carry its census fight to the highest court of the land, when the borough council voted, 13 to 8, to instruct City Attorney James L. Mayson to confer with Louis Titus, leading Washington attorney, regarding costs of an appeal of the mandamus suit which was refused, and indicated that the council will wage relentless legal war to assure enumeration of 360,961 as the official count.

Council's action was taken despite a criticism by Alderman J. Allen Couch, of the fifth ward, who declared "if the same persons who now are urging us to pour out money in this useless court battle had supported a reasonable annexation plan, we would not have had this to contend with, and there would have been no question as to whether Atlanta would get a correct census enumeration."

Mr. Couch, who is mayor pro tem., left the chair to fight any additional appropriation or any move to appeal the case.

"Certain interests in Atlanta fought an honest annexation plan," he said. "We cannot go to Wash-

64TH METHODIST SESSIONS BEGIN HERE THURSDAY

North Georgia Ministers and Laymen To Assemble for Conference at Wesley Memorial.

BY DR. THOMAS M. ELLIOTT.

Predictions have been quite confidently made that the current session of the North Georgia Methodist annual conference, beginning at Wesley Memorial church Thursday morning, Bishop John M. Moore, presiding, will be a doubly strenuous one, due to the fact that the usual time allowed for the session has been shortened two days, and the additional fact that Bishop Moore has stated his purpose of having the policy of open cabinet followed in arranging the preachers' appointments, and the still further fact that prolonged attention is to be given new legislation enacted by the recent general conference, as to merging boards, enlarging laymen's activities work, adopting the new financial plan, voting on the election of a judicial council, and the appointing of some 20 or 25 four-year committees. A local phase of the conference strenuousness is seen in the necessity of appointing four new presiding elders, to replace those whose four-year time limit has been reached.

For the Methodist annual conference to meet in Atlanta is no new thing, since this assemblage will be the 17th to meet here out of the 64 to have been held since the North Georgia conference was created as the result of dividing the former Georgia conference. Save for the 1929 session the seat of the conference when meeting in Atlanta the last 11 times has been Wesley Memorial church. Rev. L. W. Collins, the pastor-host, last year urged the conference to "come back," when selection was being made as to where this session should be held. Mr. Collins, together with all his co-workers at Wesley Memorial, announces that every possible detail will be in readiness by next Thursday for the conference's convenience and to emphatically assure a warm welcome.

Bishop Elected Here.

For the first time since his election to the episcopacy in 1918, Bishop Moore, D. D., Ph. D., will preside over the North Georgia body. At the recent general conference he was assigned to this district, which embraces the two Georgia conferences and also the Florida conference. It was during the Atlanta general conference, here in Atlanta in 1918, that Bishop Moore was elected a bishop, and Wesley Memorial church is the scene of his ordination.

In Southern Methodist circles Bishop Moore enjoys an unusually high ranking, and is regarded as a man of great brotherly spirit, a strong preacher, and of rare administrative abilities. As a pastor he served some of the church's outstanding congregations, as the San Antonio Travis Park church, the St. Louis St. John church, and the Dallas First church. He was a member of three general conferences before his election to the bishopric. For a time he was editor-in-chief of the Christian Advocate, and also secretary of the board of home missions. He is a graduate of Yale University and also studied at the Leipsig and Heidelberg universities in Germany.

Elders' Retirement.

Four North Georgia presiding elders are to be retired at this conference, having served in their present charges the prescribed four years. Although there is no time limit as to the number of years consecutively a pastor may serve a given charge, the appoint-

ALBANY, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A reward of $250 for capture and conviction of the person or persons who left a dynamite bomb that exploded in downtown Albany Friday night was offered Saturday by the police committee of the city commission.

The commission met in special session today and asked its police committee to take immediate action on the case. The committee then met with Mayor J. S. Billingslea, and decided to post the reward.

The blast tore a hole six inches deep and a foot in diameter in the concrete Jackson street sidewalk, severely damaged the front of the barber shop, operated by J. A. Berry, and shattered windows on both sides of the street for half a block.

Officers said Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Williams, of Sylvester, told them that they saw the bomb as they were en route from a near-by theater to their parked automobile. They hurried away in search of a policeman when they observed that about six sticks of dynamite had been fashioned together with a short fuse. They had gone only a short distance when the explosion occurred, breaking the windshield of their car.

Police recalled that a similar explosion damaged a Columbus, Ga., barber shop some months ago. They said they were investigating a theory that the bomb was planted by an enemy of the barber shop operator and had learned that his establishment was known as a "cut rate shop."

The authorities said the barber shop building and that occupied by a florist, both of which suffered the greatest damage, were owned by Mrs. Sallie Jones. A laundry operated by a Chinese also experienced considerable damage. No one was injured. The detonation was heard throughout the city.

COMMUNITY CHEST ARMY TAKES FIELD

Volunteers Start Appeal This Week for Needy in General Canvass.

A volunteer army will take the field in Atlanta this week, bearing the standards of a human cause.

It will convey into every home where comfort abides, into every store, office and industrial plant the appeal for support of the program of helpfulness planned by the Atlanta Community Chest and its 38 societies in 1931.

The general public canvass for this cause will open Wednesday, to continue, if necessary, until November 25. In that period the campaign organization of 1,500 men and women will seek to raise $398,550, a sum de-

Court Rules Barbers Are Beauty Doctors

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Kansas barbers today established in the state supreme court their right to operate beauty shops without becoming licensed cosmetologists.

The court stated the two occupations have a common field of practice and held barbers have a right to give permanent waves and other beauty treatments.

SWAVELY ADMITS SLAYING OF WIFE

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 7.—(AP)—Police Inspector Harry Walsh said tonight that Howard Swavely, 55, had confessed to killing his wife, Elizabeth, yesterday, by setting fire to her clothing.

Walsh said the confession came after a woman claiming to be Swavely's undivorced first wife identified the man as her husband. She asserted he had served a year in a Pennsylvania prison after conviction on charges of conspiring to kill her and collect $2,500 insurance money.

Before she died, the victim accused Swavely of setting her on fire "because he was hungry for my money." The woman was said to be insured for $10,000 against accidental death.

NEW SCHOOL HEAD WILL BE CHOSEN

Board of Education To Pick President at Meeting Tuesday Afternoon.

Election of a president of the Atlanta board of education to serve for the remainder of the year will be the most important business to come before the regular monthly meeting of that body at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, it was announced Saturday.

Despite the fact that Tuesday is a holiday because of the armistice celebration, the school department will work, and Atlanta borough's 60,000-odd students will observe the day by special exercises, but will attend classes.

Included among the possible presidential selections are John T. Hancock and W. W. Gaines, former presidents; James W. Maddox, at present first vice president, and J. Ira Harrelson, commissioner from the fourth ward.

Some action by the board regarding what possible effect, if any, the proposed slash in the number of wards will have on the board also is expected to be taken.

"It is my plan to favor a reduction of the board along with council," Mr. Sweat said Saturday. "I think it would be the best plan, but we should work the reduction out in detail as to the number of representatives from each of the wards, when they should be elected, and for how long."

Commissioner E. R. Sweat, chairman of a special legislative committee of the board, has called a meeting of that body for 11 o'clock Monday morning to discuss the matter, and decide just what recommendation will be made to the board.

Predictions Saturday were that Mr. Gaines probably would be the choice for president from those mentioned to succeed Dr. McIntosh M. Burns, resigned.

Four Die as Flames Gut Insane Asylum

MARTHASVILLE, Mo., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Four inmates of the Evangelical Emmaus Home for Feeble-Minded and Epileptics here were burned to death today by a fire of undetermined origin which destroyed one of the institution's groups of buildings. The four were crippled and unable to get out of the building. Attendants led or carried 106 other inmates to safety.

WILL BASE PLEA ON WICKERSHAM PROBERS' REPORT

Members of Commission Say Stories Are Only Surmises as Final Draft Not Yet Made.

REVENUE INCREASE IS MAJOR POINT

Methodists Demand Continued Enforcement; Republicans Grow Uneasy Under Wets' Victories.

BY GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Out of the varied recent developments that have revolved around the ever-pressing prohibition issue political Washington has been beset with a multiplicity of reports and rumors that a break is just around the corner on the prohibition situation. Well seasoned students of administration affairs profess to see in the developments a beer and wine crested cloud forming on the horizon. The national drouth, they believe, is about to be broken.

If these highly colorful reports can be trusted, President Hoover has about made up his mind to send to congress at the forthcoming session a report from the Wickersham crime commission recommending modification of the Volstead act to permit manufacture and sale, under government supervision, of light wines and beer, at least.

Brewers Buy Equipment.

While there is not the slightest confirmation available from any official quarter in Washington, such a move would not come wholly as a surprise in view of the indicated complexion of the commission, the tremendous gains registered in the November congressional elections by wets and the bearing prohibition modification would have on the national economic situation plus several other factors which may be mentioned.

To many the recent wave of optimistic enthusiasm which swept through the ranks of former leaders in the brewing industry, causing them to announce programs for the purchase of new equipment on the idea that it might be soon in demand, carried more than superficial significance. Such conservative business houses as Pabst, of Milwaukee, it is argued, would not embark on a program of spending $1,000,000 for new equipment unless something was in the air. The suggestion is heard that a leak has occurred somewhere along the line. These brewers, it is asserted, would not be making plans to put their business in trim unless they had heard something—and something smacking of the official.

A repetition of the reports and rumors has followed the action of President Hoover this week in recalling from the Pacific coast Colonel Amos W. W. Woodcock, director of the newly organized prohibition forces, just as he was about to set sail for Hawaii on a dry inspection tour. No satisfactory explanation has come forward as to why Director Woodcock was recalled and the thought that has been uppermost in the minds of most is that it may have something to do with the commission's report.

Beer Revenue Needed.

President Hoover is believed to have something in mind on the prohibition problem. In the face of waning fortunes and a terrific defeat of his party in the recent elections, some of his close advisors are known to have emphasized to him the prospects for utilizing prohibition to possible benefit in the current economic situation. They are said to have impressed upon him the appealing thought that impetus to industry would be given by modification, with its opportunity for providing work for the unemployed and investment of large sums of money now idle.

Perhaps most important of all, however, is the revenue angle of the question. It undoubtedly has been brought to his attention that a vast store of revenue awaits the government from a tax on wines and beer, to say

'Please, This Year, Give More---Need Is Greater,' Community Chest Chairman Urges Atlantans

To the People of Atlanta:

Once a year those who live in health and comfort are asked to help those less fortunate. That appeal, in the name of the Atlanta Community Chest, will be before you this week.

It is made in the name of little children, homeless and friendless—of widowed mothers burdened by worry and by bitter need—of the sick and the blind—of old women helplessly facing want in the evening of their days—of broken men—of boys and girls who must be saved and directed for worthy lives—of the jobless—of hopeless invalids.

We all know of the economic depression which has resulted in conditions not known before. Good men are facing the winter without means of support for their families.

Please, this year, give more—the need is greater.

There is only one appeal. Without the all-embracing plan of the Community Chest, its single solicitation for 38 societies, you would have an endless procession of campaigns all through the year.

Every operation of the Chest is an open book. Our headquarters office at Five Points, donated by the Healey Intere , will answer any questions that any interested person may ask. We have no secrets.

H. N. HUTCHINSON,

cared by a budget committee of business executives to be the smallest amount on which the city's agencies of human welfare can operate effectively next year.

Menace of Hardship.

With anything less, these businessmen have said after six weeks' study of budgets and programs of the 38 societies, there will be a menace of hardship and human suffering.

The appeal of the campaign, voiced Saturday night by Herbert N. Hutchinson, general campaign chairman, is this:

"Please give more—the need is greater."

The campaign workers have been instructed in the facts of the situation and will explain to the men and women of Atlanta whom they visit that conditions have made this a year of unusually heavy appeals for help, with every agency of social service burdened beyond any precedent by demands from the sick and helpless, the jobless and harassed.

They will explain also how the Community Chest plan in Atlanta and more than 300 other cities has been proved to be the most effective and economical means of relieving human suffering and building for a future of independence—making the city's charity dollar go trebly far by co-operation and central supervision among 38 agencies, reducing the cost of collecting and administration to a minimum by a single campaign for 38 causes, instead of 38 separate and endless campaigns as in the old days without the Chest.

Dinner Tuesday Night.

Final instructions to workers will be given at a dinner at the Ansley hotel at 6:30 o'clock Tuesday night, to which the entire personnel is invited. The dinner is donated by the hotel and is without expense to the campaign.

The general canvass will be conducted by several divisions of workers, the largest of which will be the individual subscribers' division, under the Rev. N. R. High Moor, rector of the Church of St. Luke, as chairman, and the groups division, of which Harold B. Wey and J. E. Mellett are chairmen.

The latter will solicit gifts from employes of more than 500 firms, offices and plants comprising the structure of Atlanta's business and industry, presenting the appeal to every concern with 20 or more employes. The individual subscribers' division will solicit directly every citizen, except those to be reached by two advance gifts committees, the women's division and the colored division.

In the women's division, Mrs. S. F. Boykin is general chairman, with Mrs. Frank Holland chairman of the advance gifts committee, and Mrs. W. E. Harrington as head of the general canvass.

J. W. Dobbs is chairman of the colored division.

Subscriptions Reported.

Organization and preliminary solicitations have been under way by all except the individual subscribers' division, with the result of many substantial responses, both in gifts and hearty expressions of encouragement. Eugene R. Black, chairman of the advance gifts committee, concerned with seeking gifts from Atlantans of larger means, has reported a number of gifts, including one of $10,000 from the Coca-Cola Company, an increase from a $5,000 gift of last year; increases from $750 to $1,000 each from the three Atlanta daily newspapers, from $1,000 to $1,500 from the Rogers stores, a sum exclusive of gifts of executives and employes of that concern.

T. H. Daniel, a worker in the groups division, reported that J. C. Grabbe, manager of Sears, Roebuck & Co., had increased the contribution of that concern from $3,600 to $4,500, apart from the gifts of employes.

Need Is Recognized.

Most of these contributions, according to the workers, have been accompanied by expressions of sympathy and encouragement.

"Our people are displaying a recognition that the need is greater," said E. A. Thornwell, president of the Chest, "and also that the Chest's efficient methods and constructive purposes merit the confidence of the community."

In this connection was displayed a letter from Armand May, president of the American Mills Company, accompanying an increase in his personal subscription from $300 to $600 and saying:

"Whether successful or unsuccessful in their attempt to reach the heartstrings of Atlanta, those who are participating in this labor of love are certain to cause less suffering to hundreds, and the eventual establishment of homes, and making it possible for literally thousands to master the present economic trend for better days.

"No one can visualize what this means and the suffering that will be alleviated. Everyone in this campaign is playing a big part and I predict a real success."

Five Districts Named.

The message of the campaign will be presented by every available means, Mr. Thornwell explained—by direct solicitation, by newspaper articles and editorials, posters, car cards, display advertisements, speakers at every gathering of men and women and by radio. Most numerous in the task of direct solicitation are the workers in the individual subscribers' division, who will set out Wednesday under Dr. Moor. For this task the city and outlying regions of Fulton and DeKalb counties have been divided into five districts, each in charge of a colonel, who in turn has a group of majors under whom serve a larger number of captains, and these again directing each a group of lieutenants.

This individual subscribers' division, like the group division, will be concerned only with gifts under $100. Those of $100 to $250 will be sought by an advance gifts committee under Hal C. Voorhis, and above $250 by the group under Mr. Black.

Colonels, majors and captains so far enlisted for the individual subscribers' division under Dr. Moor are as follows:

Drive Personnel.

Major James J. Currie, who has these captains: Paul Hardin, Robert C. McLemore, Walter Bryan, Henson McNamara, L. O. Turner and J. P. Garlington. Major J. I. Oberst, whose captains are: H. P. Adams, J. T. Brown, John C. Heath, E. N. Fleming and E. G. Stowers. Major Francis Bachler, whose captains are: Don Quisenberry, E. A. Perry and Frank Wilson. Major Sam Levy, with the following captains: A. L. Feldman, Paul Gensberg, J. P. Jones, Grady Miller. Major Morton Rollestone, captains, W. Lyle Bailes, B. H. Smith; Major D. Mackey Solenberger, Captain E. Tingle.

Major Lee Potter, Captains O. S. Walker, Keller Melton, Charles Kinsey, H. W. Schafer, Tony Watley, Paul Ansley, J. W. Turner, W. T. Christy and Bill Brooke; Major T. R. Garlington, Captains Edgar James, George Armour, John Dillard and Gene Cook; Major W. V. O'Brien, Captains W. F. Ogden, G. R. Barrett, F. R. McClellan, J. H. Persons and Hugh S. Thompson; Major O. O. Rae, Captains M. D. Belding, J. W. Brooks, J. D. Dodd, John Tittlemeyer; Major J. Arch Avary, Jr., Captains F. D. Willis, W. F. Oliver, Ray Mitchell, E. F. Thomas; Major Roy Harwell, Captains H. D. Roden, M. O. Mosteller, Frank C. Johnson, A. R. Pearson and H. B. Baker; Major R. E. Mell, Captains J. R. Regnas, Harold Cooledge, Bryant K. Vann and H. N. Jordan.

Theo Oser, colonel of district No. 3, has this organization:

Major E. M. Stubinger, Captains Walter Greavy, W. J. Carter, Hal Butts, F. W. Robinson, R. L. Ellis; Major R. J. Reynolds, Jr., Captains V. K. Meador and Mitchell Benton; Major E. R. Everett, Captain Jim Williams; Major J. O. Conoly, Captains Jim Hays and W. H. Hinshaw; Major E. Haas, Jr., Captains Martin Kilpatrick, Morris Hirsch and James Rankin; Major Harry Zaban, Captains J. Percy Lambright, Theo Waxelbaum and Kurt Holland.

Rev. C. R. Stauffer is colonel of district No. 4, with this organization:

Major R. I. Dement, Captains Edgar Watkins, Jr., W. R. Heston, Tom Dickson and J. D. Bansley, Jr.; Major D. Witherspoon Dodge, Major Johnson Sutton, Captains L. S. Gilbert, P. M. Millians, D. W. Thornton, H. B. Sims, H. D. Carter, H. S. Collinsworth and W. W. Roberts; Major W. A. Dobson, Captains Paul McDonald, T. S. Brown, Warren Barlar, J. L. Allen, R. L. Watkins and W. T. Harrison; Majors J. A. Fynn and N. S. Marshall, Captains, Adjutant Pierce, Adjutant Cunningham, Adjutant Cox and Captain Baldwin, of the Salvation Army, K. Kowarth and Carl Cone; Majors Max Cuba and David N. Meyer, Captains Harry Wengrow, Joseph Goldstein, I. H. Goldstein, Charles W. Bergman, Jake Jacobs, Sam Geffen, Miss Polly Gershon, Berry Rittenbaum, E. Turiel, Sidney Saul and H. S. Jacobs; Major L. A. Davis, Captains W. E. Crane, J. H. York and C. L. Smith.

J. W. Crenshaw is colonel of district No. 5, comprised of the outlying districts, and his majors are: Hapeville, Hubert McWhirter; East Point, Ed L. Humphreys; Decatur and DeKalb county, Charles D. McKinney.

There exists still a need for more workers in every division, said Mr. Hutchinson, general campaign chairman, last night. Volunteers are asked to call Frank Coffee at Walnut 4686, or to report to Chest headquarters, which are in the new William Oliver building at Five Points.

GERMAN FASCISTS WILL 'MOURN' TODAY

MUNICH, Germany, Nov. 8.—(AP)—In the same "citizens' beer cellar" where Adolph Hitler hatched his abortive plans for an overthrow of the government in 1923 the national socialists will gather tomorrow in mourning services to commemorate the 12th anniversary of the German revolution which established the republic.

Originally it was planned for a band of "brown shirts" to march through the city, as Hitler had oped to march with Ludendorff seven years ago, and to hold services at the cemetery where lie those who fell in the revolution of 1918. But the police forbade such a demonstration and the Hitler followers turned to the old beer cellar.

Notices made it plain that Jews will not be allowed to participate in the exercises. This is in accord with the anti-Semitic sentiments of the fascists.

At Coburg, in Bavaria, the national socialists who control the municipal government have determined to go the Hitlerites in Munich one better, and plan to drape the city hall in deep mourning with the monarchial and Bavarian colors flying side by side.

In Berlin, however, not even radio broadcast programs include any services which would remind republican Germany of one of the most profound changes in the nation's history. So far as the capital is concerned, tomorrow will bring nothing unusual.

RADIO INTERVIEW WILL AID DRIVE

A unique radio interview, introducing an Atlanta woman outstanding in social affairs and a clergyman who is a leader in civic enterprises, will be presented Sunday night at 9:35 o'clock over WSB for explanation of the methods and purposes of the Atlanta Community Chest, the campaign of which opens Wednesday.

The figures in the interview are Mrs. William T. Healey and the Rev. N. R. High Moor, rector of the Church of St. Luke and chairman of the general public canvass of the Chest.

Mrs. Healey will propound a series of questions on the objectives and program of the Chest and its 38 agencies, in response to which will be described the businesslike methods of organization and budgeting, and the economies achieved by a central administration, as well as the warmth of human contacts attained.

3 PERSONS KILLED IN MISSION ATTACK

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Three persons were killed in an attack on the mission station at Juruena, Brazil, according to a telegram received by a Memphis minister tonight from headquarters of the Inland South American Missionary Union at New York. The dead are the Rev. Arthur F. Tylee, missionary; his baby daughter, Marion, and Miss Mildred Kratz, a co-worker, the telegram stated.

Mrs. Tylee, formerly of Memphis, was wounded, the telegram stated.

Mother's Accidental Shot Kills Her Son

HARDEEVILLE, S. C., Nov. 8. (AP)—George Edward Sharpe, 7, was accidentally shot and killed last night with his parents on a fishing trip.

His mother, Mrs. G. A. Sharpe, said he was shot when she became frightened at a noise and picked up a pistol, which was discharged.

FERTILIZER GROUP TO CONVENE HERE

Leaders, prominent in the fertilizer and agricultural industries, will assemble here for the sixth annual southern convention of the National Fertilizer Association, opening Monday for a three-day session at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel.

Distinguished visitors who will participate in the convention program as guests of the association include Eugene R. Black, governor of the Atlanta Federal Reserve bank; F. B. Nichols, managing editor Capper Farm Press, Topeka, Kan.; A. F. Lever, staff member federal farm board, former congressman of Columbia, S. C., and Dr. Bradford A. Knapp, president Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

With registration set for Monday, feature events of the opening day of the convention will be the meeting of the soil improvement committee at 10 o'clock Monday morning, and meeting of the board of directors at 8:30 o'clock Monday night.

The general session will open at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning with [redacted] W. Rowell, of Chicago, president of the National Fertilizer Association, in the chair. The Rev. N. R. High Moor, of St. Luke's Episcopal church, will pronounce the invocation, and President Rowell will make the opening address. Other addresses at the session will be delivered by Mr. Nichols, Mr. Lever, and Charles J. Brand, executive secretary and treasurer of the association.

A highlight of the convention will be the banquet at 7 o'clock Tuesday night. At this time the addresses by Mr. Black and Dr. Knapp will be given. A. D. Strobhar, of Savananh, president of the Southern Fertilizer & Chemical Company, will preside.

De Molay Costume Ball Produces Riot of Color and Gayety

Just a few of the many reasons why the De Molay annual costume ball always attracts such a congenial gathering of young men and women. The 1930 affair, held in the Shrine Mosque auditorium Friday evening, brought forth such a riot of color and gayety in design, to say nothing of the confusing array of beautiful young women that the cameraman momentarily was at a loss to determine where to aim his lenses. Finally he corraled the group shown above, reading (left to right), Miss Marie Griffith, Miss Kit Hartrampf, Miss Margaret Millican, Miss Helen Jones and (leaning over from behind) Miss Angel Allen. The social event of the fall season for the De Molays was characterized by leaders of the society as one of the most brilliant ever to be staged. Originality of costumes and the prevailing spirit of cordiality among the dancers served to set the 1930 ball apart as unique in De Molay annals. Several hundred members and guests attended. 64TH METHODIST CONFERENCE OPENS HERE THURSDAY ment renewed annually, the law continues as of old that a presiding elder may not remain on the same district for more than four years.

The four presiding elders whose terms of service expire with this conference are Rev. Frank Quillian, of the Dalton district; Rev. H. L. Edmondson, of the Elberton district; Rev. L. M. Twiggs, of the Griffin district, and Dr. E. F. Dempsey, of the Oxford district. No official announcement has yet been made as to what new appointments they will be given, or as to who their respective successors will be. The retirement of the four elders named and the appointment of their successors over the districts will be one of the questions of absorbing interest during the conference week. In addition to the changes to be made in the four presiding eldership it is expected that there will be changes made in at least 100 of the pastorates. Also some conference members may superannuate, and a group of young men admitted on trial will be received. These, with the possible transfers to be made from one conference to another, all add to the complexities of the conference work.

Debate Anticipated.

An event of the conference program that is expected to prove of lively interest will be the debate regarding the judicial council, as authorized by the last general conference, and that must be accepted throughout the denomination before it becomes effective. Annual conferences this fall are discussing the proposed judicial council, and the voting is being tabulated. When the matter is submitted to the North Georgia conference this week it will provoke a lively debate, for it involves a mooted question and one that Georgians are prone to debate with emphasis.

The proposed judicial council is to be composed of nine members, five of whom are to be ministers and all of whom are to be over 40 years of age. No council members may be members of a general conference, have any connectional position, or membership in any general conference board or commission.

The proposed supreme judicial council is to have appellate power to determine the constitutionality of any act of general conferences or annual conferences; to determine appeals coming from conference boards, the college of bishops, or connectional bodies. The council is to have power to arrest any act of a connectional board or body of the church under certain restrictions. The decision of the judicial council is to be final, except that constitutional questions shall take the course already provided for constitutional alterations.

It is argued that this proposal is a further effort to curtail the episcopal powers. Opponents of the proposal declare the council as suggested is an unnecessary expense, a needless piece of ecclesiastical machinery, since it creates a special group to do work that has heretofore been well done by the college of bishops, and that they are well capable of continuing to do.

"Open" Procedure.

Something new under the sun in the North Georgia conference will be seen this week when Bishop Moore arranges the preachers' appointments after the open cabinet plan, in which opportunity is afforded both preachers and laymen to know something beforehand as to appointments assigned the preachers, and preachers assigned the appointments.

The bishop will meet with the cabinet of presiding elders two days before conference and arrange the appointments to the best of their ability. Then, during the conference session, a special hour will be set for the ministers to visit the bishop, and express approval or disapproval of the appointments proposed for them. At another hour the laymen will be given opportunity to have a talk-fest with the bishop, and also permitted to say yea or nay to the proposed ministers assigned them and their churches.

Keynote of Comity.

Following the talk-fests, both clerical and lay, the bishop and his cabinet will endeavor to make all things as nearly agreeable as possible all the way around, and in keeping with their godly judgment. The hour for reading the appointments will be the final hour of conference next Sunday night at Wesley Memorial church.

In arranging the preachers' appointments for the coming year Bishop Moore has the help of the 12 presiding elders, who are in active and close touch with the churches throughout the 12 districts. The presiding elders are as follows: Rev. J. L. Allgood, of the Athens district; Dr. S. P. Wiggins, of the North Atlanta district; Dr. J. S. Jenkins, of the South Atlanta district; Rev. W. H. Clark, of the Augusta district; Rev. Frank Quillian, of the Dalton district; Rev. H. L. Edmondson, of the Elberton district; Rev. H. C. Emory, of the Gainesville district; Rev. L. M. Twiggs, of the Griffin district; Rev. W. M. Barnett, of the LaGrange district; Rev. Nat Thompson, of the Marietta district; Dr. E. F. Dempsey, of the Oxford district, and Rev. G. L. King, of the Rome district.

New Financial Program.

One of the most important features of the conference work will be the inauguration of a new financial program, which will likely prove a high spiritual venture and a new day in Southern Methodism. Under the influence and with the help of the general conference the new plan will operate in uniformity throughout the entire connection, and will be as thorough as the hearty co-operation of every church agency can produce, without the objectionable features of the military or war-time drive, but with the dynamic results of the operating forces of a peace-time and God-fearing church, determiend to advance in the name of Jesus Christ.

In the new plan the word "assessment" has been discarded, and the word "apportionment" used. Reliance upon taxation methods is passed, and each charge will be given the measure of its obligation and privilege. The apportionments for general benevolences have been reduced by 7 per cent, with a total of $2,000,000 asked, to be supplemented by a free-will offering with a $1,200,000 minimum.

The special free-will offering will be called the voluntary kingdom extension offering, and will be used specifically for missions, church extension, education, and hospitals.

How Program Will Work.

To insure the effectiveness of the new program a conference commission on benevolences will be created, to be composed of the bishop, the presiding elders, conference and district lay leaders, and chairmen of the several conference boards. Throughout the year will be four periods of emphasis, all devoted to perfecting the work of the new plan. First, the district stewards will apportion the amount apportioned to any given district to the charges of that district. Next follows a two-month cultivation period, when a special effort will be made to inform the entire church as to the benevolent causes.

The free-will offering is to be the closing feature of the cultivation period. At the district conferences the third emphasis is to be given the new method of operation, and this to be followed at the year's close with the fourth emphasis in the final effort to secure all apportionments in full. It has been advised that churches desiring to do so may combine their free-will offering with their budget for the year, provided that the offerings realized on the budget are divided proportionately between the benevolent apportionments and the voluntary kingdom extension offerings.

Large Lay Attendance.

An attractive feature of the proposed new plan of financing the church work is the fact that it challenges the laity of the church, and will result in the great advancement of laymen's activities. This is what laymen have desired, and they give assurances of their purpose to make it a success. Laymen will attend this conference session in the number of 180, as elected by the various district conferences. The 180 laymen attending will return to their home charges and disseminate information regarding the plan, and will be active in making it a success.

Dr. Harvey W. Cox, president of Emory University, is conference lay leader, and is consecrated to the plan. With him as associates are 12 of the most eminent laymen in the conference, who serve as district lay leaders. All of these district men will be present at conference and be thoroughly advised and indoctrinated as to the details of the movement.

The district lay leaders are as follows: Dr. N. G. Slaughter, of the Athens district; C. T. Grizzard, of the North Atlanta district; John W. Hardwick, of the South Atlanta district; Dr. W. T. Price, of the Augusta district; E. P. Hall, Jr., of the Dalton district; L. L. Morris, of the Elberton district; Hammond Johnson, of the Gainesville district; J. H. Battle, of the Griffin district; W. N. Banks, of the LaGrange district; Smith L. Johnston, of the Marietta district; R. P. Lester, of the Oxford district, and S. C. Connolly, of the Rome district.

Progress of Hospitals.

Atlanta is headquarters for the general hospital board of Southern Methodism, with Dr. C. C. Jarrell as general secretary. Dr. Jarrell is very enthusiastic about the progress made in hospitalization work done by the church forces. He says the 12 hospitals belonging to the denomination are worth some $15,000,000, with an indebtedness of some $2,000,000. In charity work the hospitals did some $475,000, while the total amount of $2,010,369 was expended in the treatment of the 28,000 patients receiving treatment. Dr. Jarrell states that the number of Golden Cross directors has been increased to 7,500, showing an increase of some 2,500 in the year. General conference legislation this year directs that Golden Cross directors are to be named in each church throughout the connection. Thus the number of directors and societies may become equal in number to the churches.

Special attention will be given at this conference to the matter of raising the balance due on the quota subscribed for the superannuate endowment fund. This conference pledged the quota of $436,471, of which amount $181,518 has been paid to date, or a percentage of .4133, and giving the conference a rating of 17th among all the conferences. In this conference there are 22 charges that have paid or overpaid their quotas, while there are 71 that have paid less than $100 each, 12 paying nothing at all, and 232 that paid nothing on their quotas during the year 1929.

The superannuate endowment fund was intended to reach the sum of $10,000,000, the proceeds of which were to be used for the comfort of the 1,156 superannuated preachers and 1,628 preachers' widows who are claimants on the fund. Of these claimants, 143 are found in this conference.

Honor Roll-Standings.

Throughout the southern Methodist connection 546 charges have won places on the honor roll of charges that have paid their quotas in full. Of this number 22 are found in this conference, and are as follows: Fifteenth on the honor roll, Marietta-Olinville; 40th, West Point; 95th, Warrenton; 119th, Augusta St. James; 153rd, Chickamauga; 321st, Dalton First; 336th, Thomas and Gilead; 403rd, Young Harris; 492nd, Tate; 508th, LaGrange First; 17th, Emory University; 49th, Atlanta Trinity; 97th, Atlanta First; 140th, Milledgeville; 158th, Augusta St. John; 326th, Newnan First; 365th, Gainesville First; 413th, Buford; 473rd, Thomaston; 493rd, Monroe, and 553rd, Grantville.

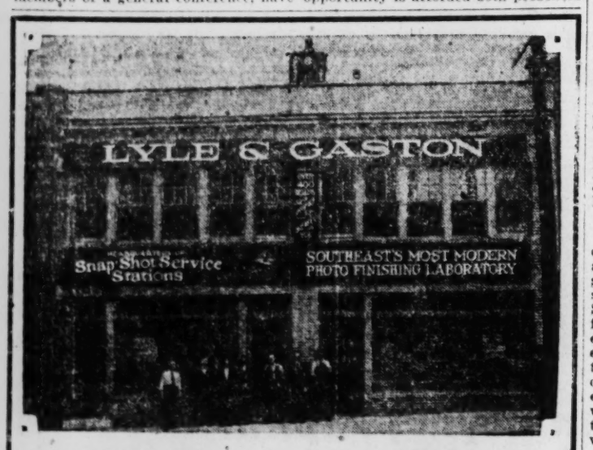

The effort will probably be made to persuade each charge with an unpaid quota balance to accept its balance and agree to pay same in four equal amounts within the next four years. Also effort will be made to ask all charges that have paid quotas to continue their active interest and make annual contributions to the fund.

This season witnesses the most elaborate effort ever made by Southern Methodism in the matter of Christian education, and the plan formally authorized by the general conference will be made effective at this annual conference session. This new plan effects the merger of all educational efforts of the church under one general board, combining the work of the board of education, the Epworth League board, and the Sunday school board.

The session of conference will be formally opened by Bishop Moore next Thursday morning at Wesley Memorial church, and will continue through the following Sunday night, at which time the reading of the new appointments will be the last feature. On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week Bishop Moore and the cabinet of presiding elders are to have preconference meetings, to begin arranging the appointments. During the conference three sessions daily will probably be held, to all of which the general public is invited.

On Wednesday many of the conference committees and boards will hold special meetings to make ready their reports to be submitted later in the week. The board of missions and board of education have announced meetings for Wednesday. Also the examining committees for the undergraduate preachers and applicants for admission are to have meetings that day.

Wednesday night, at 7:30, at Wesley Memorial church, the Widows and Orphans Aid Association, Rev. A. J. Sears, of Stone Mountain, president, will hold their anniversary.

SIMPLE HOME REMEDY FOR GRAY HAIR OR BALDNESS

Brings Back Youthful Color. Stimulates Growth Too.

YOU LOOK YOUNGER AND EXPERTS CAN'T DETECT

"I was amazed to notice my hair getting thicker, more even colored and healthy looking and every single gray hair in my head turned back to youthful color again as if by magic," declared an enthusiastic user of Lea's Hair Tonic which has amazed thousands and is being introduced here now.

Lea's Hair Tonic contains numerous ingredients a doctor labored years to work out in his search for something harmless which one could use for years with unvarying change in the hair—a stimulating massage treatment of the scalp which seems to put nature back on the job. He didn't want an ugly dye or tint that produces shocking shades, ever growing darker and dull. He figured if a tonic would stimulate the liver, heart, digestion, bowels, etc., the proper tonic massage would stimulate the growth and health to the scalp, hair roots and color glands. How successful he was can be proven by using Lea's Tonic a few weeks each night to bald or gray spots. To test apply nightly to spot size of silver dollar and watch results. There are over 3,000 shades to human hair—no dye expert can paint the hair so exquisitely as nature. One appears years younger. No shocking change: startle your friends—just a gradual change day by day so naturally not even an expert will detect Lea's. Any hair with a spark of life left springs into activity, and bald spots fade away. Thousands of exhaustive empirical tests prove this and every claim is backed up by the nationally known Lea Tonic Co.

If a reader desires to try Lea's Hair Tonic on guarantee of complete satisfaction, they should get a bottle at drug store or pin dollar bill to this and send to Lea Tonic Co., Brentwood, Md., for regular bottle, full directions, postage paid. Sent C. O. D. if desired—12c extra.—(adv.)

ARMY COTS, BLANKETS AVAILABLE FOR POOR

Secretary Hurley Takes Step To Relieve Distress of Unemployed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Secretary Hurley announced today that all available army cots and blankets would be placed at the disposal of unemployed to relieve acute distress this winter.

In the absence of legal authority to issue the army equipment, the war secretary said he would assume full responsibility.

The secretary's decision was contained in a telegram to Governor Emmerson, of Illinois.

"Your telegram November 6 received," the secretary's message to the governor said. "You ask that the army loan cots, blankets and other army equipment that may be indispensably necessary to assist in Chicago and throughout the state in coping with unemployment situation. You state that equipment furnished will be received and accounted for by your commission on unemployment.

"Letter to you under date November 4, 1930, by the acting secretary of war, states the law correctly. I am without legal authority to comply with your request. Under existing conditions, however, I assume the responsibility for authorizing the use of all available army cots and blankets without unduly depleting the supply for the armed forces and in your opinion necessary to relieve conditions of acute distress due to unemployment."

THREE TAX REFUNDS URGED BY TREASURY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The treasury today recommended to the joint congressional committee on internal revenue taxation three tax refunds aggregating $1,089,554. They were Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, New York city, $687,701 for over-assessment in 1923; St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Company, $317,869 for over-assessments in 1921 and 1922, and the Lehigh Portland Cement Company, Allentown, Pa., $83,984 for 1921 to 1923, inclusive.

ATTORNEY IS CHARGED WITH RECEIVING LOOT

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Franklin P. Ferguson, 41 years old, an attorney, was under arrest today while police sought $15,000 in bonds identified as part of the loot taken in the $1,000,000 daylight robbery of the Lincoln National bank of Lincoln, Neb., September 17.

Ferguson was arrested at the Harvard Club and charged with receiving stolen property yesterday after he attempted to sell the bonds through Jepson, Tremaine & Co., security brokers, in whose office he had desk room.

Emory University Placement Bureau Reveals Varied Tasks Performed by Students Impelled by Unusual Eagerness To Gain Education by Complete College Course

Agreeing, apparently, with Pope, that "A little learning is a dangerous thing," many students at Emory University, determined to achieve their aspirations for a full-course university education, are seizing every opportunity that will aid them to attain this objective. Regular jobs, odd jobs, unusual jobs, such as are pictured in the above series of photographs, are helping Emory men through their four-year courses, and the variety of the work ranges from "minding" babies to washing windows and killing sharks. At the upper left is depicted one of the more unusual type of tasks being undertaken by some of the Emory men—that of being companion and attendant to children of Atlanta families. In this photograph Vernon J. Rape, class of '32, is shown taking care of a group of children near the campus. Other Emory boys serve in similar capacities in other parts of the city. At the upper right is Ralph P. Miller, another '32 classman, of Nashville, Ga., doing his accepted chore of window washing. In this manner Emory boys are in many cases helping to pay their way through school. In the photograph at the lower left Rollin P. Gibbs, of Greensboro, N. C., class of '32 (extreme left), is shown selling north Georgia apples to students at the entrance to the Library building, while in the same picture at the extreme right is George Stone, University of Georgia graduate and first-year theology classman at Emory, who sells peanuts, tobacco pouches and other college souvenirs. At the lower right is T. J. Johnson, of Newport News, Va., journalism classman '34, who gets up early to fire furnaces in homes where he holds that job. Staff photos by Bill Mason.

BY WILLIAM O. KEY, JR.

Avidity for learning, so prominently associated in ancient literature with the youth of an earlier period of civilization, exists today in a degree as great, if not greater, than in days of yore, if indications observed in this city, which is the educational center of the southeast, are any criterion of the scholastic leaning of young men and women.

If Abraham Lincoln's dull day-time tasks of rail-splitting and his nocturnal lucubrations by the flickering, uncertain light of a handful of pine knots are to be considered one of his outstanding moral attributes; if the midnight oil extravagances of Horace Greeley and other pioneers of a day gone by are arguments to prove their eagerness and determination to glean somehow an education to fit them for a greater usefulness, then there are today other attributes creditable to this coming generation that belie the smirking observation of cynical critics who howlingly deplore the trend of the times among the youth of America.

Placed by Bureau.

Take, for instance, the activities incident to the placement bureau at Emory University—a department established only two years ago that is doing work of an inestimable value to students and prospective students of that institution. There are, no doubt, similar activities under way at other local and nearby colleges and institutions, but this story is predicated upon an interview with Leslie K. Patton, in charge of the placement, or "self-help" department of Emory, and will tend to show to what sacrifices students will expose and offer themselves, asking nothing in return but an opportunity to go through college.

No one will contradict the truth of the contention that it requires moral nerve for a young college man to offer his services in the capacity of nursemaid in order to eke out a pittance that smooths the way, financially, for his scholastic objective—the coveted diploma. No one will contest that courage is needed in the hazardous labors of slaying man-eating sharks for the modest returns paid by biology class heads. Yet Emory has men who are doing both those things, and more.

Must Earn Pay.

To get through college—that is the thing; and there is no job that an Emory man seeking the assistance of the placement bureau will not tackle, conscientiously, with the thought in mind to do an honest dollar's work for a dollar's pay. You may accept that in its literal sense, for that, exactly, is one of the requirements imposed by Dr. Patton's bureau before a student seeking part-time work is recommended for any job, no matter how crude the work.

Emory students serve as pallbearers. They give their life blood in transfusions to save debilitated patients at Wesley Memorial. They even submerge the natural collegiate pride so often exhibited among rival or near-rival institutions, and in at least two instances serve tables at boarding houses where Georgia Tech men lodge and eat. They become night watchmen; sing in church choirs; carry a paper route for The Constitution; take census for an Atlanta church; work in chain groceries on Saturdays and other rush days; fire furnaces, rake lawns—this business is beginning to pick up, by the way—read to blind students; and any number of other odd jobs that you probably would never have thought a college man would bother about.

Blind Student Aided.

W. R. Perdue, of Macon, a graduate of Lanier High school and a freshman at the local university, earns a bit from month to month by his devotion to a classmate who is almost wholly blind—W. A. Simpson, of 651 Hugh street, S. W., this city. Simpson is a graduate of Boys' High here and entered Emory with a splendid scholastic record but with the almost insurmountable obstacle of sightlessness. The placement bureau took an individual interest in Simpson's aspirations to achieve an A. B. degree and become a teacher in modern language or history. Both youths are taking Latin, biology and history, and their classes are so arranged that Perdue is able to give three hours a day to his blind classmate, who has had most of his textbooks translated into Braille. Perdue reads carefully the lessons and explains those portions of the text that are not at once clear to Simpson; and the blind student makes "notes" with a Braille machine in many cases. They are progressing excellently in their classes.

There are 11 placement students who are working regularly for the Georgia Tech Athletic Association as gate men during football games.

H. M. Patterson and Son, funeral directors, have made a practice of employing six Emory students as pallbearers, calling on the placement bureau on an average of about twice a month, paying them well for this service.

Eight Emory boys are being employed by the Peachtree Christian church in a community census now under way by the church, giving to them more than two weeks' work each.

Thirty other Emory students are serving prosaically as waiters in the tea rooms and university cafeteria, while ten others are employed in the reserve section of the Emory library. Ten others are working in the afternoons of Friday and Saturday each week for the A. & P. and Rogers' stores here.

Companions for Children.

J. E. Hix, freshman in the liberal arts class, is another student who earns money by helping a blind student, although in this instance the student is a member of Georgia Tech. Hix devotes two hours each day at this work.

And about those students who serve as companions to small children, there is J. D. Roan, sophomore in liberal arts, who daily minds the children of certain Atlantans on Ponce de Leon avenue. The children are fond of Roan and he minds them with all the attention of a maiden aunt, it is said.

Trawick Stubbs and Claude Quillian, seniors in liberal arts, are the lads who ventured out on the briny deeps off Savannah and the Gulf of Mexico catching and slaying sharks for the biology department of the university. Stubbs worked around Savannah, buying a truck and hauling his catches in to a central point where they were preserved and mounted, thence shipped to Emory. Quillian worked independently off the Gulf coast, using the same methods; and the head of the biology department declared the sharks caught were the best specimens Emory has ever had.

R. P. Gibbs, junior in liberal arts, who came here from Rutherford College, North Carolina, has built up quite a business on the campus and at football games peddling Georgia-grown apples and Florida oranges. He also is to be seen between classes in the dormitories with his apple and orange baskets, and he admits that he is doing right well, thank you, on the nickel trade.

W. O. Vernon, a freshman in liberal arts, is tutoring the 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Teague, 927 Oakdale road, every day. John N. Gibbs, a junior in liberal arts, who entered Emory after having experience as a stenographer with the Southeastern Express Company, has secured a position as secretary to Bishop Warren A. Candler, while himself preparing for the ministry.

Others Do Odd Jobs.

And any number of other students—shoveling coal, tending furnaces for their "keep;" raking lawns, washing windows and the like.

During the two years the placement bureau has been in operation it has been responsible for the placing of more than 300 students in jobs with a total of 86 concerns, and with earnings totaling $24,500. For the 1928-1929 term 152 students obtained jobs through the bureau with 41 concerns, receiving earnings of $11,600 from September through May. During the 1929-1930 term, September through May, 168 students were placed in paying positions with a total of 45 concerns, and earnings in the aggregate were $12,900. To date this term 90 students have been placed in paying positions.

NEW JAPANESE BOAT IS LAUNCHED AT KOBE

Only One More Cruiser Allowed Under Arms Treaty.

KOBE, Japan, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Maya, next to last of the 10,000-ton cruisers Japan may build within limitations of the London treaty was launched today at the Kawasaki dockyard in the presence of Admiral Prince Hiboyasu Fushimi, representative of the emperor.

The Chokai, being built at Nagasaki, is the one vessel unlaunched of the 12 making up the 108,000 tons of first class cruisers permitted Japan by the London agreement.

GAZAWAY FACES TRIAL IN SLAYING THURSDAY

Bryce Gazaway, charged with participation in the slaying of W. A. Stewart in a roadhouse near Lakewood park, will be the central figure in one of six murder cases set Saturday for trial in Fulton superior court this week. The other five death cases involve negroes.

The Gazaway trial is scheduled for Thursday before Judge E. E. Pomeroy. Meanwhile, the defendant was in jail after failure to make $10,000 bond, assessed after he was indicted Friday on an additional charge of robbery growing out of a recent holdup.

Other cases set Saturday for hearing this week include the trial of Mrs. B. K. Bryant, charged with embezzlement of $14,000 from the Hartsfield company, to be heard before Judge R. Earl Camp, of Dublin. The trial of J. C. Swanson, charged with the murder of Miss Helen Bryant, whose body was found floating in the waters of the Chattahoochee, was originally set for this week, but was removed from the docket at the request of the counsel for the defense.

STRUCK BY AUTO, MAN BADLY HURT

Stepping from the sidewalk at Fair street and Park avenue early Saturday night, J. C. W. McCord, 71, of 652 Woodward avenue, was seriously injured when he walked into the fender of an automobile, according to police reports, and received a broken left arm and left leg, as well as severe bruises and lacerations.

The automobile, police reported, was being driven east on Fair street by D. C. Yancey, of 328 Dalton street, who declared that the elderly pedestrian, apparently not being aware of the presence of the machine, ran into the fender and was hurled to the ground with terrific impact. Yancey, against whom a charge of reckless driving was made by policemen investigating, contended that the accident was unavoidable.

HAWKS DEBATES NEW YORK START

HAVANA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Possibility that the attempt of Captain Frank Hawks to establish a new record between Havana and New York would again be postponed loomed today as the flyer remained uncertain whether he would take off tomorrow morning as scheduled.

If weather conditions are favorable the captain intends to leave shortly after 5 a. m. tomorrow, refuel at Miami, Fla., and again at Columbia, S. C., and try to be in New York by 1 p. m. in the afternoon.

MAN KILLS WOMAN AND WOUNDS SELF

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Jealousy, police reported, caused James H. Compton, 38, to kill Mrs. Evelyn Simpkins, 38, and probably fatally wound himself early today.

Mrs. Simpkins was killed by a bullet through the head despite an attempt of her daughter, Charlotte, 19, to stop the shooting.

CHANTERS OF YAARAB GIVE CONCERT TODAY

Noted Singers To Offer Program at Mosque This Afternoon.

Yaarab temple chanters, famed throughout North America as one of the pre-eminent singing organizations of Shrinedom, will appear in concert at 3 o'clock this afternoon in the auditorium of Shrine mosque under the direction of Noble Frank A. Cundell, with Noble Joe Ragan, dean of Georgia organists, as guest artist. The entire chanters ensemble of 30 voices will take place in presenting the following program:

Tenor: "Hills of Home" (Fox). "Invocation to Life" (Spross), by Noble Clarence Wall.

Armistice Day—A tribute to those who made the supreme sacrifice: "Soldier Rest" (Scott), trumpeter, Noble Roy Lee.

Organ: "There is No Death" (O'Hara), Noble Joseph Ragan.

While on pilgrimages to and from Imperial council meetings Yaarab temple chanters have appeared in concert before large audiences in many cities of the United States, Canada and Mexico, and three imperial potentates of the Shrine have designated them as "imperial chanters."

BOARD PROBING 'REDS' MEETS HERE SATURDAY

With the special committee of the United States house of representatives reopening hearing Monday into activities of communist organizations in various sections of the country, Atlanta civic leaders were advised from Washington Saturday that the committee will hold a session in this city next Saturday as the result of recent arrests of alleged "red" agitators.

The communist committee's new series of investigations will open Monday at Cleveland, with representatives of the police department and the reserve officers' training corps of that city appearing at witnesses. The first series of investigations was terminated in Boston last Friday, and it was decided to reopen the investigation with meetings in other cities. After Cleveland, the committee will hear testimony in Chattanooga, Birmingham and Atlanta.

Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York, chairman of the committee, then will designate a sub-committee to go to New Orleans for a brief hearing before leaving for Mexico City to seek documents seized by Mexican authorities which are said to reveal activities of communists in the United States.

GOOD DEMOCRAT, WHTELY ASSERTS

Alex Whitley, on the ticket which fought Paul S. Etheridge, William L. Gilbert and Walter C. Hendrix for county commissioners' posts in the general state election Tuesday, Saturday issued a statement congratulating the winners and declaring he is a good democrat.

Text of the statement follows:

"In the clean, efficient and economical administration of the governmental affairs of our county they shall have my full and unselfish support as a private citizen.

"At a mass meeting held at the Atlanta theater I was nominated, by the people, as an independent democratic candidate, to oppose Mr. Etheridge and Dr. Gilbert. In this connection I permitted the use of my name in the campaign that followed, but did not personally solicit a single vote. Therefore, I am gratefully appreciative of the thousands of votes cast in my favor, and thank most sincerely those who so loyally supported me. For those who conscientiously opposed me I hold no unkind thoughts, for it was a right and privilege I freely grant them.

"In conclusion, let me reiterate that I stand for undefiled Jeffersonian democracy and all the principles and ideals the term implies, for white supremacy and preservation of the white primary and shall ever oppose those who would pervert these great principles to personal gain and profit and thus corrupt and destroy the very foundation of the democracy they pretend to preserve."

WOMEN TO HEAR RUTH BRYAN OWEN

Ruth Bryan Owen, said to be almost as brilliant an orator as her silver-tongued father, William Jennings Bryan, was formerly, is to be in Atlanta November 26 to speak under the auspices of the Atlanta League of Women Voters.

The congresswoman from Florida will speak at the Wesley Memorial church at 8:15 o'clock Wednesday night, November 26, on the subject, "This Business of Being a Congresswoman." She is being brought to Atlanta as one of the two outstanding speakers to be selected by the Atlanta League of Women Voters in an effort to stimulate interest in politics among Atlanta women.

The other speaker was Rennie Smith, member of the British parliament, who spoke here in October.

OHIO'S NEXT GOVERNOR STARTS HUNTING TRIP

MARIETTA, Ohio, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Governor-elect George White slipped away from his home here today 24 hours ahead of schedule to start a ten days' hunting trip on an isolated island on the coast of Virginia.

The democratic governor-elect left here for Parkersburg, W. V., and Princeton, N. J., where he will visit his sons, George, Jr., and Robert, students at Princeton University and will be their guests at a football game.

KEEN INTEREST SHOWN IN RACES FOR COUNCIL

Eleven Vacated Posts Will Be Filled in Special Voting.

With only 10 days left before the close of entries in the borough general election December 3, interest began to be shown in the campaign, at which officials to fill 11 vacated posts in general council will be selected..

COUNCILMAN J. W. WEAVER.

Formal announcement Saturday of W. C. Stradley, who had entered as alderman of the seventh ward to fill the unexpired term of W. Guy Dobbs, that he cannot be a candidate left only 41 entries.

Mr. Stradley declared that pressure of business world prevent him giving the post the time it requires even though he were elected.

At the same time J. W. Weaver, seeking the unexpired term of former Councilman W. Chester McLendon, of the second ward, and Roy L. Craycraft, an aspirant for the same post, and Mrs. E. N. (Mother) Gibbs, first woman who ever sought a councilmanic seat in Atlanta, issued campaign statements.

Entries for the general election must be filed with Mayor I. N. Ragsdale at least 15 days before the election. The date of the election is December 3 and entries close November 18.

"I am now holding a temporary appointment as Mr. McLendon's successor," Mr. Weaver said, "and am offering for the entire unexpired term. I shall endeavor to complete the term with honesty and integrity. I am in thorough accord with the policies of the incoming administration, and will do all I can to make Atlanta a better and bigger city."

"Believing that officials of integrity and honesty should be elected to borough posts and that they should serve their constituencies instead of promoting their own selfish interests, I have offered for councilman from the second ward," Mr. Craycraft said.

"I stand for a clean, economical administration with no factionalism or nepotism in government, a better park system and police department, better school teachers, a revision of the registration and election laws."

"For 15 years I have been interested in politics in Atlanta, but always in supporting other candidates," Mrs. Gibbs said. "I now am coming to the electorate for the first time in my own behalf. I am especially desirous of winning to show what a woman can do for the benefit of the borough and government. I shall endeavor to be a good public servant."

EDITORS ARRIVE AT SEA ISLAND

Special Train Brings Group to Georgia for A. N. P. A. Convention.

BRUNSWICK, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Editors and publishers from every section of the country arrived at Sea Island beach today and tonight and many others will arrive tomorrow for the convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which will open Monday morning and continue through Wednesday.

The first large delegation arrived here at 3 o'clock traveling in special Pullmans and at once went to the Cloister on Sea Island, headquarters for the convention. Included in this party, who arrived in three Pullmans, were a number of prominent New York and New England editors. Others came in by automobile and otherwise. Among the leading members being present tonight were the following:

All trains arriving in the city tomorrow will bring special Pullmans from practically every section of the country, and when the convention opens Monday morning it is expected that the attendance will be one of the largest to have been present at a fall meeting in many years.

For the entertainment of the visitors tomorrow the Sea Island Company has arranged an interesting program to include golf, riding, swimming, fishing, trap shooting, etc., and a historical tour of the island and St. Simons, where many points of interest will be visited.

In the afternoon for those who do not desire to engage in the various sports there will be a tea and musicale in the lounge of the Cloister. At night there will be negro spirituals by the Sapelo plantation singers.

MT. VERNON INSTITUTE THREATENED BY FIRE

MOUNT VERNON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Brewton-Parker Institute was threatened by fire early Saturday.

During the night a mattress in one of the rooms of the boys' dormitory was found ablaze. The burning mattress was thrown out a window after being saturated with water.

At 5 a. m. passersby found that the fire had broken out anew from the mattress. An alarm was given and there was only slight damage.

Excitement from this had hardly died down when it was discovered that the house occupied by D. A. Fountain was on fire. The residence was completely destroyed. The owner is H. A. Simpson.

UNIVERSITY TO HONOR BEST LAW STUDENTS

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—The University of Georgia law student who makes the highest marks in his studies each year will have his name engraved upon a silver plaque, presented to the law school by Sigma Delta Kappa, national law fraternity, soon to be installed here, according to G. W. Langford, Calhoun, president of the senior law class.

The faculty picks the student who receives this honor. Duncan Graham, McRae, was chosen for 1929-30. He entered the Lumpkin Law school last year after graduating from Emory, where he held many honors. Robert Bruce, Brunswick, and Max Rosenthal, Savannah, were second and third.

The plaque will hang in the law building.

No Alimony Money, Roman Is Jailed

ROME, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Homer Sutton is in jail and unless the courts relent he faces the prospect of staying their for some time—if not forever.

Sutton was placed behind the bars because he did not pay $4 a week alimony awarded his wife for the support of their 14-year-old daughter.

Unemployment, said Sutton, along with an illness prevented him from meeting the alimony. Now he is in jail, has no money and since they have not started paying folks for serving jail sentences he sees no prospects of making any.

CREDIT ASSOCIATION INDORSED AT DAWSON

Terrell County Business Association Favors Project at Meeting.

DAWSON, Ga., Nov. 8.—A credit association for Dawson was unanimously indorsed at a session of the Terrell County Business Association, here this week.

Secretary R. R. Marlin presided, and outlined plans for the new organization. He gave a report of the committee named to investigate the manner in which the Albany Credit Association functions, and announced that Mrs. Clara B. Conway, of Albany, had met with the committee, and presented valuable information regarding the routine to be followed.

W. K. Norton gave a resume of the work done by the former credit association and the moral effect of such a project. Carl Couric, speaking for the wholesale merchants, declared this to be the best proposition for a town. J. H. Collier, Dr. C. R. McKemie, W. R. Wall, D. F. English and others, expressed themselves as favoring this feature.

A committee composed of W. R. Wall, W. K. Norton, W. F. English, J. H. Collier and C. J. Newman was appointed to name officers and directors of the association and work out details. County Agent Dallas Spurlock, representing the committee on agriculture for the Kiwanis Club, was present and outlined a farm program which the Terrell County Business Association was asked to sponsor. The body went on record as unanimously indorsing the plan.

INTEREST CENTERED IN BROWNING CASE

VALDOSTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—With the opening Monday of the November term of the Lowndes county superior court, interest is centered in the trial of five white men for the alleged murder of W. H. Browning and his wife near this city during the summer.

In court house circles there is a rumor today that in the case of Homer Padgett, the defense is likely to enter a plea of insanity. Padgett confessed his part in the conspiracy for the murder of the Brownings and has since repudiated this confession. Those who are in touch with tre preparations for the defense state that the insanity plea will perhaps be used.

Up to this time there are 10 attorneys of Georgia and Florida lined up for the defense of the 10 men, though this group will be divided up in various ways during the trial. The list of attorneys now include A. B. Rowe, E. O. Grimes and J. A. Stewart, of Bradentown, Fla.; Copeland and Dukes, of Valdosta; Burton L. Weston, of Quitman; Hamilton Burch, of Valdosta; John B. Odum and Ernest Wilcox, of Valdosta.

To some extent, from the standpoint of defense, the interests of all lie in the same direction, though the Florida attorneys and Copeland and Dukes primarily represent Austin Westberry, it is understood.

Solicitor-General G. C. Spurlin, of this city, and Edward Stephens, of Atlanta, assistant to the Fulton county solicitor-general, will handle the prosecution of the five defendants.

Among the summonses issued for witnesses, sheriffs of Thomas, Brooks, Mitchell, Dougherty, Colquitt, Worth and Tift counties have been included. The defendants before the indictments were returned were kept at times in the county jails as listed, and the defense wants the officers and the jail records brought here for the trial.

TWO PERSONS HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

CORDELE, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—J. E. Ohern, 65, and a grandchild, 4, are in a local hospital as a result of an automobile wreck near Worth, Ga., Saturday. Mr. Ohern was returning from a country trip to Ashburn when his car turned over on the National highway after being struck by another automobile. The elder man has a fractured skull. The child has a lacerated face. A son who accompanied them was not hurt.

Georgia Students Nominated for Rhodes Scholarships

WESLEY T. HANSON, Smyrna, Ga. | THOMAS H. LOKEY, Atlanta. | MILTON P. JARNAGIN, JR., Athens. | CLAUDE BOND, JR., Toccoa.

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Nomination of four University of Georgia students by the local committee on Rhodes scholarships, has just been announced.

The names of these students will be presented to the state committee, which will consider them along with the recommendations of other Georgia colleges. The state committee will nominate two students to the regional committee, both of whom may come from the same institution.

The regional committee representing Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Florida will consider the recommendations of committees from each state and will in turn name four to receive the Rhodes scholarships in this section.

ILLNESS OF JUROR FORCES MISTRIAL

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—One of the jurors trying Anthony Robinson on a charge of automobile theft became ill today and the case which the state had built on fingerprint evidence was declared a mistrial.

The jury had been out six hours when the court was informed one of its members was ill.

The state charged Robinson stole an automobile from D. I. Livingston here last May. Experts, including Captain M. J. Wright, of the Atlanta police department, testified that fingerprints similar to Robinson's were found on the machine.

Robinson denied he was in the vicinity the night the car was stolen. His fingerprints were taken two days after the machine was reported stolen when he was arrested at the Seaboard Air Line shops here.

Court officials said the case was the first in criminal court history here in which the state attempted to convict a defendant entirely on fingerprint evidence.

LAMAR GARDEN CLUB TO SPONSOR CONTEST

BARNESVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—A county-wide contest for more beautiful yards and gardens for 1931 will be conducted in Lamar county by the Garden Club of Barnesville, of which Mrs. J. M. Rogers is president.

UNIVERSITY R. O. T. C. CHANGES QUARTERS

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—The military department of the University of Georgia changed its quarters this week from New College dormitory to a new building on Baldwin street.

The new military building, financed by the Georgia Co-operative Association, was erected at an approximate cost of $10,000. It is a two-story structure and is built of red brick. There are four classrooms in the building, a storeroom, an indoor rifle range, and a large office for the professor of military science and tactics and his staff.

STORE IN MACON ROBBED OF $57

MACON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Two men entered the Rogers grocery store on Napier avenue here early Saturday night, covered C. E. Ouzts, manager, and a small group of negroes with a gun, and escaped with $57 from the cash register.

"They just came in," Mr. Ouzts explained, "and one of them threw a gun on us, while the other rang the register."

The robbers held up the group, consisting of the manager and three negroes, and backed out of the door with the money. They were described as between 30 and 35, both white, one wearing a brown and the other a blue suit.

CHATTOOGA SCHOOLS TO OPEN MONDAY

LYERLY, Ga., Nov. 8.—Rural schools of Chattooga county will open the fall term Monday, according to Miss Maude Sewell, county school superintendent. The board set the late opening date in order to allow the children to help harvest the crops before starting to school.

The schools of the county will observe American education week November 10 to 16. The program for the week follows:

Monday, November 10—Theme: "The Schools and the Enrichment of Human Life."

Tuesday, November 11.—Theme: "How the Schools Promote Patriotism and Human Understanding."

Wednesday, November 12.—Theme: "The Schools of Yesterday."

Thursday, November 13.—Theme: "The Schools of Today."

Friday, November 14.—Theme: "What the Schools Have Helped the Individual to Achieve."

Saturday, November 15.—Theme: "What the Schools Have Helped America to Achieve."

Sunday, November 16.—Theme: "The Schools of Tomorrow and the Future America."

ROAD PAVING PLANNED IN WAYCROSS SECTION

WAYCROSS, Ga., Nov. 8.—The announcement by the state highway board as to the paving contracts to be let November 25, contains four contracts that are of interest to Waycross.

These four include a contract to complete the paving of the Waycross-Brunswick highway; a contract for paving a portion of the Waycross-Macon highway that lies in Telfair county; paving of the Bainbridge-Waycross-Savannah highway between Cairo and Bainbridge, and paving of bridge approaches in Atkinson county on the Waycross-Tifton highway.

Prof. Stone Ends 40th Year As Education Board Head

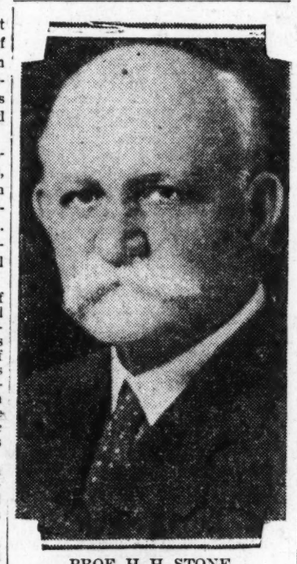

OXFORD, Ga., Nov. 8.—Prominent education leaders from all sections of north Georgia attended the celebration here Friday of the completion of Professor H. H. Stone's fortieth year as president of the Newton county board of education.

Glowing tributes were paid Professor Stone in a number of addresses, which included "Commemorating an Anniversary," by Professor J. O. Martin, state supervisor; the Rev. W. R. Branham, Professor C. G. Adams, former county school superintendent, and Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Professor Stone was a member of the class of 1880, Emory College, and became a member of the Emory faculty after graduation. In 1890 he was made chairman of the county board of education and he has filled these places of trust and responsibility continuously since then with eminent devotion and success. To him first came the vision of consolidation of the public schools and transportation of scholars in Newton county.

Professor Stone has never missed a meeting of the board, in Covington, unless from sickness, and then the board would almost invariably come to him at his home in Oxford.

Among Atlantans at the celebration were Dr. M. L. Duggan, state school superintendent; J. O. Martin, Dr. M. L. Brittain, Dr. G. R. Glenn, Dr. N. H. Ballard, former state school superintendent; Bishop Warren A. Candler, PROF. H. H. STONE.

former president of Emory College, and Major R. J. Guinn, former assistant state school superintendent.

FRASER RE-ELECTED HEAD OF PRESBYTERY

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Major J. B. Fraser, of Flemington, was re-elected president of the organization known as "The Men of the Church" of the Savannah presbytery at the annual meeting in the Flemington Presbyterian church. Dr. T. S. Clay, of Savannah, was elected vice president, and A. H. Perkins, of the Thunderbolt Presbyterian church, was elected secretary.

About 125 attended the afternoon and evening sessions, nine churches being represented and about 15 cities and towns.

The organization accepted an invitation from the Thunderbolt Presbyterian church to hold its annual meeting next fall at Thunderbolt.

One of the big features of the evening session was a venison supper served by the ladies of the church, a 150-pound buck deer having been bagged within a half mile of the Flemington church.

COLUMBUS PREPARES FOR ROTARY MEETING

COLUMBUS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—An opportunity to witness the military maneuvers at Fort Benning will be extended Rotarians who attend the inter-city Rotary meeting here November 13, officials of the Columbus club said Saturday.

The maneuvers will be among the largest ever held in the south since the war, and local Rotarians said most of the morning of the one-day meeting will be devoted to witnessing the demonstration.

All Georgia clubs and several Alabama clubs have been invited to the meeting. The Rotarians will leave here at 8:15 a. m. and will remain at Fort Benning until 3 p. m. Besides witnessing the maneuvers from 9 until 11:30 a. m., they will hold a business session at the fort theater and then go to the horse show grounds for a barbecue.

Golf matches will be held at the Columbus Country Club from 3 p. m. until 5:30 p. m., and then the Rotarians will be guests at a banquet.

Georgia Agriculture Briefs

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—P. H. Ward, of Thomas county, has reported to the State College of Agriculture that his county will probably plant about 40,000 pounds of Austrian winter peas and 8,000 to 10,000 pounds of vetches and clover this fall.

Hall said after legumes, corn yields 15 to 20 bushels more per acre than that which does not follow legumes.

Co-operative hog sales, the State College reports show, have mounted during October this year to nine cars with 128,825 pounds of meat bring $10,207.21 to the farmers.

J. R. Vaughn, of Montgomery county, reported that on October 25, the 4-H club boys and girls of that county gathered for an "Achievement Day" program. The club exhibits were visited by approximately 100 persons.

A successful cattle show, through the co-operation of the dairy committee, was held at the Cobb County Fair this year, according to the report of R. L. Vansant, of that county. The fair poultry show, Vansant said, was one of the best ever held in that county.

J. C. Scarborough, of Crawford county, has reported that much interest is being taken in winter cover crops and approximately 7,000 pounds of Austrian peas, hairy vetch and crimson clover, bur clover and alfalfa seed are being planted in that county this fall.

R. E. Miller, of Lowndes county, has reported to the State College of Agriculture that there will be a heavy planting of winter cover crops in that county this fall. Co-operative hog sales, he said, brought $3,458.25 for three cars during October.

The most successful county fair in history has been reported in Walker county by R. E. Davis. The educational features were outstanding, he said, and the agricultural exhibits of a better quality and arrangement that ever seen before in the 21 years the fair has been in operation.

Sixty-five per cent of the farmers of Talbot county are using soy beans this fall as a hay and soil-building crop, J. V. Webb reported. The milk route established in the county during October has grown from 40 gallons per day to 170 gallons.

T. R. Powell, of Lincoln county, reported that farmers in that county were seeding the largest acreage in small grain this year of any previous year.

E. P. McGee, of DeKalb county, has reported that vetch, crimson clover and rye that were seeded for soil, looks well on all plays where it has been sowed. The alfalfa crop is showing a new growth and the warm weather is expected to further improve it.

Approximately 450 acres have been seeded in Austrian peas and vetch this fall in Telfair county, L. R. Lanier reported. Five demonstrations were given in the culling of poultry with an attendance of 25 farmers.

Professor A. F. Gannon, of the poultry division of the Georgia State College of Agriculture, urges farmers to start thinking about the coming hatching season.

Especial attention, he says, should be paid to the cockerel, one of the most vain male creatures in creation.

"Select them for vigor," he advises, and continues that looks do not make the rooster.

"No matter how fine a cockerel may be in type and color pattern, he is worthless as a breeder if he lacks vigor.

"His head should be broad with no tendency toward crow headiness. His face should be lean and clear with bright, protruding eyes; his beak should be short and well curved and his comb should be neat and trim.

JAMES W. OGLESBY, SR., SUCCUMBS IN QUITMAN

QUITMAN, Ga., Nov. 8.—James W. Oglesby, Sr., pioneer railroad, naval stores and sawmill operator, died at his home here tonight after an illness of several weeks.

Mr. Oglesby is survived by his widow, three sons, James W. Jr., Pope and Hugh, and a number of other relatives in Georgia and Florida.

More than a quarter of a century ago he came to this section from North Georgia with his brother, the late Zene W. Oglesby, and together they amassed a fortune in timber and sawmill operations. It was through Mr. Oglesby's leadership that the South Georgia railroad, a locally owned railroad, was built from Adele, Ga., to Hampton Springs, Fla., of which he has been president continuously.

He was also president of the Association of Short Line Railroads, of which he was also instrumental in its organization.

Conspicious among his public benefactions was the gift of $10,000 to the building of the Wilbur Oglesby hall at Brenau college as a memorial to his son, Wilbur, who lost his life in the late war. He owned White Sulphur Springs at Gainesville, Ga., and Hampton Springs, Fla.

The funeral of Mr. Ogleshy will be held in Quitman Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

New Health Officer.

LOUISVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—The Jefferson county health board has named a new health officer, Dr. Bryson, of Gainesville, Ga. Dr. Bryson takes the place of Dr. W. K. Stewart, who resigned in September to engage in private practice at Rockmart. Dr. Bryson has already arrived in the county here and has taken active charge of his duties here. Dr. J. R. Lewis, Dr. S. C. Ketchin and M. R. Little, Jr., county school superintendent, constitute the health board of this county.

Brothers Reunited After Long Separation

WAYCROSS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A tourist drove up to the Waycross fire department here and asked one of the firemen:

"Can you tell me where I can find H. C. Thackston? I heard once that he lived here."

"I am H. C. Thackston," the chief of the Waycross fire department answered.

"And I," said the stranger, "am Smith Thackston, of New London, Conn., your brother." Embraces followed.

The brothers saw each other last in Havana, Cuba, when both were in the navy.

RIVERSIDE AIR CORPS ENROLLS 40 STUDENTS

Six Periods of Academic Work Comprise Classroom Instruction.

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—Under the tutelage of Captain C. W. Stevenson, graduate of the United States Naval Academy and a service trained pilot, 40 Riverside Academy cadets here have enrolled in the recently organized Riverside air corps, it was announced here Saturday.

Six periods of academic work in the mornings comprise the classroom instruction while four afternoons a week will be devoted by Captain Stevenson to practical work when the students will dismantle and assemble motors. A wind tunnel, an airplane, four powerful airplane motors and other school equipment has been installed. Many small flying models of popular airplanes are scheduled for construction later in the year, it was said.

Cadets who have become actively "air-minded" may be recognized by the insignia of the air corps, which is a pair of wings worn on the left breast of their shirts and blouses and small gold wings on the collar of their uniforms.

One of the cadets enrolled, Jean P. Holmes, is already a licensed pilot, holding a governmental private license issued by the United States department of commerce. He has been elected by the cadets as their cadet officer.

The organization of the Riverside air corps was said to be the first of its kind among Georgia's prep schools. Later in the year the students will visit the Georgia School of Technology in Atlanta and inspect the course in aeronautical engineering.

DRY AGENTS ACTIVE IN BARTOW COUNTY

CARTERSVILLE, Nov. 8.—Three white men were arrested and held for action by the grand jury and four large stilling outfits were destroyed as the result of a series of raids just completed by officers from the sheriff's office, assisted by Special United States Officer Gordon Rogers.

J. L. Fowler, 60 years old; Herman Hill, 21 years old, and Talmadge Young, 32, were caught at the stills, officers say.

One thousand gallons of beer were poured out at one place, 30 gallons of whisky and 2,000 gallons of beer went down the creek at the third stop, while the fourth place raided yielded 1,500 gallons of beer.

ANDERSON, VEREEN ON COCHRAN PROGRAM

COCHRAN, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Armistice Day and Farm Day programs are to be merged in a celebration at the Middle Georgia College here on Tuesday, in which farmers and businessmen of Bleckley and adjoining counties are to take part. W. T. Anderson, editor of the Macon Telegraph, and W. J. Vereen, of Moultrie, are among the speakers on the program.

OFFICERS CITED FOR CONTEMPT

Defense Attorney Denied Consultation With Milledgeville Trio, Charge.

MACON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Attacking the alleged "third degree" methods of Bibb county officers as "barbarous" and characteristic of the dark ages, C. B. McCullar, Milledgeville lawyer, Saturday took legal action to have two women and a man, charged with murder, removed from the county jail here to the Baldwin county jail, jurisdiction of their alleged crime.

The prisoners, Mrs. Inez Temples, Mrs. May Crooms and Robert Seay, were brought to the Bibb county jail Thursday morning by Sheriff W. J. Haynie, of Baldwin county, shortly after their arrest on warrants charging them with the murder of 13-year-old Ed Horton. McCullar says that he has been retained as their counsel, but has been denied a conference with them.

On McCullar's petition this morning, Judge J. B. Park, of the Ocmulgee circuit, signed a rule nisi directing Sheriff Haynie and Sheriff James R. Hicks, Jr., of Bibb county, to show cause before him at Monticello Tuesday afternoon why the prisoners should not be removed to Baldwin county, and why he should not be allowed, as their counsel, to confer with them in making arrangements for an early commitment hearing.

The petition was served on Sheriff Hicks here by Coroner Martin J. Thompson, of Bibb county.

McCullar said in his petition that it is his understanding and belief that Sheriff Haynie "carried the prisoners to the Bibb county jail for the purpose of having a group of notorious detectives or purported investigators endeavor to wrest or force some kind of a confession from each of the defendants."

Bibb Officers Attacked.

The attorney charged that "the tactics of the said group (the Bibb county officers) are to endeavor, by the use of cruel, inhumane, torturous and repulsive methods, to make some sort of alleged confession or to give any sort of alleged information that will enure to the glory and reputation of these detectives."

He charged too, that the "alleged detectives will use any method within their power to torture, browbeat, intimidate, or force from these clients involuntary statements and that if possible said group will use whatever torture and pressure necessary upon these clients to make some sort of a false statement in order to get relief from their torture."

McCullar asserts that he is willing for any duly qualified officer of Baldwin county to question the clients, but objects vigorously to Bibb county officers "torturing them."

Since they were brought here Thursday, the three prisoners have been held incommunicado. Officers, however, have been authorized to see them from time to time. Sheriff Haynie said tonight that he had not seen the defendants since they were placed by him in the local jail, but said that he had authorized Sheriff Hicks to question them.

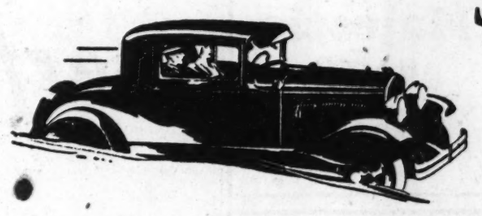

Officers suspect the two women and the man as being parties to the slaying of the young boy, it was said, because the latter had been subpoenaed to testify for the state in a case charging the Temples woman and Seay with a statutory offense. The young boy was a nephew of the Temples woman. He had been living with her since the death of his mother seven years ago.

The body of the youth was found early this week with a silk stocking tied around his neck.

PRESCRIPTION for Constipation tested by 47 YEARS' PRACTICE

THERE'S one way to help the bowels that is safe, and sure. It empties them of all the poisonous waste without doing any harm. Its action is thorough but so gentle that it never causes the least discomfort.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin always does the work, and it leaves you feeling fine. You can take it freely, reducing the amount as the bowels grow stronger.

If you feel sluggish, can't eat, have dull headaches, feel tired, weak and run-down, this famous doctor's prescription will help get rid of the waste that is probably clogging your system. If the children have coated tongue or bad breath; if they seem bilious, fretful, upset, give them a little Syrup Pepsin, too. It tastes so good they'll like it, and it can't hurt them. Its gentle aid is ideal for women.

By taking a little at those times when they are most likely to be constipated, they can avoid much discomfort. Its mild but thorough action commends it to older men and women, too.

Dr. Caldwell specialized on the bowels. His prescription of laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other ingredients has been tested by 47 years' practice. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take some next time you feel the need. Then you'll know why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is the family laxative of millions.

GEORGIA EDUCATORS TO HOLD CONVENTION

Regional Meet of G. E. A. To Convene in Gainesville on Thursday.

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—The regional convention of the Georgia Educational Association will convene here Thursday at 10 o'clock with an address of welcome by W. P. Martin, the superintendent of the Gainesville public schools. It is expected that 1,500 educators will attend.

Speaking will be held at the Brenau auditorium. J. L. Yaden, president of the Georgia association, will respond to the address of welcome.

As a pre-convention event, Dr. Willis A. Sutton, president of N. E. A., of Atlanta, will deliver an address at the First Baptist church, Wednesday night.

WAYCROSS TO BE HOST TO CONFERENCE TUESDAY.

WAYCROSS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Waycross has completed preparations for the entertainment of the regional conference of the Georgia Education Association Tuesday, Armistice Day.

Ralph Newton, superintendent of the city schools, has received acceptances from practically every county in this section indicating that both the county and the city school teachers will be present. It is expected that the attendance will go well over the 2,000 mark.

The superintendents of county schools and of city schools, the principals, the teachers and members of the city and county boards of education are asked to be present at the conference. It being Armistice Day many of the schools will be observing a holiday.

At the morning session Q. L. Garrett, president of the Waycross board of education, will deliver the welcome address and the response will be by J. L. Yaden, of Moultrie, president of the Georgia Education Association. The speakers for the morning will be Hon. Howard Coffin, of Sea Island, prominent capitalist, and Dr. Belmont Farley, editor of the Journal of the National Education Association.

At the afternoon session the speakers will be Dr. R. H. Powell, president of the Georgia State Woman's College at Valdosta, and Dr. Walter R. Siders, secretary of the World's Federation of Education Association.

At the night session the speaker will be Dr. S. V. Sanford, dean of the University of Georgia.

AUSTELL BOY SCOUTS PRESENT PAGEANT

AUSTELL, Ga., Nov. 8.—The boys of Austell put on a pageant, "Eight Ages of Scouting," at the school auditorium.

Miss Kinney, expression teacher, read the pageant and the parts were enacted by members of the scout troop.

Mayor Jackson and Mrs. Jackson, Steve Berry and Will Jones, together with Scout Master Van Landingham, also appeared in the presentation. Special music was furnished by Mrs. Johnston, music teacher.

W. A. Dobson, chief scout executive of the Atlanta council, was speaker of the evening. Mr. Collar, former Austell chairman of scout committee, outlined the obligations of parents toward the scout movement. Will Jones, the new chairman, made an interesting talk accepting the chairmanship for the coming year. D. C. Peterson was introduced as new scout master for the new year.

Mr. Dobson, in his speech, gave the different things which scouting does for the boy, using slides to show the actual happenings in camp.

The Rev. Mr. Van Landingham was presented with a gift as a token of the community's appreciation of his work with the scouts.

DEAN SANFORD TO SPEAK AT WAYCROSS, ROME

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Dean S. V. Sanford of the University of Georgia, has accepted the invitation of J. L. Yaden, president of the Georgia Education Association, to make the second and fourth of a series of four talks over the state sponsored by the association. New 305-Day Butter Fat Record Established by Georgia Cow

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A new butter fat record for her class over a period of 305 days, has been set here by Imperial Estella's Girl, a jersey cow owned by Charles A. Baker, of Bolton.

The official production record for this cow was 97 pounds of butter fat greater than the previous mark over the designated period of 305 days.

The State College of Agriculture report said the cow began her test at the age of one year and eleven months. She produced 8,112 ponds of milk containing 517.85 pounds of butter fat, which is equivalent to 609.23 pounds of butter or an average of practically two pounds of butter per day during the test period. A living calf was carried 222 days while the record was being made.

The test was supervised by the state college in co-operation with the American Jersey Cattle Club and in recognition of the feat the owner has been awarded a silver medal by the Jersey Club.

Pomona's Brighteyes, a jersey cow owned by J. C. Hunt, of Valdosta, has recently completed an official record of 11,289 pounds of milk containing 627.48 pounds of butter fat in 305 days, carrying a living calf 203 days during the test period.

This excellent record has qualified Brighteyes for the award of a gold medal by the Jersey Cattle Club. This test was also supervised by the State College of Agriculture.

WORKER IS KILLED WHEN CRANE FALLS

BLYTHE, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—C. T. Davis, of Vidette, Ga., section foreman of the Georgia and Florida railroad, was killed and a negro and another white man suffered severe injuries late Saturday when the crane of a Georgia railroad wrecker broke at the base as they worked to clear a derailment.

All three men were pinned underneath the crane.

M. L. Horne, of Augusta, foreman of the wrecker, suffered a broken leg and internal injuries.

Willie Watkins, negro, also had a broken leg and internal hurts.

The men were putting back onto the tracks four freight cars derailed early this morning. No one was hurt in the derailment.

AUGUSTA METHODISTS URGE PASTOR'S RETURN

Resolutions Ask Reappointment of Rev. G. M. Eakes at St. John Church.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—Resolutions have been adopted by the official board of the St. John Methodist church, south, here, urging the return of their present pastor, the Rev. G. M. Eakes, who has served the church for the past four years.

St. John has been called the birthplace of bishops in the Methodist church, for among those who have served this church and have since become bishops were Bishops Asbury, Pierce, Candler, Dubose and Dickey.

The resolutions adopted are as follows:

"Whereas, our pastor, the Rev. G. M. Eakes, is closing his fourth year of service with St. John church, a period during which the church has made marked progress, and

"Whereas, the Rev. Mr. Eakes, through his official administration, wise counsel and sympathetic leadership, has endeared himself to our people, and has led our church to a commanding position in the religious life of our city and has placed it in the ranks of the leading churches of the North Georgia conference, and

"Whereas, our church has just reached the point where it is taking a forward step in the religious education of childhood, youth and adults, and has employed a director of religious education to work with the pastor in carrying out an advanced program of activities; therefore be it

"Resolved, that we respectfully request our presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Clark, to present to Bishop John M. Moore and his cabinet this resolution, asking for the return and appointment of the Rev. Mr. Eakes to St. John church for the coming conference year, believing that it will be for the best interests of our beloved church, both locally and abroad. We are now ready for an advancement along all lines of work and feel that Brother Eakes' continued leadership will be a large factor in the successful outcome of our plans.

"This request for Brother Eakes' return has the united indorsement of the official board and membership of the church.

"Respectfully submitted,

"THE OFFICIAL BOARD OF ST. JOHN METHODIST CHURCH."

YOUTHS FACE TRIAL IN WOMAN'S DEATH

MILLEN, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Beverly Kent and Early Warren are to go on trial here Monday on a charge of murder in connection with the fatal shooting of Mrs. Calmira Johnson on last July 22.

Before a coroner's jury Warren made a sworn statement that Kent hired him to do the killing.

The estate of the women is involved, furnishing the alleged motive for the killing, it is charged.

Lawyers sought a change of venue, but this was denied.

There are two other murder cases assigned for trial before Judge H. B. Strange at this term of court.

Joe Wiggins is charged with the murder of his stepfather-in-law, Johnnie Johnson, last August.

The third case is that of Walter Reynolds, negro, convicted and condemned to die for the death and burning of the bodies of John Mincey, his wife and two children last year. A new trial was granted.

CURB PRODUCE MART PLANNED IN MACON

MACON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Plans for operating a curb produce market in Macon within the next few weeks were made at a meeting of interested persons here.

D. F. Bruce, county agent, will have direct charge of the market and will be assisted by Chief of Police Ben T. Watkins, the executive committee of the Kiwanis Club and four men representing truck produce growers.

Only farmers growing their own truck will be alllowed on the market, professional hucksters being barred. Farmers will be allowed to park their trucks along Third Street park from Poplar to Plum streets. No other curb selling will be allowed in the city.

The meeting at which the market was planned resulted from a letter written by W. T. Anderson, editor and publisher of the Macon Telegraph and the Macon News, to Mayor Glen T. le in which he described the produce market at Columbia, S. C., and suggested a similar arrangement here.

CRAWLEY WILL SPEAK IN WAYCROSS TUESDAY

WAYCROSS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Jerome Crawley, prominent Waycross attorney, will be the principal speaker at the Armistice Day celebration Tuesday, the program being sponsored by the Ware county post of the American Legion.

At noon Legionnaires, members of the Legion auxiliary and a motorcade of friends will go to Folkston, where the Legionnaires of Charlton county will be hosts at a fish fry.

State Deaths And Funerals

FUNERAL OF L. O. PEACOCK.

EASTMAN, Ga., Nov. 8.—The funeral of L. O. Peacock, of Macon, who died here Friday after alighting from a railway train, was held Saturday afternoon. Mr. Peacock was 71 years of age. He had lived here until 15 years ago.

He was a brother of the late C. H. and L. M. Peacock, of this city and of Eli Peacock, who at the time of his death resided in Macon.

MRS. P. W. GREEN.

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—Funeral services for Mrs. P. W. Green, 62, will be held Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock from the Hawk Creek Baptist church in Forsyth county. Mrs. Green was before her marriage Miss Atilee Strickland, of Forsyth county, daughter of W. H. Strickland, former sheriff of that county for many years. She is survived by her husband and ten children: Mrs. J. C. Bagwell, of Duluth; L. T. Green, Norcross; C. T., O. L., Mrs. C. C. Bagley and Miss Allie Green, of Suwanee; Reno, G. E. and D. W. Green, of Atlanta, and C. L. Green, of Lawrenceville.

MRS. GEORGE P. HUDNETT.

SENOIA, Ga., Nov. 8.—The funeral of Mrs. George P. Hudnett, who died in Atlanta Friday night, will be conducted at 10 o'clock Sunday morning from the Lutheran church here. She is survived by Mrs. Fred Feltcham, Mrs. L. P. Brandenberg and Miss Ruby Hudnett, daughters who reside here.

Bartow Farmer Grows 2 Cotton Bales Per Acre

CARTERSVILLE, Nov. 8.—Oscar Lipscomb, well-known Bartow county farmer, residing near Five Forks, can rightfully claim the championship for this section as a successful raiser of cotton. On less than two acres of alfalfa land, Mr. Lipscomb will gather close to four bales of cotton. He has other cotton acreage which will not do as well as this particular patch, but that has proven to him the great advantage of intensive cultivation, plus ample preparation of the soil before the seed are planted.

"All cotton will ruin any farmer, be he big or little, if he will just keep it up long enough," says Mr. Lipscomb.

TOBACCO EXPOSITION OPENS AT VALDOSTA

VALDOSTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—This city, gaily bedecked in flags and bunting, Saturday entertained hundreds of visitors here for the opening of the great tobacco belt exposition.

Representatives of more than 50 counties, including some north Florida counties, and schools, organizations and business houses in this vicinity, had exhibits on display. Outstanding among the exhibits was the tobacco demonstration arranged by the government, showing the result of the use of various kinds of fertilizer on the different varieties of tobacco. The phases of tobacco culture were featured in the exhibit.

Live stock, poultry, rabbits, agriculture, schools, industries, business houses and organizations were represented in the exhibits at the fair.

NEGRO ORGANIZATIONS CONDEMN LYNCHING

Resolutions Adopted by 400 Delegates at Meeting in Macon.

MACON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Resolutions condemning lynching and calling upon the organizations to further law enforcement were adopted by 400 delegates of the Smooth Ashlar Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted York Masons and the Grand Court of Heroines of Jericho, Georgia negro organizations, in convention here this week.

After calling attention to "the very regrettable reversion to the awful crime of lynching" the resolutions state "we go on record as condemning the crime of lynching and respectfully but insistently call upon the legal authorities of the state and nation to use every lawful means at their disposal to protect prisoners in their custody."

The resolutions express "our very deep gratitude" to the city of Macon and to the editor of the Macon Telegraph "for the strong stand they have taken for law enforcement."

Attends Health Conference.

CARTERSVILLE, Nov. 8.—Dr. A. C. Shamblin, commissioner of health for Bartow county, was among the delegates attending the convention of health officers held in Atlanta a few days ago. Dr. Shamblin took charge of his duties here in July, having served in a similar capacity in Floyd county prior to coming to this county.

University Students Vote on Song Change

ATHENS, Ga., November 8.—A majority of University of Georgia students desire a change in the music of the present "Alma Mater," it was shown by last week's results of "The Red and Black" poll to determine the attitude of the students toward the song.

Of the 293 votes returned, 197 advocated a change in the music. Of this number, only a few desired a change in the words. The poll will be continued another week.

GRAND JURY FAILS TO BARE FLOGGING

MOUNT VERNON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The November grand jury of Montgomery county could make no progress in its investigation of the slaying of S. S. Mincey, aged negro of this county, who was kidnaped from his home last July and fatally beaten.

Court has adjourned but Judge Eschol Graham announced that a special term will be held the first Monday in December, at which time the grand jury will reassemble.

SAVANNAH PRISONERS TAKEN TO U. S. PENS

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Twelve prisoners sentenced to penitentiary terms at the session of the U. S. district court just closed, were taken from the county jail here for the trip to federal prison at Atlanta and Chilliothe, Ohio. Deputy Marshals Carl McLeod and A. W. Stuart were in charge of them.

HORTICULTURAL GROUP WILL MEET TUESDAY

Fifty-Fourth Annual Convention Scheduled in Savannah.

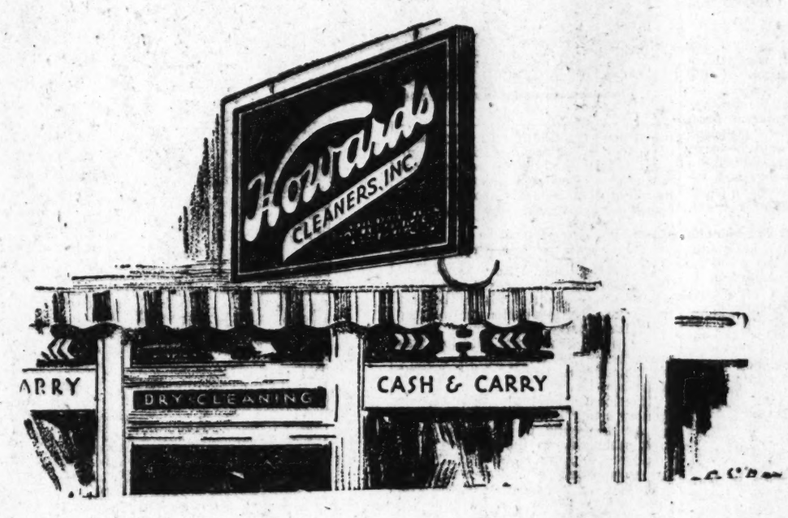

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The 54th annual meeting of the Georgia Horticultural Society will open in Savannah Tuesday, November 11, continuing three days at the municipal auditorium. Headquarters will be at the Hotel De Soto. In connection with the convention the Allied Florist Club of Savannah will stage a flower show. Mayor Gordon Saussy will deliver the address of welcome.

All of the garden clubs of the city and county will have exhibits in the show. This is the first time the state society's annual meeting has been held in Savannah. Speakers on the program include J. William Firor, Georgia State College of Agriculture; Otis Woodard, coastal plains experiment station, Butler Island, Glynn county; J. G. Woodruff, Griffin, Ga.; George D. Lowe, Brunswick; Manning S. EX-GEORGIAN FOUND DEAD IN NEW YORK

Mrs. Marian Saunders, Nurse, Is Believed Suicide.

Mrs. Marian Saunders, a widow, formerly of Decatur, was found dead Saturday in her gas-filled room in a west side rooming house of New York, according to information received here.

Mrs. Saunders was employed as a trained nurse in a New York hospital and formerly served in the same capacity at Davis-Fischer sanatorium and other Atlanta hospitals, according to her brother, Ernest Wier, of 127 Adair street, Decatur. Mrs. Saunders left here four years ago, Mr. Wier said.

Three notes, none of which gave a motive for the apparent suicide, were found near the body. One informed "the lawyer" that Mrs. Saunders has $2,000 in a Decatur bank, another was addressed to "my brother," and a third asked for a simple burial.

Mrs. Saunders was the daughter of the late Sarge Wier, who, under the name of Sarge Plunkett, contributed articles for a number of years to the old Constitution and the Sunny South.

WILL BASE PLEA ON WICKERSHAM PROBERS' REPORT

nothing of hard liquors. Estimates have been made in responsible quarters that gross revenue approaching $1,000,000,000 annually could be collected by the government if a tax were imposed on the amount of prohibited beverages now being consumed in the country under prohibition times, and the tax would not be unreasonably high.

Congress Is Puzzle.

Someone has attempted to point out the bearing this vast sum would have on the economic situation of the country if it were turned back to industry through the repeal of corporation and income taxes, replacing present revenues through the proposed liquor tax. Industry would have at its disposal roughly $1,000,000,000 a year to place in investments and expansion. It might prove the very thing needed to start business booming again.

Whatever may be on the president's mind he certainly must be giving weighty consideration to the problem. That the Wickersham commission is preparing some kind of a report on the subject is regarded as certain.

As for the political aspects of the case it remains to be seen what congress would do with a modification or repeal report. The present body which reconvenes in December would probably delay action, passing the buck on to the seventy-second congress which assumes office March 4, but which, in the absence of a special session, does not meet until December, a year from now. The added strength gained by the wets in both houses last Tuesday offers better prospects of favorable treatment there. Still there is no way of telling just what might happen even in the present body if such a report were presented with the recommendation of the president back of it.

All in all the growing developments have been sufficient to surcharge the political atmosphere with optimism, as viewed by the wets. They believe a break is in sight and profess to see it just around the corner.

METHODISTS MEASURE HOOVER BY DRY WORK

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Hoover administration "will rise or fall with the success of its efforts to enforce" prohibition, the Methodist board of temperance and public morals said today, adding it believed "success should be apparent within the next year or eighteen months."

This statement was made in the course of an indorsement of Prohibition Director Woodcock's request for 500 additional agents and an increased appropriation.

"The republican party has no alternative but to enforce prohibition and to stand by the principle," the board said. "For them, suggestion of repeal or of 'modification' is impossible for the simple reason that men and women with burning determination that the law should be enforced put that party into power."

BRITTEN DEMANDS EARLY MODIFICATION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The assertion that unless the Volstead act was modified within the next two years President Hoover and the republican party would meet defeat at the next presidential election was made today by Representative Britten, republican, Illinois, an opponent of prohibition.

"President Hoover," the Illinois member said, "would please the country at large and do much to bring back prosperity to the farmers if he would see to it that the Wickersham law enforcement commission reported favorably for modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer. He should take a firm stand for modification."

Britten said Tuesday's election increased the "number of wets in the house by 40, clearly indicating that the people of the country are tired of the prohibition farce that has made beer barons and rum runners fabulously wealthy and a menace to the nation."

The referenda in Illinois, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, Britten said, "clearly demonstrate the people are tired of this noble experiment."

NO REPORT YET MADE WICKERSHAM DECLARES

WASHINGTON Nov. 8.—(AP)—Any forecasts of what the law enforcement commission may recommend in its forthcoming report on prohibition were described by Chairman Wickersham today as "purely conjectural."

At the same time he said the commission had reached no conclusions which were ready for publication and that it could not say when the report will be submitted.

The revival of a rumor that the commission would recommend a modification of the prohibition laws to permit the sale of 2.75 per cent beer today caused a heavy increase in inquiries made at the headquarters of the commission.

Wickersham's statement was issued at the close of the day but previously Judge Kenneth MacIntosh, a commission member, had described the report as a "guess."

"The attention of the commission has been called to various articles in different newspapers purporting to forecast when the report on prohibition of this commission will be made and what its recommendations will be," the statement said. "The commission has reached no conclusions which are ripe for publication at the present time.

"It cannot state when its report will be ready. There are certain phases of investigation which the commission has not yet completed.

"Its report when completed will be sent to the president. Any public announcement concerning it must come from him. Any statement in advance as to the content of the report or the recommendations made are purely conjectural."

The commission will resume its sessions next Wednesday.

Prominent Citizens Take Farcical Roles in Rollicking Comedy at Decatur High School

The awkward antics of 'Aunt Lucia" as portrayed in the hilarious farce of that title in its premiere at Decatur Junior High school Friday night and a second performance Saturday night kept hundreds of spectators in a rollicking fit of laughter from the opening words of the first act through the last curtain call. More than two-score of the most prominent citizens of the most prominent citizens of the entire fifth congressional district essayed various farcical roles.

ington in this fight with clean hands, because the Atlanta borough system is a farce. Those same people now are urging Atlanta to pour out money to get what they call a correct census enumeration. If we win that fight, the borough will not expand a single foot in the next fifty years."

The resolution offered in council by Councilman John A. White, while failing to provide for any definite expenditure because of the fact that the exact amount needed is not known, the vote, it was said, indicated a disposition on the part of council to fight the battle to the last ditch.

During the heat of the debate in which opposition developed to the White resolution, Mr. Mayson declared:

"If you don't pass a measure giving us the money to carry this fight on I intend to pass the hat around Atlanta to get it. This is an important matter to Atlanta. Too important not to continue to fight."

May Appeal at Once.

He recommended that an appeal be taken at once, declaring that the courts have held that the Georgia legislature had every right to establish Atlanta as a borough system, and that the census bureau had arbitrarily ruled that the total population could not be included in the publications of that department.

"The act of the assembly has been upheld," Mr. Mayson said. "The court failed to grant a mandamus sought to force the department to carry the correct figures for Atlanta solely on the grounds that the mandamus was not the remedy. We believe the appellate court will reverse that decision. We should by all means carry the fight on."

Alderman Murphy interrupted to ask if a decision could be obtained before January 1, the time at which it is expected that final publication will be made.

Mr. Mayson stated he had been informed that it could.

Alderman Ben T. Huiet then asked what good a total enumeration would do Atlanta.

"It is just like having a nice suit of clothes, a nice sign over your office and good stationery on which to communicate with prospective customers," Mr. Mayson said. "The advantage can not be measured in dollars and cents, but it is certain that it is important or other cities of the south would not be fighting it so hard. It is important to Birmingham, to Houston and to other cities, and should be of importance to Atlanta."

Special Called Meeting.

Alderman P. L. Moon, of the second; Councilmen Nelson T. Spratt, Wiley L. Moore and others supported the White measure with speeches from the floor, while Alderman Alvin Richards, J. Charlie Murphy and J. Allen Couch, and Councilman J. Frank Beck opposed it on the grounds that the fight would do no good, would be a waste of money and that the incorporation itself was a camouflage.

Mayor I. N. Ragsdale called the special meeting, and Friday sent letters to the mayors of each of the Atlanta boroughs asking their disposition regarding continuance of the battle.

Attorneys for Atlanta also have filed an application for an injunction to prevent the census department from issuing any figures for Atlanta unless the larger figure of 360,961, including all the territory is carired instead of the 270,366 for the borough of Atlanta alone.

This is now pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Early Cold Weather Sends Tourists South

Unusually early arrival of real winter weather in the north and east has resulted in migration of motorists from those sections to the south three weeks sooner than is customary, according to the Atlanta Motor Club, which bases this assertion on a count of the research department of the American Automobile Association last Friday. The count covered the day's incoming motor travel over federal highways between the hours of 6 a. m. to midnight and also included incoming travel on state highways 8 and 10.

During the 18-hour period when the count was being taken, 964 cars entered Atlanta from the north on Highway 41. Of this number 484 came from Tennessee, many of them, doubtless, it was said, for the purpose of viewing the Tech-Vandy game. The next highest number 262, bore Florida licenses, while from North Carolina there were 158, from Indiana 153, Alabama 81, South Carolina 68, Ohio and New Jersey each came with 62. Michigan motorists southward bound numbered 49, Massachusetts 31, Kentucky 23 and Louisiana 20. A grand total of 1,835 cars from outside Georgia entered during that period and 39 of the 48 states were represented.

Pretty Girl, Pal's Ruse Works Theft for $30

TEXARKANA, Ark., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Admitted on a pretext that a hospital needed emergency bandages, a pretty girl bandit and a male companion early today looted a drug store cash register of $30 and after failing to open a safe containing a large sum, trussed up the store's night attendant and fled.

The attendant, Loyall Adams, 23, said the pair rapped on the window to gain his attention and he let them in. They tied him to a door and he remained thus for three hours until other employes arrived to open the store.

WE GIVE OUR LITTLE BOY LIN-O-NINE IF HE COUGHS

Likes to Take It and Away Goes All Signs of His Cold.

MOTHERS FIND IT IS BEST FOR THE KIDDIES

"We've given Lin-O-Nine to our little boy ever since he was two years old whenever h threatened to have a cough or cold and it works like magic," declares Arthur H. Foster, well-known Shoe Merchant, 145 Main Street, Danbury, Conn.

"The boy seems to like its taste. It looks just like thick cream and tastes like candy, he say , and we give it to him freely because doctors say there is nothing better," continued Mr. Foster.

Thousands of careful mothers keep a bottle of this splendid creamy emulsion of Eucalyptus, Cassia, Flaxseed, Betula, Irish Moss and Glycerine always in the home for the whole family's coughs and colds. It is so nicely flavored with wintergreen and works so quickly even in aggravated cases that no one should be without it. Show your doctor formula on bottle and he'll always recommend it. Made by the famous 45-year-old Kerr Chemical Co., Brentwood, Md. They will send a bottle return mail, 50c or $1 size, if your druggist won't obtain it of his jobber for you. Accept no substitutes.—(adv.)

POLO GROUNDS, NEW YORK, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Georgia's magnificent football machine fought its way out in front of New York University eleven here this afternoon to win, 7 to 6, in one of the greatest exhibitions of courage and skill the season has seen.

Only the game fish swims up stream, they say, and this was a game one today. It fought its way almost to the goal line four times before it was able to break through and score.

It was a machine that shook off misfortune as a great boxer shakes off blows and bores in for more. The Georgia Bulldogs took the bludgeonings of a capricious fate and came back for more.

They came from behind to tie the score with a forward pass from Austie Downes to Captain Herb Maffett, who was waiting behind the line.

THAT BIG POINT.

They went ahead and stayed there when Vernon (Catfish) Smith's big right toe shot the ball on a line between the posts after Maffett's touchdown.

That one point seemed small enough as it marked the margin between the teams shortly after the second half opened.

It was small enough then but it loomed larger and larger as the minutes crept slowly on into the eternity of football's stop watches. It seemed large even at the close when, with three and a half minutes left to play, the New York Violets launched one of the most desperate passing attacks of the year with Jim (Eyn) Tanguay, the big halfback, throwing them for his team.

PASSES CLICK.

They completed four passes in those last three and a half minutes, coming from their own 23-yard line to Georgia's 17-yard line and needing but a half yard for first down.

And yet the Bulldogs were able to choke it off and halt it. Jack Roberts threw his body almost as high as the Empire building, which is some 85 stories high, to get that ball. Georgia had stopped everything the Violet machine had in its arsenal.

Chick Meehan used his star back, Jim Tanguay, a man whom he did not need to beat Carnegie Tech. He used all the tricks in his coaching bag and they were not enough to beat down that one lone point that loomed so large there on the score board as the shadows of a New York evening began to fall in the Polo Grounds.

FIRST BLOOD.

The Violets shoved over the first touchdown, scoring in the early minutes of the second quarter. It was a 52-yard march across the line. They started from their own 48-yard line and with the aid of one pass and the great storming legs of Bob McNamara, a magnificent back, they took it to the 17-yard line.

And from there they befuddled the Bulldogs for the one and only time during the game, fooling them with a fake double pass behind the line and then forward passing the 17 yards, McNamara to Joe Hugret, to give them he six points.

Bob McNamara missed the try for point and that miss was the fatal one, as the Georgians came storming back to tie and go ahead with Catfish Smith's kick.

HARDEST ROAD.

Opportunity had knocked four

Tennessee Crushes Carson-Newman

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Using only two regulars and the entire squad of reserves, the University of Tennessee defeated little Carson Newman College here today, 34 to 0. Robinson, Heydrick, Disney and Allen carried the brunt of the Vols' running and passing attack which scored touchdowns in the first, second and final periods and two in the third.

Stanford Cardinals Defeat Washington

PALO ALTO, Cal., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Plunging and passing in a manner entirely foreign to earlier games, Stanford's Cardinals won their first major Coast conference game of the season today, overpowering Washington, 25-7.

Johnny Askew, the big little man from Nashville, is shown above hugging the football and scampering along outside left end for Vanderbilt's lone touchdown in the second quarter of the game yesterday at Grant field. He took the ball on a neatly executed lateral pass from Jess Thomas (see dotted line and hustled along the path indicated above. Interferers ahead are shown cutting down Tech tacklers. The run followed a 15-yard penalty that gave the Commodores a chance from the 19-yard mark. Johnny made it in one jump.

Crimson Tide Beats Florida Gators, 20-0

By Zipp Newman.

FLORIDA FIELD, GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 8.—A swirling Crimson Tide, led in its mad fury by "Hurry" Cain, swept over Florida's new $118,000 stadium and engulfed the 'Gators, 20-0. A light rain fell throughout the game, in which Florida was never able to move the ball beyond her own 40-yard line, contributing to the unpleasantness of 20,000 home-coming folks.

Alabama pulverized the right side of Florida's line, boxed in the 'Gator wing men and handcuffed the gigantic Florida backs. The 'Gators managed to earn one first down while Alabama was turning over 247 yards on an even dozen first downs. The 'Gators gained 47 yards and were never within scoring distance.

Wade started a second team which paved the way for Alabama's first touchdown, wearing down the Florida line so that the regulars could march 54 yards for their first touchdown in the second period. Florida held the Alabama reserves on her own 20-yard line and then stopped the regulars on her 2-yard line, only to cave in under the second drive of the Crimson regulars.

John Campbell faked into the line and then swung to the left, traveling 21 yards behind a wall of interference, "Hurry" Cain leading the way for the spinner; the play caught all of Florida's secondary defense drawn in.

The Crimsons were on the verge of a touchdown throughout the third period, once stalling on Florida's 14-yard line. The Red Regiment met too many Jimmy Steeles and Muddy Waters in a drive that started from their own 34-yard line and went clicking away for 52 yards.

STRENGTH-SAPPING.

However, the pounding the Crimsons gave the 'Gators in the third period sapped up the strength of the Floridans. They couldn't stop the Alabama power plays in the fourth period, which saw the 'Gators put to route.

The Crimsons duplicated their 54-yard march for a touchdown in the first period with John Henry Suther and John Cain having brought the ball to Florida's 11-yard line as the third period ended.

Muddy Waters broke through on the first play in the fourth period and threw Campbell for a 3-yard loss on third down. It only peeved the Red Horde. Jimmy Moore dropped back and threw a perfect pass to John Suther and Dorsett knocked him out of bounds on Florida's 1-yard line.

CAMPBELL PUNCHES.

John Campbell punched the ball right over the center for Alabama's second touchdown. And, by gosh, "Ears" Whitworth kicked goal.

John Suther's interception of a Florida pass on the 'Gators' 24-yard line, paved the way for Alabama's third touchdown.

Cherry broke through on the first play and spilled Suther for a 3-yard loss, and how it did peeve Mr. Suther. He asked for the ball and came back with a 14-yard run, knocking down three tacklers.

TUCKER OVER.

Campbell and Cain made it first down on Florida's one and one-half-yard line and John Tucker ran on up in the stands with the ball. And again "Ears" Whitworth showed that Alabama could convert a goal.

The Crimsons would have had another score had not Hillman Holley's 53-yard run been called back. Both Alabama and Florida were offside. The game ended a few seconds later, with Florida trying to complete a pass on her own 30-yard line.

Alabama completely outclassed Florida from every angle, with the Alabama reserves playing their best game. They made it easy for the regulars.

THE DOPE.

Alabama tried seven passes and

IRISH OFFENSE SWAMPS PENN

Rockne's Greatest Team Scored 60-20 Win, Says Grantland Rice.

By Grantland Rice.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 8.—You may have heard of the Four Horsemen of Notre Dame a few years ago. With a sweep and rhythm and a flash of speed unknown to football they ran amuck.

Today, at Franklin field, against a Pennsylvania team strong enough to beat Kansas, 21 to 6, Knute Rockne and Notre Dame passed far beyond the Four Horsemen. With Carideo, Brill, Savoldi, and Schwartz, they put on a combination of four antelopes, four charging buffaloes, four digdigs and four eels. They smashed Pennsylvania, 60 to 20, but that is only part of the story.

Notre Dame's first team actually beat Pennsylvania, 53 to 0, in less than 30 minutes of play. Pennsylvania then beat Notre Dame's second, third, and fourth team, 20 to 7.

This Notre Dame first team gave one of the most remarkable exhibitions of speed, power, and team-play ever seen on any football field. Against a strong, fast Penn team, they scored almost two points a minute. They ran roughshod over the Red and Blue in an attack led by Martin Brill, the discarded Penn star, who was the first western back to explode the big bomb.

GRID MASTERPIECE.

It was one of the greatest exhibitions of sheer speed, power, and coordination ever seen on any field in the history of the game. It was an attack that would have crushed any team playing football today, and Pennsylvania was completely helpless before those first-string backs who struck with such speed and fury, supported by marvelous interference and a fast, hard-charging line. It was an astonishing accomplishment, witnessed by something like 80,000 spectators who saw a first-class Red and Blue team crushed completely.

For the first five minutes the battle see-sawed back and forth. Penn was holding its own. The big crowd, watching the game on a cool, flawless football day, began to get excited. Penn's line was holding up. Penn's fast backfield was giving the western avalanche an even fight.

The ball had been swept back into the Notre Dame territory, somewhere around the Irish 35-yard line. And then the big blast went off. The big explosion took place.

Three years ago Penn had judged that Martin Brill was not quite strong enough for its first team. Brill left and went to Notre Dame. For two years he has been pointing for this game, for this chance at revenge. His father, surrounded by a crowd of friends, was watching every play with keen interest. Then Brill's signal was called. The line gave him an opening as broad as a four-way drive. He shot through.

DIVE FAILS

One Penn tackler dived at him and Brill side-stepped. Another came charging in and the fast, elusive 190-pound back knocked him down with a straight arm. He ran over another and

STRIB AWAITS GONG TUESDAY

Jack Tunney Unable To Fight on Card at Ball Park.

Young Stribling, apparently in superb physical shape and scaling close to 200 pounds, took an early workout Saturday and then repaired to Grant field with Mrs. Stribling to witness the Tech-Vanderbilt game.

Strib is eager to step into the ring here Armistice Day at Spiller field to fight Arthur DeKuh, the giant Italian, in the Georgian's first appearance before an Atlanta fight crowd in many months. The venture, promoted by the Atlanta Baseball and Amusement Company, is the first of what the company hopes will be a series of big-time outdoor boxing shows. They have offered Jack Sharkey $50,000 to fight Stribling here any time this winter that Sharkey can find the time and the inclination.

The Armistice Day show, aside from the spectacle of Stribling's meeting an opponent capable of extending him for at least several rounds, will give Atlantans a sight of Jack Dempsey, the old Manassa Mauler himself, as referee. Dempsey and Stribling in the same ring will be almost as much of a drawing card as the fight itself.

FIRM FRIENDS.

Dempsey has formed a close attachment for Stribling in recent months and spent several weeks in his company, flying from point to point and refereeing fights on a recent tour. Dempsey visited the Striblings on their south Georgia plantation, and there offered his services in helping Strib toward the world's heavyweight championship.

Dempsey and Stribling will be honor guests here Tuesday at luncheon

Trojans Trounce Golden Bears, 74-0

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Trojans of the University of Southern California rode roughshod over the University today, chalking up a 74-to-0 football victory.

Only in the first period was the game a contest, the southerners starting slowly and scoring only eight points in the opening quarter. They gained momentum as they went along and the score was 28 to 0 at the half time as part of the capacity crowd of nearly 82,000 looked on in shocked surprise. The third period was reminiscent of a field day, the Trojans running up a count of 33. They added a final 13 points in the last inning when Coach Howard Jones had practically cleared his bench of players.

The score broke all records for the 15-year-old rivalry between the two universities.

BROWN WINS.

Boys' High Will Play In Houston January 1

HOUSTON, Texas, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Boys' High school eleven, of Atlanta, Ga., will meet a Houston "all-star" high school team here in the annual New Year's Day game at Rice field, Arabia Temple of the Masonic Shrine and the Houston public schools, joint sponsors, announced today.

The Boys' High team will be allowed to recruit outstanding players from other Atlanta elevens.

Atlantans Fail To Score From Two-Yard Line As Foes Hold.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, Nov. 8.—(Special.)—Oglethorpe's Stormy Petrels had their wings clipped here this afternoon by the Fighting Lutherans of Wittenberg University, the rampaging Atlanta eleven being held to a scoreless tie by the Ohioans.

Twice the Petrels worked the ball to the shadow of the Wittenberg goal, and each time they were beaten back. Twice the Lutherans crashed deep into Oglethorpe territory, and each time they were halted short of a touchdown.

Wittenberg, early scenting the fact that the game was to be a real battle, pulled Ike Truby, giant tackle, out of the line for a try at a field goal, but the ball went wild.

Those five dashes at points were the only ones of the day. Throughout the rest of the game, the Petrels and the Lutherans battled between the 20-yard lines.

The field goal try was the first of the threats. The Petrels received and gave up the offensive task quickly, Anderson banging the ball out to midfield from deep in his own territory.

The Lutherans started with a bang, working the ball to the Oglethorpe 25-yard line on three tries. There the Petrels rose up to exact a loss of eight yards on three plays, and Truby shot his bolt. His direction was perfect, but his elevation was not. The Petrel retained its feathers for the moment.

A few moments later the Petrel turned peacock—almost. They missed a chance to strut by only seven feet, having forced a short punt and hammered the ball almost home before the Lutherans could halt the drive.

Oglethorpe threatened once more before the half ended, "Tanky" Anderson racing from mid-field to the Wittenberg 21-yard line and then trying two passes, one of which was incomplete and the other stolen from the hands of two Petrel receivers on the Wittenberg four-yard line by Smith, Lutheran ace.

There were few opportunities for the Petrels in the second half, more—but still not enough—for the Lutherans. Price intercepted an Oglethorpe pass which might have meant a score. The Lutheran line rose to throw the Petrels back when they next aspired.

Wittenberg was next to feel the "so near—so far" feeling as the Petrels repulsed them once—and again when they came back following the punt out.

The game ended with the Petrels three yards from the center of the field—which is indicative of the general trend of affairs.

Moccasins Battle Sewanee To Tie

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Chattanooga Moccasins knocked at the doors of the Sewanee goal line all during the seventh game of their colorful rivalry here this afternoon, but emerged with but a scoreless deadlock to show for their labors. The Blue and Gold has yet to score in the history of the series.

Wisconsin Crushes South Dakotans, 58-7

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 8.—(AP)—South Dakota State folded up today before the powerful offense of Wisconsin and finished on the short end of a 58-to-7 score.

South Dakota's lone touchdown came in the closing minutes of play as the result of a 67-yard run by L. Nelson, halfback. It was the day's most spectacular play.

Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite used reserve material for all but the last four minutes.

CARNEGIE NOSED BY PITT, 7 TO 6

Panthers Beat Back Plaids' Bid for City Title.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 8.—(AP) The University of Pittsburgh defended its city football championship at the stadium this afternoon by defeating Carnegie Tech, 7 to 6, before 50,000 fans in a stubbornly fought battle.

Charley Tully, veteran Pitt tackle, was the agency that prevented the Tartans from netting a tie with the Sutherland crew. The burly warrior blocked an attempted placement kick for extra point by Captain Johnny Dreshar in the final period after Karcis had made a touchdown.

Pitt scored in the second period after a 55-yard drive. It was no easy job for the defenders to put across the marker. Heller, Reider, Clark and Hood, who went in for Clark in the thick of the fight, advanced through the Carnegie line. A 15-yard pass helped matters along, and Hood went over for the touchdown from a hair's breadth of the goal line. Captain Eddie Baker kicked the point.

The victory left Pitt to face Ohio State and Penn State with only one defeat on its record. It was the third setback of the season for Carnegie.

By Ed Danforth.

Georgia Tech breasted a storm of adverse breaks and crowded close to the door of victory yesterday, but yielded a 6-to-0 decision to Vanderbilt after one of the bitterest struggles ever waged on Grant field. Twenty thousand people saw the Engineers limit a supposedly overpowering force from Nashville to one marker but by their own errors burden themselves with a defensive fight.

The Commodores wrung their lone touchdown from the embattled Engineers in the second quarter when Johnny Askew, the big little man, rolled around his left end like a straw hat blown by the wind, covering 19 yards to glory in a breath.

Before Johnny rolled across the line, and afterward, the Engineers met repeated Commodore land assaults with a powerful line whose arms clamped down on every running play and an agile secondary defense whose hands shot down forward passes unerringly.

The Engineers were forced to fight most of the afternoon in their own territory, due to repeated fumbling and occasional penalties. They presented Vanderbilt six scoring opportunities inside the 30-yard line. Five times Tech proffered them a loose football that was good for one chance at their goal line. Once it was a penalty for piling on that Tech used as an invitation. Vandy could score but once.

NO SUCCESS

On those other chances that must have looked like unexpected bequests from a rich old uncle—five rich old uncles to be meticulous—the Commodores used every gun in the McGugin arsenal without success.

These Rambling Wrecks may have been Fumbling Wrecks but they were always in the way when a Vandy back tried to run or a Vandy pass receiver put up his hands.

Tech's strength was spent through the second and third quarters in holding the fort against the Commodore raiding parties. Twice in the second they drove Vandy back inside the 10-yard line. Twice in the third period they blanketed the efforts of the men in gilded helmets inside that 10-yard strip of brown Bermuda.

JUST FOUR INCHES.

And they found time in that riotous third chapter to drive the ball down to Vandy's 5-yard line and lose it four inches short of a first down.

All in all it was the best effort Georgia Tech has given to date in a season that has been studded with adverse breaks. The Engineers fought smartly and doggedly. They limited the team that beat Minnesota 33 to 7 to a single touchdown. They played up to and beyond their capabilities, and deserve a rousing hand.

HOW 'TIS.

"We were pretty lucky, I guess," said Coach Dan beating his friend to the punch.

"Well, we might have won at that," Coach Alex admitted grinning.

"Look here, Alex, have you been playing that well all year?" Coach Dan demanded.

"No," cplied Coach Alex simply.

Unable to sustain a drive against the surging Tech defense, Vanderbilt still must be credited with an amazing lot of energy and alertness in fol-

Stribling To Box Griffiths Dec. 12

Young Stribling has signed to fight Tuffy Griffiths in Chicago at the stadium for the benefit of a fund for the unemployed December 12, Pa Stribling announced here yesterday.

The elder Stribling had just returned from Chicago where he signed a contract with George H. Getz and his interests.

This engagement precludes the possibility of Stribling considering a proposition from New York to fight Jack Sharkey for a similar charity fund.

"If Sharkey wants to fight W. L. for the unemployed," Pa said last night, "we will be glad to have him come to Atlanta and help out the jobless here. The Atlanta Baseball Company says it will be glad to promote such a bout right here in Atlanta. If W. L. does any more charity fighting, it will be in the south for southern people. I do not believe he owes New York a cent."

Brewer and Murray Score Twice in First Half.

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Kentucky's crippled but snarling Wildcats were tamed here this afternoon by Duke's Blue Devils, who hung up their sixth consecutive victory, 14 to 7.

More than 15,000 saw the contest, which was bitterly waged from the kick-off to the final whistle. It was Kentucky's second defeat in a row at the hands of a conference opponent.

"Shipwreck" Kelly, the visitors' star ground gainer, still suffering from injuries, played a part of the first half, but his efforts at carrying the ball were smeared by the Duke defense.

The Blue Devils held the Kentuckians in check throughout the game except just at the close of the third and the beginning of the fourth periods.

In the next period, the Devils scored again. Murray returned a punt 15 yards to start the march. A first down was made on the Wildcats' 37-yard line. Brewer getting eight through the line on the fourth try. Two more plunges gained five yards, Murray added 12, and Brewer scored by two tries at the line. He made the extra point by a dash around end.

Kentucky's counter came at the beginning of the fourth period as the result of a 16-yard pass, Richards to Andrews. Cavana dropkicked accurately for the point.

Duke made six first downs, five of them in the first half, while Kentucky registered eight, six of them in the second half.

Two "Touchdowns" That Did Not Count

Yale Reserves Swamp Alfred

YALE BOWL, NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Little Alfred College, a co-ed school in the hills of southern New York, today proved to be exactly what Yale hoped and expected—an easy football prey.

With Sammy Wiener, a star on the tennis courts, and Charlie Heim, a Booth-sized quarterback from Danbury, Conn., leading the way, the sons of Eli, with all of their regulars out of the game, swamped Alfred by a score of 66 to 0. Alfred held the Blue to a pair of touchdowns and a safety in the first half, but the second developed into a rout. Dazzling runs by Heim and Wiener and line smashes by Conklin slashed the Orange and Purple defense to shreds, and scores came thick and fast.

Albie Booth and five other regulars got the results of the Alfred slaughter at Cambridge, where they went with Head Coach Mal Stevens to see Harvard play Michigan. Yale rolled up 17 first downs and made 361 yards from rushes compared to Alfred's 74.

completed one for 14 yards. The 'Gators went to the air 13 times and made seven good for 50 yards. Florida only had a net game of 47 yards after the line losses were deducted, however.

"Hurry" Cain, John Suther and John Campbell were Alabama's offensive stars—with Cain leading the pack. Wade held him out until late in the second period and then turned him loose. He cut off 88 yards, two of his runs helping to pave way to touchdowns.

Crafty Wade held Suther under wraps. He only gained 54 yards. Campbell made 59 and plunging Tucker bucked off 39.

Red Bethea was Florida's ground gainer. He managed to slip by the Alabama linemen playing in his backfield for 15 yards.

Muddy Waters looked like a Clement, Godfrey and Sington, three tacklers, who looked like an all-American linemen today. Clement was every bit as good as he was against Kentucky and Sington was better.

Chick Infielder Joins Benedicts

CONWAY, Ark., Nov. 8.—(AP) Royce Williams, second baseman for the Memphis Southern Association baseball club, was married yesterday to Miss Betty Riddick, the daughter of J. S. Riddick, of Morrilton, it was learned here today.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams will live at Greenbriar, where Williams is a member of the high school faculty when the baseball season ends. Both are graduates of Hendrix-Henderson College here.

Powerful Gophers Crush South Dakota

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Minnesota's first, second and third teams played in shifts to pour touchdowns through the light South Dakota University line this afternoon, winning 59 to 0, before 20,000 persons.

Mexican Grid Team Beaten by Choctaws

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Before distinguished representatives of the United States and Mexico, including the Mexican ambassador, Mississippi College today defeated the National University of Mexico, 40 to 0, in the first international football game played in Mississippi.

Holding the Mississippians to a 13-to-0 score during the first half of the game, in which Coach Robinson used second stringers, the Mexicans were overwhelmed in the last half, when Coach Robinson sent in his second string men.

Coach Root's players from Mexico, although playing only their second year of football, displayed skill that made the game more interesting than indicated by the one-sided score.

Captain Pineda gained often through the Mississippi line, while Cuici, Miranda and the diminutive Berumen starred in the backfield. The lanky Landa at end was in almost every play with Villareal, at tackle, proving troublesome to Mississippi.

Correro, Shepard, T. Hederman and Furniss were outstanding in the Mississippi victory.

CADETS' POWER CRUSHES ILLINI

Army Battles Out 13-0 Win After Westerners Weaken.

By Edward J. Neil,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

YANKEE STADIUM, NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—With one flash of sustained power that blasted the fighting Illini apart and one individual feat of brilliance, Army's unbeaten eleven humbled, battered, but dogged Illinois 13 to 0 today in one of the prime intersectional duels of the day.

The Illini, beaten in successive Saturdays by Northwestern, Michigan and Purdue, fought Army to a standstill in the first half, dominating the play all through the second quarter. But the fire wore out. A brilliant forward wall crumbled, and the 70,000 who saw the colorful "Kaydets" in their sole metropolitan appearance of the season, rose with them in the second half to yowl them on to victory.

Aside from the brilliant play of two fine lines, a youngster almost new to Army varsity football, stole the show.

POWER TELLS.

Stecker, a big 170-pound half-back, from Hazelton, Pa., teamed with Tom Kilday, another big, hard-running fellow from San Antonio, Texas, to smash the Illinois line for the first touchdown in the third quarter. In the final period, when the Illini passed in desperation, Strecker intercepted one of Charley Hall's passes on the Illinois 43-yard line and scampered around the startled westerners to score standing up. All through the second quarter and the final half, after replacing Ken Fields, who used to play with Illinois, Strecker fought a brilliant kicking duel with Stan Bodman, Illinois' tackle, and both averaged 40 yards from the line of scrimmage.

All through the first half Illinois threatened to score one of the outstanding upsets of the season and twice in the second quarter played almost entirely in Army territory. Pete Yanuskus, hard-hitting Illinois back, and Gilberry, ace of the invaders, punched or passed at Army's bitter defense within the Cadet 25-yard line. Twice Bodman put the pressure on Army by kicking outside within the Cadet 15-yard line. But always the warriors from West Point staved off the attack and went back to swapping kicks.

The second half, with Strecker, Kilday, until he was hurt in the third quarter, and "Appleknocker" Bowman, of Harriman, Tenn., packing the freight behind a line that crushed Illinois' weary forwards, was entirely different.

Lines By Fincher

By Bill Fincher,
Georgia Tech Line Coach.

Our boys gave a thoroughly satisfactory exhibition against a genuine McGugin machine yesterday.

They continued to improve and, in every department save the handling of the ball, I think nothing more could be asked of them. They fought valiantly, and their diagnosis was good.

Vanderbilt, playing a determined and dogged game of football, was never able to drive the ball into our territory.

We entered Vandy's precincts once but were unable to put it across.

If memory serves correctly, Vandy was in possession of the ball in our territory six times, and not once on a concerted drive. Five times did our men fumble when it hurt, and Vandy recovered each time. Yet only once were they able to put it across.

For Vandy, Schwartz was the most valuable player throughout. I don't believe he was taken out of a play around his end all day, and his punting helped them plenty.

Gracey and Leyendecker, in the line, were very much in evidence in most of the plays.

Of their backs, Fortune looked best. He was a bulwark on defense and, I believe, gained more ground than any back on the field.

Laurels for the day on our side go to Clint Ezell. If the white of his jersey had been black, he might have been mistaken for a Vandy backfield man, so much was he behind their line of scrimmage.

While the play of the rest of the line was excellent, its feature was its team play.

Frank Speer looked like the Speer of two years ago for the first time this season, and Goldsmith's tackling under Flowers' excellent punts was plenty good.

"Jap" Hart pulled the smartest play of the day. Vandy punted deep into our territory, so deep that "Jap" decided to let it hit the ground. He nonchalantly walked towards the ball as it bounced, snatched it and set sail for a gain of 25 yards which pulled the Jackets out of a tough spot.

Another very neat piece of work which may have been overlooked was executed by Herron.

It was Vandy's ball near the sidelines, and they attempted to run it out of bounds.

Herron, however, cleverly stopped the play for a loss of a down and a yard or so, preventing the back from carrying the ball outside.

TUSKEGEE BEATS MOREHOUSE HERE

Invaders Too Powerful in First Half; Score 19 to 6.

Morehouse College defense cracked in the first half before a brilliant Tuskegee attack Saturday on the Morehouse gridiron and the Atlanta team was defeated for the first time this season. The score was 19 to 6. Three thousand fans saw the game.

In the last half both teams fought on equal terms with the Atlantans holding a slight edge if any.

Stevenson, the "Bronze Wizard," with his running mates, Shanklin and Mule Harrison, three of the best backs in colored football, drove down the field at will in the early stages of the game.

Tuskegee started the scoring shortly after the game started with a 70-yard drive down the field, with Fullback Shanklin leading the attack with Stevenson and Harrison assisting. Stevenson went over from the 4-yard line in an off-tackle play for the touchdown.

After the first five minutes of the second quarter, Stevenson returned Kelley's punt to Morehouse's 40-yard marker and on the first play got 15 more yards at left end. Shanklin then bore the brunt in four plays. Shanklin bucked it over and the score was 12-0 in favor of Tuskegee.

Morehouse scored its only touchdown after Smith, playing center, recovered Harrison's fumble on Tuskegee's 18-yard line. The Tuskegee forwards held for downs but Morehouse received a punt on its 48-yard line, and a pass to Edmonds from Kelley immediately netted a gain of 25 yards. Jones, Edmonds and Maise carried the ball to the Alabamans' 15-yard line, where a pass from Kelley to Edmonds went for a touchdown. Kelly's try for the point was wide.

HARVARD YIELDS 6-TO-3 DECISION TO WOLVERINES

Newman's Final Period Pass Offsets Wood's Goal.

By Henry Minott,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

HARVARD STADIUM, CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 8.—(UP)—A mighty march down the field in the closing minutes of play, climaxed by a beautiful 30-yard forward pass from the magic hand of Harry Newman, enabled a suddenly inspired Michigan eleven to come from behind and defeat Harvard on its home gridiron today for the first time in nearly 50 years of rivalry. The score was 6 to 3.

Outweighed some ten pounds to the man, the plucky Crimson, held to a tie score by little William & Mary only a week ago, fought grimly to turn back the Wolverine invasion only to see apparent victory vanish in the face of a brilliant western rally as the game neared an end.

55,000 WATCHED.

Some 55,000 fans saw a sluggish Harvard team come unexpectedly to life, hold the mighty Michigan eleven scoreless for three periods, and then step into a 3-point lead with a 35-yard field goal.

Four times Harvard penetrated the rival's 20-yard line only to be turned back when a touchdown seemed inevitable. The Crimson's defense showed considerable strength at crucial points and only twice did the Wolverines get inside Harvard's 20-yard stripe.

The drive that netted Harvard its sole tally began late in the third period after Wood had made two fruitless attempts to dropkick a field goal. After a Michigan punt had given Harvard the ball at midfield, Wood threw a pretty pass to Huguley who raced 40 yards for first down on the rival's 10-yard line. Twice Harvard was thrown for small losses, but as the fourth period opened Wood, standing on the Michigan 25-yard line, dropkicked a field goal to give Harvard a 3-to-0 lead.

35 YARDS TO SCORE.

Shortly afterward a Crimson punt gave Michigan the ball on its own 33-yard marker and the westerners launched the drive that led to victory.

Newman hurled a beautiful 30-yard pass to Hudson, who caught the ball near the rival's goal line and raced across the line for the touchdown. Newman's try for extra point failed.

Proud To Have Nosed Out Tech, States McGugin

By Lewis Hawkins.

"I had been told that Tech had a poor team," said your Uncle Dan McGugin as his weary Commodores trudged from Grant field after squeezing out a decision over the Engineers, "but if it is a poor team, I am well satisfied to have beaten a poor team by six points."

The veteran director of Vanderbilt's football destinies then went on to make it clear that the Jackets looked like anything but a bunch of weak sisters to him.

While this was being explained to the writer, Coach Alexander, of Tech, came across the field to congratulate his conqueror. Neither had to cross his fingers in complimenting the other upon the good, hard football played by his charges.

Coach McGugin was particularly impressed by the powerful punts of young Buck Flowers, and the play of the Tech line as a unit drew his commendation. On his own side he found praise for "Little Bill" Schwartz, the big end who repeatedly made life miserable for Tech's backs. He also said Amos "Mouse" Leonard looked fine until a severe bump on the noggin removed him from the hostilities in the early moments of play.

"However," McGugin added, "I must confess that I was so busy watching a sure-enough football game and hoping my boys could win, that I had little time or inclination to try to pick stars from two scrapping outfits."

Savannah High Trims Columbus High, 44-6

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Banging over seven touchdowns with the reserves playing half of the game, Savannah High defeated Columbus High, 44-6, here this afternoon for the Jackets' fourth G. I. A. A. victory.

Galloping Glenn Johnson, who calls signals from halfback, scored four of the seven touchdowns, making two after taking forward passes. Columbus' lone touchdown came in the third period when McCook hurled a 40-yard pass to Richardson, who then stepped over the goal line.

Columbus, in spite of the overwhelming score made against them, occasionally stood up to the Jackets' nipping offensive and took the ball away from them on downs.

FORDHAM JOLTS DETROIT, KEEPS SLATE UNSOILED

Rams' Goal Line Crossed for First Time in 13-7 Win.

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—(AP)—After three periods of ineffective football Fordham came to life with a bang in the final period, scored two touchdowns and trounced the University of Detroit, 13 to 7, here today to keep their record clean.

But for a sensational 75-yard run in the second period by Bill O'Neill, sparkling left halfback of the Detroit team, the Fordham Battering Rams would have kept intact their reputation of an uncrossed goal line.

O'Neill intercepted a pass from Fisher, the Fordham quarterback, on the Detroit 25-yard line and stepped the distance to the goal line untouched by Fordham players. Rocky Parsaco, Titan quarterback, drop-kicked the extra point.

The fourth period was only a few minutes old when Fordham, after an exchange of punts, got possession of the ball and took it to the Detroit 35-yard line. Janis, who replaced McMahon at Fordham right half, circled right end for a touchdown. Wisniewski's place-kick for extra point was low. Janis scored the second touchdown when he snared a pass from Fisher on the 10-yard line.

Askew Leads Commodore Invaders in 6-0 Victory Over Tech

JACKET ERRORS AID VANDERBILT; FLOWERS STARS

"Good" Fortune's Line Plunging Features Visitors' Attack.

By Ed Danforth.

lowing the ball and grabbing it every time Tech turned it loose. Their keenness kept a pressure on Tech that their offense could not achieve.

AN OLD HABIT.

It is an old habit of McGugin's teams to keep right after the football. They did that yesterday and beat Tech.

Statistics show the teams pretty closely matched. Vanderbilt made nine first downs and Tech five. Vandy carried it 196 yards on running plays and Tech 138 yards. The big, poisonous difference, however, is contained in the statistical note that Tech lost the ball five times to Vanderbilt by fumbling and Vandy lost it not at all to Tech.

VANDY STARS.

Johnny Askew and the powerful Selman Fortune were the stars of the Vanderbilt attack. Askew was slippery as a greased pig, while Fortune looked like an old-fashioned fullback at times in punching his way through Tech's line.

Defensively the burden for the Commodores was borne by Pete Gracey, center; Bill Morehead, tackle, and Bill Schwartz, end. Tech's interference never did get Schwartz out of a play. He beat them down and got the runner for loss time and again.

AND THE JACKETS.

"Sugar" Cain did most of the heavy hauling for the Engineers. Tom Jones did well on his double pass play. But it was on defense that the Engineers produced their best work.

Buck Flowers, the recruit from the scrubs, out-punted Schwartz by a wide margin. His kicks were well covered by Tech's ends and tackles and the advantage so gained made up for many yards.

Clint Ezell, the sophomore guard, played a whale of a game. So did Jones and Herron, at end. Frank Speer turned in his best perfomance. And back in the secondary, Cain and MacArthur batted down Vanderbilt passes as if they knew the signals. The Commodores completed but two out of 14. That tells how good the boys were.

INJURIES HURT.

Both Tech and Vanderbilt lost an outstanding player by injury early in the game. Mouse Leonard, the best ball carrier in the Commodore camp, was hit on the head in the first period and had to be taken out. The youngster was in a daze that never lifted and he could not return for the game. Mrs. T. A. Leonard, his mother, was watching the game from the east stand and bore the suspense calmly. She did not learn until after the game that he was not seriously injured.

Vance Maree, Tech's star tackle, was kicked on the leg in the first period and had to be withdrawn from the game. He was sent into the training room where hot applications put him back in some sort of shape. He came back late in the game for a short time but came out with a pronounced charley horse.

Loss of these two players did not help the cause of either party to the argument.

HORRORS OF FUMBLING

To recount the times Tech opened the door to Vanderbilt for close range shots at the goal line is to portray the havoc that persistent fumbling can work.

In the first period a Tech fumble gave Vandy the ball on the 30-yard line and then had to fight to get it back. In the second period a penalty of 15 yards gave Vanderbilt a running start that Askew converted into a touchdown on a lateral pass play.

Another Tech fumble gave the ball to Vandy on the 30-yard line. Vandy could not budge. Still another fumble planted the Commodores on the 5-yard line. They crossed but a holding penalty nullified the count. And just before the second period was up a fourth Tech fumble presented Vandy with a chance from the 18-yard range.

The final fatal fumble came in the third frame but Vandy could get nowhere. The Commodores it seemed held an incontestable title to every free ball. And their eagle eyes and prehensile talons made their six points good for the whole game.

Vanderbilt's Best Play - - - The Tech Fumble - - - There Goes One of Them

The above spectacle, a football dropped by a Tech back, was repeated five times in the Tech-Vandy game at Grant field yesterday and each time Vanderbilt recovered to Tech's discomfort. The above view shows ball rolling free toward Tech's goal after Strickland had fumbled on an attempted double pass to Barron. Barron and Morehead are seen racing for it. Morehead recovered it on Tech's 5-yard stripe. But Vandy could not score on it. Photo by Kenneth Rogers, Constitution staff photographer.

WEST VIRGINIA BEATS INVADERS

Strong Kansas Aggies Fall Before Attack, 23 to 7.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. Nov. 8 (AP)—The cleats of West Virginia university's speedy backfield cut touchdown trails to victory across the stadium turf during the third period here today as a heavier Kansas Aggie team was turned back 23 to 7 in an intersectional battle.

The Big Six conference visitors hammered through to a seven-point lead in the opening minutes of play but the Mountaineers hurriedly deadlocked the issue in the same first period.

West Virginia routed the visitors in the third period with two touchdowns To make victory complete, the easterners piled into the Aggie's line of superior poundage in the fourth period, split it apart and tossed an Aggie for a safety as a defensive gesture.

Ed Danforth's Running Story of Tech Game

Captain Earl Dunlap, dressed in civilian clothes and carrying a cane to help his injured leg, formally turned over his duties to Tom Jones, who officiated at the toss.

The Engineers kicked north to Vanderbilt. It was a low rolling kick and was caught by Leyendecker, who made a short return. Vandy started from her 37-yard line. Tech's right wing whipped down the first two plays, Maree and Holt charging in fast to stop them.

Big Schwartz came back from end to punt. He banged a terrific spiral a mile high. Pat Barron fumbled it, but Cain came around, scooped it up, and saved a few yards.

GREAT EFFORT.

Tech shot Barron twice at the Vanderbilt right wing, but lost three yards. Flowers dropped back to kick; the stands waited with bated breath to see how his foot would match in power with that of Bill Schwartz. The ball zoomed away 45 yards into the wind, a grand effort.

Goldsmith sped down the field and nabbed Mouse Leonard by one arm to kill the run back.

Vanderbilt resumed the attack from the 37-yard line. The ball was close to the east sideline, and on a delayed buck Mouse Leonard darted through center. He danced along the white stripe and covered 23 yards before he was hauled down.

ON THE JACKETS.

That run gave Vandy a foothold in Tech territory, but the Yellow Jacket right wing, reputed the weaker sector, smeared three running plays. Schwartz kicked out of bounds as accurately as if he had shot the ball from a gun. It flew out on Tech's nine-yard mark.

That punt was a jolt to Tech. But on first down Flowers drove his foot into one and sent it 50 yards into the wind. Half the Tech rush line was down on Leonard and smothered the little jack rabbit as he caught it.

Vanderbilt resumed the attack from midfield. On the first play, Ezell nailed Leonard. Vandy switched to the air but Cain batted down the pass with a slap. Schwartz fell back to punt. The Tech rush line swarmed in on him and the ball skittered 25 yards out of bounds on Tech's 25-yard line.

FIRST OF ERRORS.

On the second play Flowers fumbled the ball over to Vanderbilt, the first of that jolting series of errors that played such havoc with Tech's game. Henderson recovered it on Tech's 30-yard line.

The Engineers shook their heads and dug in. Ezell stopped Mouse Leonard. They came together with a crash and the little Commodore galloper was hurt.

He was replaced at once by Benny Parker, who went to quarter and sent Henderson to half. It was a bitter disappointment to the boy who wanted so much to do well on Grant field and to the crowd who wanted to see him shake his feet.

BRAND-NEW IDEA.

Parker had brought an idea in with him. It was third down and he called a forward pass for the first time. It was through the air that Vanderbilt was expecting to win the game. But Sugar Cain drifted back from the line of scrimmage, leaped into the air and pulled it down. Old Sugar knew where that ball was going.

The Engineers lit out from their 21-yard line. Tom Jones got 9 yards on the end-around play and Cain butted out a first down. Then the Commodore line poked its gilt helmets into two Tech smashes. Vance Maree got up hurt. He had been kicked in the leg and was limping.

Coach Alexander sent Sam Fincher in to relieve him and dispatched big Vance indoors for Mike Chambers to render first aid. The departure of the Big Geech did not help Tech's plays toward the left any, although Sam played a splendid game as relief.

GOOD PUNTS COVERED.

Little Flowers slammed his foot into it and it sailed 50 yards down the field. The Engineers were down there in a gang and smothered Henderson for no return. Such punt covering a Tech team never delivered on Grant field.

Vanderbilt could get nowhere and Schwartz punted one in a hurry right in the faces of the charging Tech line. It went just 24 yards. Thus in two kicks the Engineers had gained 30 yards.

Then came the play that always will remain a pain in the cervical vertebrae to Tech folks. Pat Barron, on a double pass, cut across the back yard and sprinted 50 yards for a touchdown. But there was an official standing still in the middle of the field waving his handkerchief to indicate a penalty. A Tech player had charged too soon. Five yards for offside. Ouch!

BLAST AWAY.

They gave it to Barron twice and he won 8 yards. Then MacArthur flipped a forward pass to Goldsmith that netted 19 yards and a first down on Vanderbilt's 30-yard line. The Engineers, too, could throw the thing some.

Jones sold out on his sweeping play but fumbled as the ball was handed to him. It rolled 10 yards back and he chased it down. But Bill Schwartz was there to bury him for a 10-yard loss.

Then on third down Leyendecker faded back from the line of scrimmage and intercepted MacArthur's short pass and Vandy had broken up Tech's first bid. But that previous 5-yard penalty for offside had been more potent than the whole Commodore defense. One play and the period ended. Tech had made two first downs, Vanderbilt one. Each team had been in scoring position once and had been halted.

Second Quarter.

The Yellow Jackets got in the way of two Commodore off-tackle plays and Schwartz punted weakly. Schwartz and Fortune broke up the counterattack, and Flowers punted 40 yards to Henderson. The Commodore safety man fumbled it and recovered, an old Vandy custom.

Parker, the passer, tried a first down chunk this time, but Flowers knew where it was going and flagged it on his 26-yard line.

Here Coach Alexander sent in Speer to replace Holt, and Farmer for Neblett. They turned on the power. Sugar Cain loped for 11 yards in two lopes. But the big boys in the gilt hats spattered the next two plays and Flowers kicked. This time the ball bounded 10 yards backward and Fortune killed it on his own 43-yard mark.

SOLE MARCH.

Coach McGugin sent Askew in for Henderson and the Commodores cut loose their one and only march. Askew skipped off right tackle behind fine blocking and got 9 yards. Fortune bucked out the first down. Fortune ploughed through center for 4 yards. Askew, on that same delayed buck that Leonard had used in the first quarter, made 4 more. Fortune hit the Engineers a slanting blow for 3 and the sticks moved again.

On the first play Askew got through the line of scrimmage, went down, but kept wriggling and crawling. Jones piled on. The officials called it that and carried the ball 15 yards down toward Tech's goal.

It was just what the doctor ordered. From the 19-yard zone Askew sprinted around, took a lateral pass from Thomas and outran the Tech secondary defense for the touchdown. Schwartz missed goal. Vanderbilt 6, Tech 0. Check.

BACK TO WORK.

Well, the game was young and so were the boys. Six points could be bettered by seven. The Engineers went back to work with a vim. Strickland went in for Cain, who was tired, and Herron replaced Goldsmith.

Tech took the kick-off and brought it up to the 22-yard line. Barron and Strickland traveled 8 yards. Needing two for a first down, Strickland tumbled on a plunge and Gracey recovered for Vanderbilt. The Commodores could ever more pounce on those loose footballs. And before the game was over they were experts through constant practice.

Parker, the passer, saw no chance to run the ball along, so he threw it. It was a perfect peg to MacArthur of Tech. If Vanderbilt had known their own pass plays as well as Tech did the game might have been a slaughter.

ANOTHER ONE.

The Engineers started again, but on a double pass Strickland juggled the ball, then tried to throw it to his buddy, Barron. The leather bounded back toward Tech's goal with Barron and Morehead in pursuit. It was a backward pass all right. Morehead, being a foot longer than Pat, got there first on a long dive and folded the ball in his arms on Tech's 5-yard line.

Reeling from fumbleness, the Engineers lined up and saw Askew canter around left end on a lateral pass for a touchdown, but believe it or not, a Vanderbilt lineman was seen holding and the 15-yard penalty erased the score.

The play was like a shower of cold water on the Tech rooting section. It showed that it was possible for opposition to have a tough break. Up to this time the Engineers had been lighting third off the match.

THAT'S A HELP.

Parker passed and passed and finally completed one to MacArthur, of Tech, on the 11-yard line.

Tech had Vandy completly bottled up by land and blanketed by air now. That much was apparent. Colvin replaced MacArthur, who was worn-out jumping after Vanderbilt passes. But on the very first play, Strickland broke through the line and fumbled the ball into the open at the feet of Thomas. The Commodore, yawning, fell on it and gave Vanderbilt a stand just 18 yards from Tech's goal.

Coach Alexander promptly sent in Cherry, a sophomore fullback (his first varsity appearance, by the way) to replace Strickland.

NEW PASS TRY.

Parker brought out a new pass formation and fired one at Berry, substitute end. Berry was on the 1-yard line when he reached for it but Hart jumped up and batted it down. Then Parker threw again and this time Askew beat the Tech secondary to it and grabbed it for 10 yards and a first down on Tech's 10-yard stripe.

It was the first completed Vanderbilt pass and it hit the Engineers like a ton of paving stone.

Once more Parker called out the old lateral pass play that had scored two touchdowns, one real, the other phantom. Tom Jones rushed in and broke it up by batting the ball down, but of course a Vanderbilt player recovered it.

VANDY STOPPED.

Askew was smothered on a double pass and when Parker skied the ball again it went over the line for a touchback.

Vandy could not drive it and could not chunk it over. The Tech defense was absolutely airtight.

The helf ended in two plays. Vanderbilt had made three first downs in the period, Tech one. The Yellow Jackets had been tangled up with their own goal line all the time and had been fighting back one Vandy attack after another.

Third Quarter.

Vanderbilt returned the lineup that had started except that Mouse Leonard was out and Askew was in his place. Parker was running the team at quarter. Coach McGugin, following his usual policy, was playing his team as nearly a unit as possible from start to finish. They were in fine shape.

Coach Alexander had Speer and Fincher at the tackles and Farmer at center. Maree was still in the dressing room receiving heat treatments for his injured leg.

Pat Barron brought the kick-off back 42 yards, coming in a burst of speed from behind his goal line. Tech was penalized 5 yards, ran three plays and punted.

KICKS FLY.

Jones downed Askew in his tracks on the 15-yard line. Schwartz punted back. Flowers answered with a high kick that Herron killed on Vandy's 5-yard line. And Tech was sitting pretty.

Announcement here of the final score, Georgia 7, New York University 6, set off a wild roar of joy from the crowd.

Schwartz punted 40 yards from behind his goal line and Barron brought it back 7 yards to Vandy's 35-yard stripe.

CAIN AND BARRON.

Cain hit the line for 3. Then Cain on a half spinner gave it to Barron, who made 7 for a first down. Barron, then Cain, drove into the line and the ball moved 5 yards. Again Cain half turned and handed it to Barron, who made 6 and another first down. The stands were yelling for them.

From the Vanderbilt 14-yard line Cain started, and he was stopped by a mass at the line. Flowers slipped under the arms of Leyendecker and got 5 on an off-tackle play. Barron rammed into the same sector and won 3 more. Tech needed 2 for first down.

The rush line took a firm hold and charged; Barron followed them and seemed to have made it. But when the line was brought out for measurement the ball lacked six inches of touching the forward pole. The ball went over on the five-yard line and Tech's best offensive effort had been wrecked.

THREAT KILLED.

Schwartz punted out 35 yards. Tech started back by air, but Parker intercepted MacArthur's pass and hustled it back to the 35-yard line. The Commodores ran two plays and punted. Barron fumbled the ball and the Vandy men who had come down to tackle sat down on the ball instead.

This gave Vandy another setup on Tech's 25-yard line. It was a gain of 71 yards on an intercepted pass and a fumble. That is the height of economy.

Little Askew, on the first play, caught the Engineers breathing hard and ran 15 yards off tackle. Coach Alexander sent in Holt for Fincher and Hart for Barron. He was juggling his substitutes to keep fresh men engaged, but the supply was getting low.

BALL PASSES.

The Commodores gathered themselves together for the assault. Three running plays were broken up by slashing line charging. Then the old lateral pass, Thomas to Askew, was lassoed for no gain and the ball went over on the seven-yard line.

There seemed no limit to the ability and the courage of the Yellow Jackets to stop Vandy from close range.

Flowers punted out. Vandy drove back, using Fortune as a plunging weapon. The quarter ended with Fortune just getting up his steam. Thomas was called on one play to give Fortune a rest; he fumbled, but—you guessed it—recovered.

Fourth Quarter.

They changed goals, got a drink of water and went to work again. Fortune was a riot. He got eight yards and a first down through the middle of the Tech line and put the ball down on Tech's nine-yard line.

Well, the Yellow Jackets hitched up their trousers, slapped each other on the back and stopped 'em. Parker pulled out the ancient Statue of Liberty play, but Herron broke it up for a 10-yard loss. When Tech took the ball away from them it was on the 15-yard stripe.

Flowers punted 45 yards on first down and Vandy was set back to midfield. MacArthur batted down a pass (Author's note: Where have I heard that one). Schwartz punted high and short of the goal line. It bounced high on the three-yard line. Captain Scheffer caught it and ran across the goal line with it unable to check his momentum.

CONFERENCE HELD

The officials here held a conference. They could not decide whether to rule it a touchback or give the ball to Tech where Scheffer first had touched it. That was silly. Everybody knew the answer to it. Tech's ball on the three-yard line of course. Old Mike Donahue, I'd guess off hand, straightened them out on it.

Flowers, from his customary position back of his own goal line, punted out. Maree, partially recovered under Mike Chambers' emergency measures, returned to the game to replace Holt. Fortune bucked center for seven but the trusty Statue of Liberty play and Ed Herron's alertness cost Vanderbilt 10 yards. So Parker punted.

The kick was short of the goal line. It bounced high. The Commodores crowded around waiting for it to fall. It fell in Hart's arms and, taking them by surprise, he ran it back 25 yards. Careful measurement showed that the punt netted Vanderbilt a 25-yard loss.

WORN DOWN

It was Tech's ball on her 35-yard line. There were five minutes to play. Strickland returned to replace Flowers and Colvin took MacArthur's place. But the Jackets were pretty well worn with their endless succession of goal line defenses and could not get far. Herron punted.

Vandy started back from her 35-yard line and on the first play Kid Askew got mad at something and took a swing at Vance Maree. The officials opened court and after a long trial found Maree guilty of scowling at Askew. Fifteen yards and costs.

From the 41-yard line Fortune bucked out a first down—what a boy he was. But Sugar Cain stopped the march by intercepting a fourth down pass on his 28-yard line.

PASSES RUSHED

There were three minutes to play. Coach Alexander sent in the crippled Doug Graydon in hopes of having him connect up a pass. He got off one to Jones for 11 yards and a first down.

But on succeeding efforts, all obviously advertised, of course, Graydon was rushed so hard he could not get the ball away. And that was all. First downs in the half had been Vanderbilt 4, Tech 3. It was as bitter a defensive battle as ever was fought on Grant field.

The Engineers had held Vandy off four times inside the 10-yard line and had spent all their strength in those superb stands. No Tech eleven ever fought so courageously, so intelligently and gained so little for their efforts.

PURDUE'S HANDICAP.

Purdue has been handicapped by the shoulder injury to Jack White, veteran quarterback who ran the Riveters through last year's great string of victories.

PURPLE SHAKES HOOSIER JINX IN 25-TO-0 WIN

"Hard Luck Hank" Bruder Leads Northwestern in Triumph.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Northwestern's powerful football eleven swept aside Indiana, 25 to 0, in its dash toward a Western conference championship before a homecoming crowd of 15,000 here today.

The Wildcats, their appetite for victory whetted by the memory of Indiana upset victories of the past three years, presented irresistible strength in the line and a deceptive passing attack. The Hoosier jinx was smothered.

LUCK TURNS.

Hank Bruder, the hard luck boy of the Big Ten, led the Purple team to victory with his running and accurate tosses. The big Wildcat line opened wide holes in the Indiana defense, through which Russell and Moore plunged for whatever yardage was needed.

Meanwhile, the Hoosiers were unable to dent Northwestern's defense. The Wildcats wasted no time in proving their superiority. After taking a Hoosier punt early in the first period on their own 28-yard line, the Purple backs broke through for two first downs and then Bruder passed to Russell, 36 yards away, on the Crimson 5-yard line. On the third attempt Russell plunged over, and Bruder place-kicked goal. Taking the next kickoff the Wildcats marched 70 yards on power plays for another score, again by Russell. Bruder missed the try for point.

PASSES COUNT.

Again Northwestern received a kickoff and with the start of the second quarter a lateral and two forward passes, Bruder to Hall and Bruder to Oliphant, added another 6 points.

The Wildcats' reserves started to go in, and with Dauer, subbing for Brubaker at quarter for Indiana, getting off several long punts, the Hoosiers came to life and threatened until Dauer's attempted place-kick was blocked. Bruder contributed the game's longest run just before the half ended, intercepting a pass and ambling 56 yards to the Crimson 19-yard line. The gun ended the threat.

Three more passes—Bruder to Hanley, Bruder to Moore and Hanley to Bruder—for a touchdown ended the Wildcats' scoring just before the game ended.

Northwestern piled up a total of 364 yards gained, against 126 by Indiana, and 16 first downs to 9 for the Hoosiers.

Score by periods:
Northwestern	13	6	0	6	—25
Indiana	0	0	0	0	—0

IRISH OFFENSE SWAMPS PENN

then, with fine interference, he was on his way for a touchdown. He ran 65 yards and the Notre Dame contingent stood up with a roar, all knowing Brill's past history at Pennsylvania.

They crowded around, hammered and mauled old man Brill on the back until he must have been almost sorry his son had run so far. It was the finest sprint a football field has ever seen and it shattered the Red and Blue.

From that point on with Frank Cerideo directing the attack, Brill, Savoldi and Schwartz ran wild. They carried the ball as far as they wanted to run. They crashed through for 15 yards, and they galloped for 40. They had a great line giving them a chance and they had as fine blocking and all-around interference as any backs could ask for. They simply ran amuck.

The Four Horsemen averaged around 162 pounds. This Notre Dame backfield today averaged around 190 pounds, and it was just as fast as the Four Horsemen. Pennsylvania never had a chance. If Rockne had cared to keep in his first string, he could have run the score up to 90 or 100 points.

FAST SCORING.

As it was, his first string averaged better than this final counting on the time they were in. There was, however, a big drop to his second and third strings. It was against these reserves that Penn scored three touchdowns. Two came on forward passes to Perina over the goal line. The other came on a short buck after a series of fumbles on both sides finally gave Penn its third chance.

Penn's attack was helpless against Notre Dame's first string. It could not make a first down. It had difficulty in gaining inches, but it carried the ball well against the reserves, who were far below the top layer of talent. Brill alone scored three touchdowns, and two of them came on long, shifting, exciting runs where he showed everything a fine back needs. He weaved and shifted. He used a killing straight arm. He worked his way through with a cool head, and he always had the ablest possible support.

As ball carriers, Savoldi and Schwartz were only a step away. first strong Notre Dame team was They ran with great speed and driving power. They were hard to stop. Even when tackled cleanly, they held their feet and kept plowing on. They were fast enough to swerve and follow the interference provided. This something to look at in football. It is so far beyond anything the season has shown, there is no comparison. For here you have strength, bulk, power, and amazing speed, all ably directed by one of the great quarterbacks of the day.

GREAT LINE.

Moreover, in front, they had a forward wall that charged and slashed and opened up and did a great all-around job. Brill, Schwartz and Savoldi ran up three touchdowns before you could breathe twice after they got started. The first string scored 28 points against Penn in less than two periods. Penn's only battle with the Irish was with the second and third string entries, who had rough sailing.

Notre Dame made most of its distance by the running game. Few passes worked on either side. Rockne had no need of passes when almost every other play was good for a touchdown, once the Irish got warmed up and on their way.

Notre Dame led, 28 to 0, at the end of the second period. Then Penn scored on the second team through a long run by Wilson and a forward pass to Perina, but, when Penn began to get busy again, Rockne rushed back his first string, and again the wild stamped. Headed by Martin Brill and ably supported by Savoldi, Schwartz and Mullins started all over again.

When his team had 53 points, made in less than 30 minutes of actual play, Rockne again gave his reserves a chance. Again the Quakers got going, but the gap was too wide. The first battalion had left Pennsylvania slaughtered on the field, as 80,000 spectators looked at the best team they had ever seen.

Pass, Downes to Maffett, Gives Georgia 7-6 Victory Over N. Y. U.

times, and each time the door had slammed in the faces of the Bulldogs as they sought to score.

It takes a team with great mental poise and courage to come back after that. Georgia did.

SECOND HALF.

The Georgia touchdown came early in the second half. McNamara attempted a quick kick deep in his own territory and the ball went to Georgia on the Violets' 40-yard line.

From there they took it over, a forward pass from Downes to Maffett bringing the score from from the 10-yard line.

It was a pass that had given the Bulldogs one of the cruelest breaks of the day in the closing minutes of the second half. They had completed it, from Downes to Maffett, but Maffett had caught it with one foot out of the end zone and it did not count.

MAFFETT CLEAR.

The second time they used it Maffett was clear in the end zone. Downes seemed to impart some slowness to the ball. It loafed along in the air for what seemed to be hours. It idled along there with the frantic figures racing beneath it and Maffett ready for the catch.

It seemed to wobble in the air as if it had visited some of the neighboring speakeasies, but at last it tumbled down into Maffett's arms and this time he was within the zone and the score was tied.

Catfish Smith kicked the point that made the difference.

HAD TO RISE.

In winning this game the Georgia team had to come back in the second half with better football than they had shown in the first half. They did it, and in doing so they had the services of some football players who had no superiors on any field today.

Red Maddox, playing one of the guards, smashed his side of the line to pieces time after time. He was a great pain to the Violet attack and he was opening holes when his team had the ball. No greater exhibition of guard playing has been seen in quite a span of time.

At center Demi-Tasse Tassapoulas rose to new heights. Some of the old spirit of his forefathers came to life today and he went all the way. He joined with the two guards in making holes for Georgia's spin play that was quite successful. He intercepted one pass. He got the ball back on all plays well and played one fine game generally.

BEST FULLBACK.

Jack Roberts was the best fullback on the field today. Marion Dickens was another dazzling threat on the attack.

And on the ends Smith and Maffett played the sort of game that one has come to expect from them.

Time after time they brought the crowd into a frenzy of cheering by their smashing of interference and by their tackling.

And Austie Downes ran the team well, mixed his plays and added some excellent play of his own.

VIOLET HERO.

The Violet hero was Bob McNamara, who did almost everything for them. He kicked, passed, played safety and caught passes. In the closing minutes Tanguay was great.

And so New York University has joined Yale, and is the second leading eastern team to bow before the prowess of the Georgians.

Harry Mehre handled his material well, substituting smartly and with timely thoroughness.

And so the Bulldogs from Athens way are back in the public eye again. Very much so. No other team from Dixie has come forward with two such victories in intersectional contests.

Arkansas Defeated By Oklahoma Aggies

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Oklahoma Aggies broke through a stubborn Arkansas defense in the last half of their game here today to run up a 26-to-0 score against the University of Arkansas Razorbacks before 7,000 home-coming spectators.

Playing on even terms with the Sooner eleven for the first quarter and the greater part of the second, the Porker line weakened just before the half to allow an Aggie score, and the half ended 6 to 0.

In the final period the Oklahoma crew put out a final scoring spurt and rushed across three touchdowns through a tired Arkansas team.

Oklahoma scored its first touchdown in the closing minutes of the first half when D. Fisher, substitute back, leaped high in the air to snag a short pass from Highfill, a brother substitute, and ran 18 yards to the Arkansas goal. Highfill's try for extra point went wild.

Arkansas began a drive in the third quarter that could not be sustained when within scoring distance, and the Aggies added the finishing touch to the afternoon by stampeding down the field for three more counters in the last period.

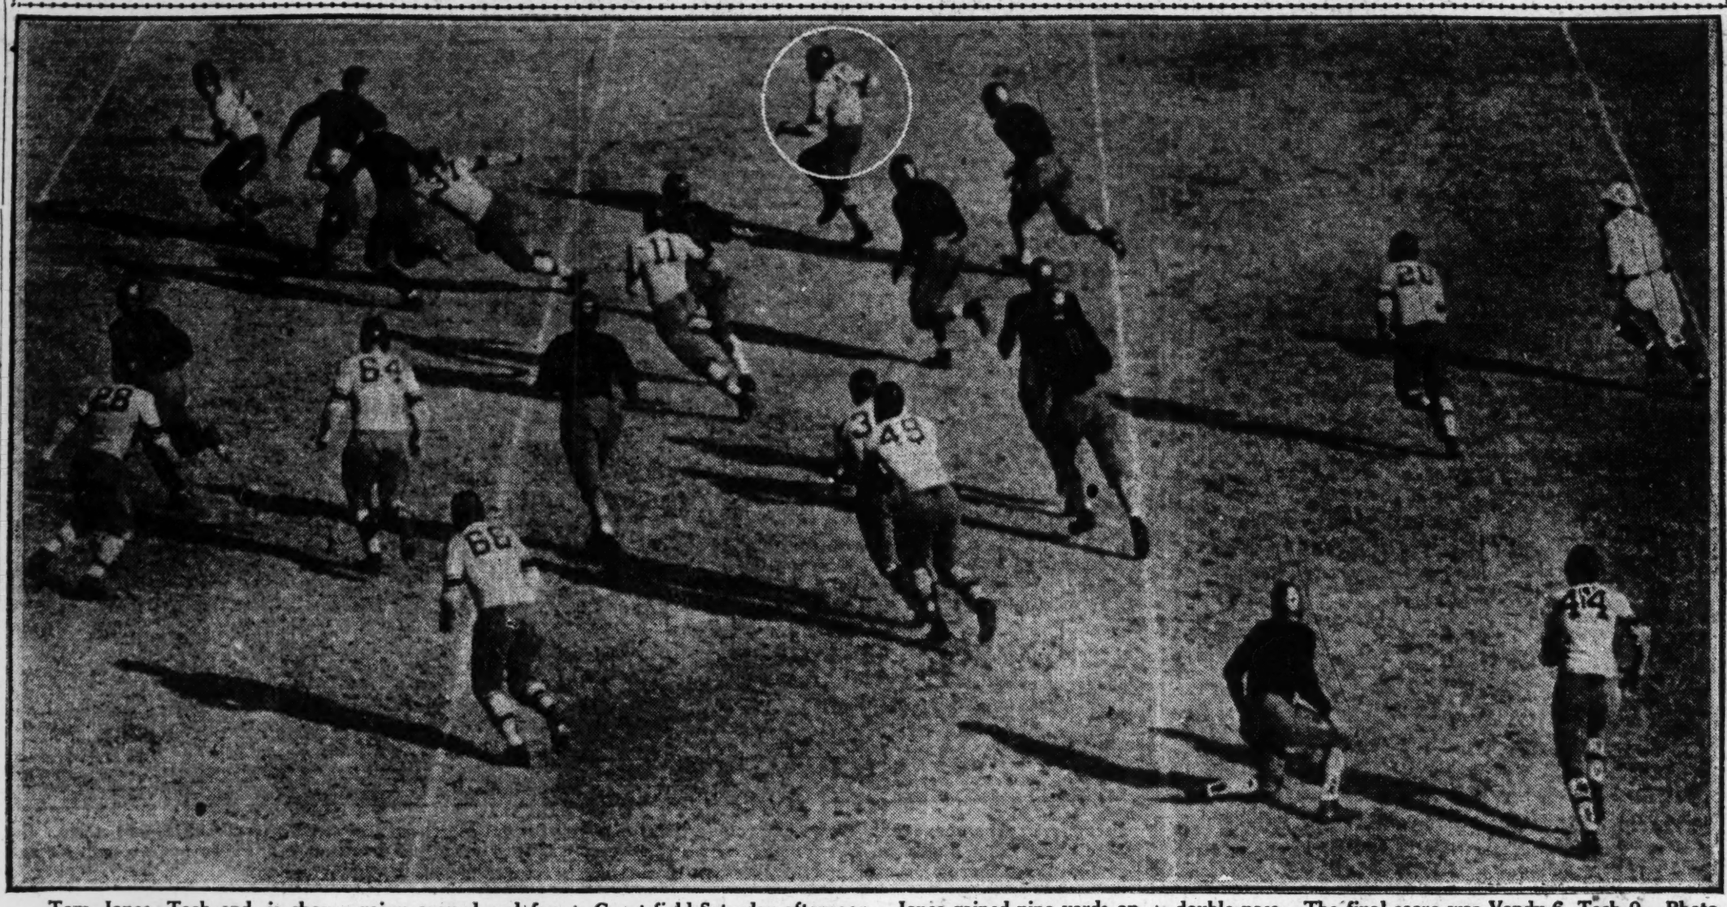

Presbyterian Beats Wake Forest, 13 to 0

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Presbyterian College ran its winning streak to seven in a row by trouncing the demon Deacons of Wake Forest College here this afternoon, 13 to 0, before a crowd of 3,000. Two perfect field goals from the 23-yard line by Copeland and a touchdown by Jimmie Green gave the Blue Stockings their points.

Dartmouth Spanks Allegheny, 43 to 14

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Dartmouth defeated Allegheny in a colorless contest here today, 43 to 14. Dartmouth started its second team and rolled up 33 points in the opening period. The third string Indians went in but Allegheny went into action to score and Dartmouth rushed its higher classed players back into action to hold the lead.

Tom Jones, Tech Star, Circles End for Gain Against Vandy

Ralph McGill's Running Story of Georgia's Victory

POLO GROUNDS, N. Y., Nov. 8. Following is a running story by Ralph McGill, Constitution staff writer, on the Georgia-N. Y. U game here this afternoon:

There was only the unceasing roar from the city, the hopeful call of the peanut venders and the clatter of telegraph keys warming up an hour and a half before the Georgia game with New York University.

Long queues were forming blocks long on the outside to purchase the cheaper seats. A few blocks away at the Yankee stadiumt here was a small cheer to greet the long line of cadets who were marching in to see the Illinois-Army game.

Coogan's bluff, crowned by tall apartment houses, frowned down from the west end of the stadium. There was a brisk southwest wind blowing across the east-west field.

WET AND SOFT.

The playing field appeared wet and soft in the section where Texas leaguers to center field fall safe. Harry Mehre, Lulldog coach, came out and walked over the field, testing spots with his toe.

The Giant management had sodded the infield and it is an inch or so higher than the remainder of the field, and softer.

The Bulldogs came on the field at 1:20 o'clock and got a scattered cheer. Two full teams ran signals up the field, while Moran ran behind a line of eight men, so that the squad of 30 might get warmed up.

VIOLETS OUT.

The New York University team, clad in vivid violet jerseys and the conventional football bloomers, came out five minutes later and went to work.

The teams left the field 30 minutes before game time. Subway kiosks and elevated stairways were disgorging crowds and indications were that some 40,000 or more would see the game.

Jess Neeley, Alabama end coach, came in the press box to scout Georgia. Neeley declared there was no chance for Alabama to participate in a proposed charity game in New York, as there was a definite rule against it.

BACK AGAIN.

The Violets came back on 15 minutes before game time. They wore white headgears and looked swell. They were followed immediately by the New York University band, led by the cheer leaders, who carried their megaphones at "present arms." The band wore violet coats, white trousers and white Sam Brown belts. They also looked grand.

Harry Mehre started his "shock troops" guards and Jim Stoinoff at fullback.

Georgia got the big cheer. The Bulldogs came on ten minutes before the kickoff hour. The starting team went into a huddle.

SECOND TRY.

And so, with the rumble and whir of the elevated and the voice of the city roaring away, the Bulldogs prepared for their second effort of the year in the east.

First Quarter.

New York won the toss and the Violet line spread out to kick. Bombs exploded from the roof, the bands dinned away and Schneider kicked off to Chandler, who brought it to his 33-yard line.

Dickens jammed right through the middle for 5 yards in 2 plays and then Spurgeon Chandler booted it down field to Bob McNamara, hero of the Carnegie Tech game. He fumbled but recovered and the Violet line went into action on its own 23-yard line.

BOOT AWAY.

They sent the McNamara brothers, Bill and Bob, in two plays and there was no gain. The latter kicked and Nemecek deaded the ball at Georgia's 40-yard line.

On a spin play, Jim Stoinoff went skipping through for 10 yards and the first down of the game. It caught the Violets flat.

"Well," said Austie Downes, "we'll try it again," and so he did, and Marion Dickens went storming through gates ajar for 12 yards and another first down.

CLOSE PUNT.

They were at the Violet 30-yard line. Two plays were stopped but a short flat pass worked for 5 yards. Chandler punted over the goal line, missing the sideline by a yard.

Bob McNamara squirmed through a hole at right guard for 5 yards. He hammered for 3 more. The Violets set for a double pass but the toss back was bad and it was spilled on the 15-yard line.

McNamara got out a short punt and Georgia had it at the New York University 39-yard line.

It was a chance. The Bulldog was fighting hard. A line play was halted and then Austie dropped back. Spurgeon Chandler raced out alone and Downes simply dropped back, tossed nonchalantly to him, and the Georgia back went racing out of bounds at the 16-yard line.

LINE RALLIES.

The Violet line rallied and flung back three line plays with a great snarling charge. Chandler tried a pass to Stoinoff but McNamara grabbed it on his own 3-yard line and, foolish though it was, got it to his 20.

Herb Maffett made a great play to stop one try and Tassapoulas mobbed another one. A quick kick went out to the Bulldogs' 38-yard line and nothing could be done with an advance. Chandler booted it right back to the Violet 19-yard line, where old Demi Tasse deaded it.

The crowd seemed to be evenly divided, each team getting a great roar.

Georgia's line, playing coldly and mercilessly, slapped back two plays. Smith and Bennett killed another in cold blood and McNamara kicked to Downes, who got it back to the Georgia 43-yard line as the first quarter ended.

Second Quarter.

Georgia had made three first downs to none for N. Y. U. Two had come by running plays and another on a pass.

Jack Roberts, the Ripper, went in for Stoinoff as the second quarter started. And how he ripped them. Chandler made a yard and then Roberts jammed for 9 and a first down, pushing three men ahead of him.

Then came disaster. Dickens caught a pass and fumbled, the officials ruling that Joe Lamark touched it before it went out of bounds, and the Violets had it at their own 48-yard line.

BOB PLOWS.

Running like a mad man, Bob McNamara plowed for a first down on two plays and then the Georgia line fought back two attacks. It was time for a pass.

And pass it was, Bob McNamara tossing a high one to Captain Nemecek for a first down at Georgia's 29-yard line.

Red Maddox and Red Leathers rushed in to the guard positions. N. Y. U. took time out and conferred. The bands blared away and there was a mighty hum and buzzing over the double-decked stadium as the excited crowd speculated on the prospects of a touchdown. New York had 29 yards to go.

ONE-MAN PLANT.

They stepped into the line from the huddle, Red Leathers met Bob McNamara and stopped him. On the next play the one-man backfield, Bob McNamara, fought over his right tackle and went for a first down to the 14-yard line.

Hamrick went in for Davis. The Violet one-man attack was stopped when he fumbled and recovered, losing 2 yards.

Then disaster really struck. McNamara, on a double pass, shot a forward pass to Joe Hugret, right end, who caught the ball and all Georgia flatfooted. He spun out of Downes' arms, the only man not fooled on the play, and romped over for a touchdown.

IT'S ALL RIGHT.

Bob McNamara missed the goal. He had done everything else and could afford to fail now and then.

N. Y. U. turned on the pressure even harder with a kick-off over the goal line, starting from his 20-yard line. Jack Roberts ripped to the 37-yard line.

There the Violets rose up and stopped them, Chandler kicking to the Violet 30-yard line.

PUNT AND BACK.

Two raging plays by Bob McNamara netted but a yard and he dropped back for the punt. Downes got it at his 30 and ran it out of bounds at his own 44-yard line.

Jack Roberts literally ripped past his own left tackle, shaking off three tacklers who were left with empty arms and staring eyes. He sped on past the halfback and was almost by Bob McNamara, the last man in the way, when the ubiquitous Violet back nailed him at the 26-yard line. Roberts did it by himself, having absolutely no interference.

The Violet line stopped the Ripper and then Buster Mott came running in to replace Dickens. Mehre was putting all his big guns in in an effort to tie.

LOSE BALL.

Mott failed to gain and Chalmers, big Violet guard, knocked down a pass. The Georgia line buckled and broke before the rush of the Violet forwards as Chandler tried to pass and he was smothered, the ball going over to N. Y. U. at their own 30-yard line.

Bob McNamara spun off his own left tackle for 15 yards. The Georgia line was not quite meeting the charge of the Violet forwards and the secondary was taking a hard pounding.

They rose up and stopped them three times and McNamara punted out of bounds at the Georgia 19-yard line.

GREAT PUNT.

Mott slipped and fell, losing a yard. Chandler dropped back and got a heavy foot under one, kicking from the 19-yard line to the Violet 15-yard line. It was a 66-yard punt and it got a great roar from the crowd.

Dimly on the air came the yells from the Yankee stadium, five blocks away, as the Army and Illinois battled.

The Violets took time out. The double tiers of seats were black with people, some 45,000 of them jammed in to see the southern team play.

THE BIG BRUTE!

They started, trying Herb Maffett's end. Maffett hit McNamara right in the lobby and he bent double, going back for no gain.

Joe Lamark made a yard but the Violets were holding on the play and the ball went back to the 15-yard line. For the first time they were in serious trouble.

The punt was rushed and short, but Georgia was offside and they had another chance to get it out. Also another chance to get it blocked. It was hurried again but Bob McNamara got it out of bounds at the 40-yard line.

PASSES CLICK.

Buster Mott passed to Roberts and he was almost away, going out of bounds at the Violet 26-yard line. That was so great that they tried again, Mott driving one to Roberts for six yards.

The Violets, recalling that thrilling last half in 1929 when the Georgians all but passed themselves to victory, took time out.

They slapped backs and exhorted one another.

TOUGH BREAK.

Striking like a snake, Buster Mott spun back into the line for six yards, over his own right tackle and a first down at the 13-yard line.

Then came one of those ironic but heartless breaks of fate, a touchdown that wasn't one.

Austie Downes threw a pass that Herb Maffett leaped high to take, and when he came down his feet were behind the end zone. He had the ball but it must be caught in the end zone. The field was a little too short on the play.

HALF ENDS.

The ball was brought out to the 20-yard line, but the half ended after two line plays had been run.

The Bulldogs had driven to the 16-yard line, to the 33 and to the 27, and had finally completed a pass over the line but not a single effort had been converted into points.

Georgia had made three first downs in the second quarter to four for N. Y. U. It gave Georgia a total of six and the Violets had only their four. But they had six points on the score board and they had loomed larger and larger as the half drew to a close.

BAND PLEASES.

The Violet band formed a huge "G" in the field before the Georgia section. That got a cheer, but when they broke into the stirring refrain of Dixie, there seemed to be thousands cheering. New York is made up largely of Texans and southerners and they rarely get to cheer the grand old war tune.

The band formed an "N Y U" and played their own Alma Mater, a solemn song that pulled the 45,000 to their collective feet.

The sun was about gone and a cruel, cold wind was whipping down from the bluff and playing hide and go seek through the concrete tiers of seats.

HARD ON HANDS.

There were muttered curses up and down the press rows as stiffened fingers slipped from cold keys and the wind kept the paper fluttering in the machines.

The press box is simply several rows of planks put across the tops of seats ahead and the 50 or more men working were crammed in like so many sardines.

Two convivial drunks took the field and tackled each other while the crowd cheered.

Third Quarter.

Dickens went in for Mott and Stoinoff for Roberts in the Georgia backfield as the second half started.

Georgia received and the ball was again kicked into the end zone and the Bulldogs had to start from their own 20-yard line.

Marion Dickens, on a spin play, cut through for nine yards. Chandler assayed the same play and made four and a first down. The southern crowd was yelling for touchdown march.

The big Violet line stopped Stoinoff but Marion Dickens came surging right through the center of the line for 10 yards, a mighty plunge that broke the defense temporarily. Had he not fallen he might have got away.

TOUGH LINE.

That Violet line was tough. Two more tries were halted. The Bulldogs went into a huddle. It was a kick formation, but was a trick, with Stoinoff going in the line. It netted just 4 yards and Georgia kicked.

It was a great punt to the 6-yard line but the battling Scot named Bob McNamara hauled it back past two tacklers to his 19-yard line.

Georgia stopped Lamark for a loss of 5 yards, and the crafty McNamara shot out a short kick that went out of bounds at his own 40-yard line.

PENALTY.

The line stopped a play and on the next one an overzealous Violet was clinging to a Georgia limb and the penalty was 15 yards.

Downes didn't wait. He passed to Chandler and he grabbed it out of the air at the 10-yard line.

Jack (The Ripper) Roberts went rushing into replace Stoinoff. The Georgia Bulldogs were knocking at the door for the fifth time. The teams gathered, the faces of the players showing white and tense in the gathering gloom of the stadium's pit.

BANG! IT'S O'ER.

A pass out in the flat territory. Downes to Dickens, was missed by an inch as the frantic Dickens stretched his fingers for it. Then they tried Jack Roberts, but the left side of the Violet line held him to a yard. The ball was at the 9-yard line and third down.

And then it came. Austie Downes flowed back. It was the same play that Maffett had completed outside the end zone just before the half ended.

He was clear in the end zone. The ball seemed to float along as if it were looking around at the scenery. And then Herb Maffett sunk his fingers into it and held it. The score was tied.

ONE BIG TOE.

Catfish Smith swung his toe. The ball shot forward on a rising line and plunged through the posts for one point. The Bulldogs were out in front. It was 7 to 6.

The Georgians swarmed down on the Violet kickoff and held them back at the 14-yard line. Not only that but they stopped two plays and forced a punt.

Georgia was playing better ball. They had it at the Violet 46-yard line. Two plays were stopped and Chandler's kick was almost blocked, going but five yards as two tackles piled on him.

GREAT FIGHTERS.

The Violets were at their own 39-yard line. Georgia was fighting, too. They ran McNamara out of bounds for a 2-yard loss.

Catfish Smith knifed through and got McNamara for a 5-yard loss. It was a great play.

Georgia drew a 15-yard penalty and then stopped McNamara for a 1-yard gain.

FUMBLE HELPS.

Bill McNamara charged into the line and the ball squirted out of his fingers into the air. Marion Dickens grabbed it and Georgia was on the way again from her own 47-yard line.

Jack "The Ripper" ripped for 9 yards. Chick Meehan sent in the star he did not need against Carnegie Tech when he beat them. James (Eva) Tanguay, his big star back, replaced Jack McDonald at left half.

The great roar of southern voices pleading for a touchdown roared unceasingly, beating off Coogan's Bluff and rebounding from the flat of the Polo Grounds. There was hysteria in it as Jack Roberts slammed in for 6 yards and a first down.

VIOLETS HOLD.

They stopped him the next time, Tanguay making the tackle. They stopped him again and the New York crowd cheered hopefully. It was third down. Marion Dickens tried the N. Y. U line, which had seemed to be cracking a few plays before, but they stopped him.

Chandler punted out of bounds at the 19-yard line. Eva Tanguay got his first chance. Red Maddox crucified him for the loss of a yard.

So they went back to the old reliable Bob McNamara and he gave them three yards and a punt that was out of bounds at Georgia's 35-yard line.

Behind perfect interference from Chandler and Downes, Marion Dickens came galloping 18 yards around his own left end. It was the prettiest run of the game.

Roberts made a yard as the quarter ended. The Bulldogs were ahead, 7 to 6, with 15 minutes left to play.

Fourth Quarter.

Jack Roberts broke off left tackle for 16 yards and a first down. The ball had been driven to the Violets' 29-yard line.

Chandler broke through for eight yards and fumbled, but Herb Maffett fell on it to hold the gain. They stopped Dickens once but the referee ruled a holding penalty against Georgia and they were set back 15 yards. It was the third penalty which had come at a very inopportune moment indeed.

New York held and took the ball away on downs. Maddox was playing the greatest game of his career as the Bulldogs thrust back two line assaults. He was driving his man back in the plays both times.

ONE BIG POINT.

A quick kick gave Georgia the ball at her own 45-yard line. They tried one play and kicked right back. That one point was looking larger and larger as the minutes went by.

The Violets were starting from their own 20 and got nowhere. They kicked out and Georgia had it at her own 40-yard line.

Two line plays failed and then the Violets got their chance. Downes was rushed and Vic Connor, substitute quarterback, leaped in and intercepted the attempted pass. The Violets had it at the Bulldogs' 44-yard line.

BACK AGAIN.

Two line plays failed and then Demitasse Tassapoulas took his big dirigible body up in the air to intercept a pass and give the ball back to Georgia at the 38-yard line.

Armin Waugh, the young chief himself, went in for Dickens. Mehre was throwing some speed in there in the closing minutes, hoping to make another score.

Two penalties helped get the ball down the field to the Violet's 44-yard line.

BIG PUSH.

Chandler punted short out of bounds at the 23-yard line. There were three and a half minutes left to play. The big N. Y. U. team gathered itself for the big push. They were stopped twice in the line, but a pass from Tanguay to Nemecek netted 10 yards, and a first down. Tanguay threw another that Hugret grabbed for another first down. The big machine was running at top speed.

Big Eva Tanguay got loose for nine yards around Georgia's left end and the Bulldogs took time out.

Forty thousand people were screaming and the sound was terrific as it crashed back and forth from the stands.

BANG AWAY.

They did it again. Tanguay tossing one to his old friend McNamara to give the Violets the ball and first down at the Georgia 25-yard line.

Time was flying, but so were the passes. They came right back with one for nine yards to Hugret and then the Georgians got one.

Jack Roberts leaped into the air and intercepted one at his own 4-yard line. It was worth anything to get the ball. And as he got it the whistle blew and the game was done.

Georgia had won its second intersectional game of the year from one of the east's strongest teams.

Missouri Conquers Iowa State Cyclones

COLUMBIA, Mo., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The University of Missouri Tigers took the aerial route today to defeat the grid forces of Iowa State college 14 to 0 and send the Cyclones to the cellar position in the Big Six conference race.

It was the 12th consecutive defeat for the Iowans in two years and Missouri's first conference victory of the season.

Late in the second quarter, the Tigers' quarter, Collings, caught a 20-yard pass from Vandyne, Tiger left end, and raced 35 yards across the goal line with the Iowans strung out behind him.

In the next period after the Tigers had made a powerful drive down the field, Heitz tossed a short pass to Vandyne, who stumbled acros sthe Iowa goal for another touchdown. Vandyne added both extra points.

TULANE PUSHED TO BEAT AUBURN TIGERS, 21 TO 0

Greenies Extended To Wrest Three Touchdowns From Tigers.

By William McG. Keef.
Sports Editor, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 8.—It took every ounce of Tulane's man power to beat the Auburn Plainsmen, 21 to 0, this afternoon at Tulane stadium, the visitors showing surprising stamina and fighting power in the last half to hold the vicious, hard-fighting Green Wave to a lone touchdown, though the Greenies tried desperately to run up a score.

Led by the flashy Jimmy Hitchcock and spurred on by the return to the lineup of Lindley Hatfield, the plainsmen fought themselves into tatters not only striving to hold off the Greenies, but trying to outfight them and score a few points and not a few of the Tulanians were tattered and torn, too.

Nollie Felts shared with Hitchcock the all-around individual honors of the day. Felts, a superb blocker and tackler and as dependable as night, played as fine a game as any back ever played. He scored two of Tulane's three touchdowns and both times won his right to carry the ball over by having much to do with getting it down there in scoring distance.

BEAUTIFUL PUNTS.

And when Hitchcock began getting off some beautiful punts for Auburn, Felts simply arose to the occasion and brought back memories of "Peggy" Flournoy with his consistent punting.

Next to Felts Jerry Dalrymple, "Preacher" Roberts and Jack Holland played in their usual All-Southern fashion. But then, Tulane fans have got used to expecting nothing else from those lads.

It took the toughest kind of football to gain against those Tiger Plainsmen or to keep them from gaining. Though Tulane made 17 first downs to Auburn's 5, penalties against the Greenies for rough play, for offsides and for holding and several costly fumbles by the Greenies gave Auburn a few dangerous-looking scoring chances.

The officials had their hands full all afternoon. Several of the Greenies, smarting under what they believed was drastic officiating when Don Zimmerman, after running 58 yards across the goal line, was called back and a 15-yard penalty charged to Tulane for holding, evidently got real rough in their work. Dalrymple was called down and another 15-yard penalty inflicted when he gave Hatfield an extra push in the face.

BODENGER CHASED.

Morris Bodenger was put out of the game and Tulane penalized half of the distance to the goal line (23 yards) right behind the Dalrymple penalty when Bodenger was accused of slugging.

After a scoreless first period, Tulane put over two touchdowns in the second quarter, thanks to a pooped punt made by Hitchcock from his own five-yard line, and sent out of bounds on Auburn's 13-yard line.

A fine 26-yard broken-field run by Don Zimmerman paved the way for the second touchdown, Zimmerman and Felts alternating with the ball and following Flying Don's brilliant run with a steady march down the field.

Auburn, expected to wither in the final period before the fierce charging of Tulane's great line, played like a Spartan corps and, but for a fumble by the crippled Hatfield and the recovery by Jack Holland on Auburn's 18-yard line, the Plainsmen very probably would have shut Tulane in the entire last half.

STOUT RESISTANCE.

From the 18-yard line Zimmerman gained 11 yards on a pretty off-tackle buck, Feltz crashed through center for five more and then, after a fruitless buck by Hodgins, Feltz literally torpedoed his way through for the two yards necessary and a touchdown.

All of Tulane's extra-point tries succeeded, Glover place-kicking one, Zimmerman one and the third being allowed because Auburn was offside.

Tulane probably was penalized more in the game than she has been all season, 68 yards being "collected" by the officials. Auburn was penalized 25 yards, 10 of which were for offsides.

Tulane's starting line-up found both Elmer McCance and Jack Holland on the bench. McCance, his hand bandaged because of a broken thumb, got in for a time, and Holland, though he has been on the sick list, got in and played a great part of the game.

Georgetown Noses Boston Team, 20-19

BOSTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—An educated toe proved the nemesis of Boston college football hopes for the third time this season when the Georgetown Hilltoppers, carried on the wings of one of the finest aerial attacks ever seen here, set them back today 20 to 19.

Each team collected three touchdowns, but Scalzi, Georgetown's flashy field general, proved more adept at placing the ball between the uprights after touchdowns than any of the Eagle booters. Fordham and Marquette also defeated Boston college by kicking.

Georgetown was unable to gain any real advantage by rushing. When they took to the air, however, they literally ran the Eagles ragged.

Score by quarters:

Georgetown	0	0	14	6	—20
Boston College	0	6	7	6	—19

Georgetown scoring: Touchdowns, Scalzi, Brennan, Bozek. Point after touchdown, Scalzi 3 (drop kick). Boston College scoring: Touchdowns, Antos 2; O'Connell. Point after touchdown, Vodoklys (for Mallett).

Centre Overwhelms Wabash College, 53-0

DANVILLE, Ky., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Centre College's Colonels made Home-coming Day a big success this afternoon by whipping the Little Giants from Wabash College, 53 to 0.

The Colonels started scoring in the first period and kept it up the rest of the game, topping off the play with three scores in the final period.

Wabash threatened to score only once, when Slegel intercepted a pass and sprinted to Centre's 25-yard line from the center of the field. Swartout made 15 yards through the center of the line but Engle fumbled on the next play and Centre recovered.

Western Maryland Beats John Carroll

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 8.—(AP) Teese Brubaker, chunky halfback, crushed the John Carroll defense today to lead Western Maryland to its nineteenth straight football victory—and its twenty-third game without a defeat—27 to 0.

Brubaker scored two touchdowns, tossed a pass to Captain Bates, end, for another, and in addition kept Carroll backed up by some great punting.

Printers Will Stage Annual Tournament

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—The Union Printer's International Baseball league will hold its 21st annual baseball tournament next August at Hamilton, Canada.

Marquette Defeats Iowa Hawkeyes, 7-0

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 8.—(AP) A brilliant Marquette team slashed its way to a 7 to 0 win over the University of Iowa today before a frenzied home-coming crowd. A long forward pass, which put the ball on the 1-yard line at the end of the third period, preceded Ronzani's touchdown and Greney's kick, the opening plays of the fourth period.

The Hilltoppers, reaffirming their claim to a place among midwestern gridiron greats, let loose a smashing, kicking, passing attack which the Hawkeyes doggedly resisted for three periods.

Iowa had one chance to score early in the game, but the Marquette line was too firm. Likewise, Marquette once before its touchdown failed to go over.

Tifton's Rams Tie Clemson Reserves

TIFTON, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Georgia State college Rams held the Clemson B team to a scoreless tie today in the first game of the season the Georgia institution has not won.

The Georgians were on the defensive throughout most of the game with the major part of the battling in their territory. Once the Clemson crew had the pigskin within eight yards of the goal.

FIGHTS POSTPONED.

HAVANA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Rain forced a postponement of all prize fights scheduled here tonight. The postponement tentatively set the matches for tomorrow night, weather permitting.

Excitement High as Vandy Invades Tech Flats for Annual Game

Yellow Jacket Sponsors---In the President's Box---Notables at Game

Here are some scenes from the Georgia Tech-Vanderbilt University football game played at Grant Field Saturday afternoon. On the left are shown three Yellow Jacket sponsors, Mrs. Frank Speer, Mrs. Fred Holt and Miss Fenol Edwards. In the center of the layout is shown M. L. Brittain, president of Tech, left; L. L. Morris, president of Georgia Press Association, and Miss Emily Woodward, former head of the Press Association. On the right are some of the notables who attended the game. They are, from left to right, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Smith, Jr., high official of the Masonic lodge; John Steinhauer and his little son, John, Jr. Photos by Rogers and Holloway, staff photographers.

Excitement Runs High As Vandy Faces Tech

Atlanta Hotels Thronged With Nashville Visitors—Shriners Add to Pageant.

By Walter Wilkes.

When Georgia Tech meets Vanderbilt in another chapter of that famous gridiron rivalry, whether the scene be Nashville or Atlanta, there is always a holiday spirit in the air and an abundance of that indefinite something known as color.

With all the waving of banners and flaunting of ribbons, the best of good nature prevails between the opposing factions—before, during and after the game. Saturday's contest proved no exception to the general rule.

As the forenoon wore on, excitement became more and more pronounced in the downtown districts. Hotel lobbies were thronged with visitors from Nashville, some 800 of whom made the trip on two special trains arriving early Saturday morning. Among this number were about 200 Shriners, and they seemed to be even more numerous for their bright yellow coats and red caps were met with on every side.

For an hour Saturday morning in the lobby of the Piedmont hotel, which—like Atlanta's other downtown hostelries, was crowded to capacity for the day—the Shrine band of 50 pieces put on one of its famous concerts, playing, among other numbers, Vanderbilt's "Alma Mater." This was received in the usual reverential silence, with the crowd standing. The Shrine drum corps also put on what might be termed a rattling good exhibition.

Wagering was not so brisk as might have been expected, though bets were reported at everywhere from even money to Tech's being spotted 12 points, most of the "deals" being closed on a 7-point basis. There was plenty of Vanderbilt money in sight, but the Tech supporters were loath to cover it without a two-touchdown handicap, and this the visitors were unwilling to give.

On almost every corner could be found the usual stands containing colors of the rival teams. It was evident that the demand for these patriotic emblems had been badly overestimated. Many downtown shop windows, especially the floral establishments, presented attractive displays in which white and gold chrysanthemums were draped with black silk ribbons. The fact that Tech and Vanderbilt both own allegiance to the gold was an economic boon to the proprietors.

BUSTLE BEGINS.

Grant field began to take on a brisk appearance 45 minutes before game-time, and as the zero hour drew near fleets of automobiles, with a high percentage of taxicabs, began to disgorge their occupants in a gaily-colored stream. Parking areas near the stadium and the famous Techwood drive were black with cars.

The crowd itself appeared to gather slowly, with the main rush taking place in the final 20 minutes. It was perfect weather from the spectators' viewpoint, with a cloudless sky and little breeze. The expected chill in the air did not materialize, and it was clear that many of the steamer rugs brought along by provident fans would not be needed until late in the game, if at all.

Prominent among the group of Shriners, whose red caps formed a splotch of color in the east stands, was a little group bearing particularly efficient-looking mops designed apparently as a rather pointed reflection upon Tech's chances of winning this game.

"ALL QUIET."

The west stands presented, as usual, a more sedate and conservative appearance than the mass across the field. There was little evidence of bright color, the prevailing tone being a dark gray. Contrariwise, the crimson headpieces of the Shriners mingled with the yellow caps of the Tech freshmen and green, red and blue studies in ladies' fall millinery to make the east stands resemble the proverbial riot of color.

Early arrivals at the field were entertained with a radio broadcast of the Illinois-Army game, and announcements of other football scores from time to time during the afternoon were received with varying sentiments. A lusty whoop went up as Georgia took the lead over N. Y. U. in the third quarter, but the statement that Notre Dame was trimming Pennsylvania was greeted with little comment. After all, that was just what everyone expected.

In choice seats on the 50-yard line gathered a little group of Tennessee players and coaches, here to scout their famous state rivals in one of the latter's big games of the season, and pick up some pointers on Vanderbilt plays that might come in useful come Thanksgiving Day. Major Neyland and Coach W. H. Britton had charge of the Vol delegation, which included the famous Bobby Dodd, Buddy Hackman, Hag. Brandt, Thayer, Hickman, Saunders, Kohlhase, Reyburn and Derryberry. Most of these are Tennessee regulars, so it was something of a break for Carson-Newman at any rate.

FINE CROWD.

Both the west and east stands were well filled, as were the dollar seats at the northern end of the field, but there was only a sprinkling of spectators in the southern sector. The total attendance appeared to be in the neighborhood of 20,000.

Between the halves the Tech band—brave in its white and gold uniforms—went through the customary maneuvers on the gridiron, winding up with the Alma Mater as the huge throng of spectators rose and uncovered.

A miniature football game involving "The Tarantulas" and "The Scorpions"—22 kids in the neighborhood of the Flats attired in tiny Tech uniforms—enlivened the intermission. These youngsters went at their game with worlds of enthusiasm as the crowd chuckled and cheered its approval. Who knows but what some future Strupper or Barron first felt the turf of Grant field beneath his toes Saturday?

RIVAL SPONSORS.

The Tech sponsors—Miss Ferol Edwards, Mrs. Frank Speer and Mrs. Fred Holt—bore huge bunches of white and gold chrysanthemums as they sat with their escorts on the east side of the field. Vanderbilt's charming sponsors—the Misses Catherine Simmons, Peggy Alexander and Emmie Keeble—occupied seats behind the little heap of Vandy's golden helmets on the west side.

Present at the game as honor guests of Georgia Tech on Annual Reception Day were some 200 of the state's prominent citizens—industrial leaders, members of the Georgia Press Association, and nearby members of the state legislature. In the first group were noted W. J. Vereen, of Moultrie; H. P. Merkelham, of Rome; Cator Woolford and L. H. Bell, Atlanta.

L. L. Morris, of Hartwell, president of the Georgia Press Association, headed the members of that body which included Miss Emily Woodward, of Vienna, former president; J. H. Williams, of Greensboro, and Rush Burton, of Lavonia.

Among the legislators present were J. W. Culpepper, of Fayetteville; Cecil Neill, of Columbus; J. H. McWhorter, of Oglethorpe; Jud Wilhgit, of Warrenton, and Senator Ralph Rosser, of Lafayette.

Included in the party watching the game from Dr. M. L. Brittain's private box was H. W. Chase, from Allegheny College, Pennsylvania, who is national president of the Beta Kappa fraternity.

TEXAS STEERS DEFEAT BAYLOR

Winners Held Scoreless in First Half, But Win, 14 to 0.

WACO, Texas, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Held scoreless for a half by a fighting Baylor eleven, the University of Texas had enough power in the third and fourth periods to score two touchdowns and win their important Southwest conference melee here today, 14 to 0.

Had it not been for the splendid kicking of little Jake Wilson, Baylor quarterback, the Steers probably would have piled up a larger score.

Texas struck first midway of the third period, when Koy shot a short, underhand pass to Stafford, big sophomore half back, who tore through the Baylor secondary behind clock-like blocking and sprinted 53 yards for a touchdown. Blanton kicked the point.

In the final period a Texas substitute backfield marched half the length of the field for a touchdown through the tired Baylor line. Clewis slipped over for the score, standing up, and Perkins made good the extra point.

Score by periods:

Texas	0	0	7	7—14
Baylor	0	0	0	0— 0

OHIO STATE WINS FROM NAVY, 27-0

Wesley Fesler Leads Buckeyes as Middies Are Outplayed.

By Lathrop Mack,

Associated Press Sports Writer.

MUNICIPAL STADIUM, BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Ohio State rose to its full height today and defeated Navy, 27 to 0, playing almost perfect football and winning its most important intersectional victory in many years.

Victory was sweet to the Buckeyes, who had lost to Northwestern and Michigan and had been tied by Wisconsin in the Western conference in the last three games. Seeking their first victory of the year over a foe of their own caliber, they overpowered an overrated Navy team, scoring in every period and showing superiority in every department of play.

It was Navy's poor passing, Navy's fumbling and Navy's poor pass defense which accounted for the four Ohio touchdowns, plus Ohio's smoother, harder running attack and keener defense.

FESLER STARS.

The versatile Buckeye attack was engineered by Wesley Fesler, all-American end, who was acting captain, signal-caller, punter, passer, ball-carrier and right end on defense, all in one.

Navy took the first kick-off but had to punt. Off-tackle plays from double wing-back formation carried the ball to Navy's 23-yard line. Stuart Holcomb, veteran halfback from Erie, Pa., took the ball at Navy's right tackle, broke through, cut back to his right and romped 23 yards for the score.

The second period was nearly over when Halfback Johnny Gannon, of the Navy, fumbled on his own 27-yard line on a bad lateral pass.

ANOTHER SCORE.

The punting duel was resumed in the third period, but Navy tried a pass, Hagberg to Byng, deep in its own territory and the result was costly. Hinchman took the ball off Byng's fingertips and raced 25 yards for a touchdown with big Bob Haubrich kicking goal from placement.

Ohio then adopted an ultra-conservative policy, Fesler once choosing to punt on fourth down with only inches to gain in Navy's territory. It paid big dividends as Navy became more desperate. Bob Grady, a fast Ohio substitute halfback, intercepted Gannon's pass and ran to Navy's 39-yard line before being tackled. Line plays took the ball to Navy's 14-yard line. Benis then raced to his left and threw to Fullback Bob Horn, who leaped up high in the end zone and took the pass for the fourth touchdown. The Navy line was offside on Ehrnesberger's kick for the extra point and it was awarded to Ohio.

Panthers Defeat Millsaps, 30 to 6

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP) The Panthers of Birmingham-Southern college buried Millsaps by a 30 to 0 score today after the Majors had flashed unexpected offensive and run over a touchdown to gain an early lead.

Hale carried the only Millsaps touchdown over early in the second period and Southern tied the count before the half ended. Four other Southern touchdowns were scored after long runs by Pilgreen, Allbrooks and Blanton.

Cornell Runs Over Hobart Team, 54-0

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Cornell's powerful team ran through the little Hobart eleven almost unchecked today to win a "breather" game, 54 to 0. Gil Dobie used nearly every first and second string player.

'Little Austie' Downes Writes Name on Rolls

Bulldog Quarterback Draws Close to Hall of Fame by Play Saturday.

By Ralph McGill.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8. — When the roll call of quarterbacks is called in December it is extremely likely that the name of Austie Downes, Georgia's quarterback, will lead all the rest, much after the fashion of old Abou Ben Adhem, who was quite a lad himself.

Downes ran a football team here this afternoon that defeated one of the strongest teams in the east, 7 to 6, Georgia showed a very definite superiority in all but about six minutes of the 60 played against N. Y. U.

And Austie Downes was largely responsible for the attack of the Georgia team that should have had another touchdown and would have had had not Herb Maffett's foot strayed a foot or so outside of the end zone when he caught a pass behind the goal line.

The statistics of the game show that Georgia made 13 first downs to seven for New York university. They further show that Georgia completed 7 passes out of 13 attempted for 63 yards and that the Violets of N. Y. U. completed seven for but 51 yards.

Those cold, cold figures show that Austie Downes hauled back punts against some good ends today for 34 yards. They also show that the attack which Downes directed against the Violet defense gained 203 yards rushing with the ball against 79 for the Violets.

This game this afternoon was probably the finest played this year by the Athens eleven, and Downes, while he did nothing that was spectacular for the moment, did one of the finest jobs of quarterbacking that could be done. It was magnificent in its perfection.

ONLY RIVAL

Downes has but one rival in the race for quarterback honors. The gallant and gaudy Bobby Dodd at Tennessee has established an enviable record with the Vols.

But Dodd has had no adversity until this season. Dodd has not had to test his generalship against an intersectional foe of merit. Dodd is getting his first test in adversity this season and it will be interesting to watch him.

Downes handled his football team today about like Fritz Kreisler can handle that fiddle and bow of his. He made no mistakes. He really scored two touchdowns with forward passes, losing one by the unforunate break of circumstances when Maffett leaped outside the end zone.

VIOLETS FOOLED

He fooled the Violets with that pass in the closing minutes of the second quarter. And he came right back with it when they were expecting something else and scored the touchdown that gave the Bulldogs six points for Catfish Smith to add the winning point to.

Downes has held his own for two years against smart conference and smart eastern teams. He has really out thought them. And when he has to be he can be one of the deadliest passers and one of the finest safety men in the game.

Mr. Harry Mehre, his coach, thinks rather well of him. It is because of Downes that Mr. Mehre always looks fondly at fire hails and speaks to and shakes hands with firemen.

FUN LOVER

Downes was entered at Notre Dame before coming to Georgia. One night, so the story goes, Austie Downes went out to get some revenge on some upper classmen. Downes and his freshmen friends brought a fire hose into play and when the upper classmen were wetted down the college heads heard about it and Austie Downes decided to come down south where Harry Mehre was coaching. The college heads are very severe in any college when one goes to squirting a fire hose about the buildings.

Joe Scheffer, the Vanderbilt captain, is another who spent time at Notre Dame. Neither of them played with the freshman team.

And so Mr. Harry Mehre has a deep fondness for fire hoses. Whenever he sees one he stops and looks at it fondly. Had it not been for a fire hose he might not have had one of the best quarterbacks in football.

Georgia outplayed New York university today in every department of the game and behind it was the guiding hand and brain of Austie Downes.

When they call the quarterback roll in December he will be hard to get off the number one spot on the honor roll. Austie Downes has been tried in the fiery furnace of football and emerged pure gold.

Polo Title Match Deferred a Week

Owing to the death of Colonel J. O. Seaman, the senior National Guard cavalry officer of Georgia and a resident of this city, the second match of the championship polo series between the Governor's Horse Guards and the Fort McPherson teams, scheduled for this afternoon, has been postponed until next Sunday.

Colonel Seaman reorganized and commanded the Horse Guards for many years.

PURDUE BUMPS LOWLY CHICAGO

Staggmen Throw Scare But Boilermakers Win, 26-7.

By Paul Mickelson,

Associated Press Sports Writer.

STAGG FIELD, Chicago, Nov. 8. (AP)—Coach Amos Alonzo Stagg and his luckless Chicago Maroons threw an old-fashioned surprise party for Purdue's Boilermakers today but it didn't last long enough.

The Staggian party extended through the first half when the Maroons astounded the Boilermakers by scoring their first touchdown in five major games and taking a 1-point lead. But Purdue came back in regulation style and captured the game by the customary one-sided margin of 26 to 7.

RIVETERS RIVET.

The Boilermaker riveters, Roy Horstman, Hay Chasey, Eddie Risk and Jimmy Purvis, led the way in the last-half stampede and won the game almost as they pleased. It was the fourth straight victory for the Boilermakers, who still possess a mathematical chance for the Big Ten title despite their 1-point defeat in their first game, against Michigan.

An intercepted pass by Gene Buzzell, Maroon halfback, netted Chicago its only score. Buzzell twisted 52 yards and carried the ball to Purdue's 1-yard line. Knudsen went over on the first attempt for the touchdown and Wallace place-kicked for the extra point.

Purdue, which started hopefully with a second-string line and a first-string backfield, immediately was forced to put in its first team.

PASS SCORES.

Risk passed 18 yards to Chasey, who caught the ball over the Maroon line for a Purdue score. Risk's attempt for the extra point failed when his place-kick went wide.

The full fury of the Boilermaker attack, long pent up by penalties and fumbles, broke suddenly in the third period when Risk and Horstman ploughed over for touchdowns. Horstman scored again in the fourth period after a 65-yard march by the team. On that march Risk injured his leg and had to be carried from the field.

Southern Methodist Defeats Texas A. & M.

DALLAS, Texas, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Although they hold a decision over Indiana, the Southern Methodist University footballers today broke into the Southwest conference victory column for the first time, defeating Texas A. and M., 13 to 7. The Aggies outplayed the passing Methodists in the last quarter, showing the Dallas team a few things about the air game, and marching from their own 19-yard line to a touchdown.

NEBRASKA BEATS JAYHAWKS, 16-0

Touted Kansans Outplayed; Bausch Not Enough To Win.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Kansas, generally picked a month ago to win the Big Six conference football championship without difficulty, fell before a powerful Nebraska team here today, 0 to 16. A home-coming crowd, swelled to more than 20,000 by Kansans anticipating a Jayhawker feast for the first time in 15 years, went home in sorrow.

Throughout the game the champion Nebraskans outplayed Kansas.

"Jarring Jim" Bausch, the brilliant Kansas halfback who was injured in the Pennsylvania game a week ago, went int the struggle late in the second period and remained until near its end, but his presence was not enough to pull Kansas together, although Bausch led most of what offense there was.

Nebraska scored in the first period. "Red" Young circled the Kansas left end for a touchdown on the fourth Cornhusker advance toward the Kansas goal. Frahm kicked the extra point. The second touchdown came on a long pass from Young to Steve Hokuf, who stepped 35 yards to score. Frahm missed his kick for this added point.

LEHIGH HUMBLES PRINCETON, 13-9

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 8.—(AP) For the first time in their 43 years of football rivalry, Lehigh defeated Princeton here in Palmer stadium by a 13-9 score today. Lehigh scored two touchdowns in the opening quarter while Princeton scored its only touchdown in the second, annexing two additional points in the final period on a safety.

The Tigers outplayed the Engineers in every period, getting a total of 18 first downs to 4 for the visitors, but as has been the case all season, they were unable to supply the necessary punch when near the goal line.

The Lehigh scores came before the first period was half over on 60-yard dashes by Halstead and Clark. The Tiger attack got going in the second quarter and after being repulsed once in the shadow of the goal, Knell crossed the line on an off-tackle plunge.

Clemson Overwhelms V.M.I. Squadron, 32-0

Aerial Game and Scoring Punch Win Game; Tiger Backs Run Wild.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Proficiency in the aerial game and ability to deliver a scoring punch enabled the Clemson Tigers to overwhelm Virginia Military Institute, 32 to 0, here today. It was the worst defeat suffered by the Flying Squadron in many years.

Clemson exhibited a better line and in Harvin, Justus, Walsh, Woodruff and Jones had a quintet of ball carriers that collaborated well in advancing the ball into enemy territory and gaining when gains meant touchdowns. Harvin led the attack and counted for two of the five touchdowns.

The Cadets fought gamely and the opposition was much stronger than indicated by the score. V. M. I. made five more first downs than Clemson but much of the gaining was in the Cadets' own territory. They fought the Tigers on almost even terms in the final half and twice made serious threats.

Clemson took an early lead when Harvin went 17 yards through the line without a V. M. I. man touching him. In the second quarter Harvin scored another touchdown in sensational fashion, racing 62 yards across the goal line. He kicked both extra points.

The second period found the Tigers at their peak. Welsh tossed a beautiful 25-yard pass to Jones for a touchdown and a few minutes later Jones took another of 35 yards from Miller to put the ball on the Cadets' 4-yard line. Miller smashed over for the score.

Shortly after the third period opened Welsh tossed a 40-yard pass to Woodruff for the final touchdown. From that point until the final whistle the Cadets fought the Tigers to a standstill, but could do nothing with the heavier Clemson line when the goal was threatened. V. M. I. made most of its first downs during the latter part of the third and the fourth period with Clemson holding or breaking up passes when the Cadets ventured into Tiger territory.

Moit Is Winner In Skeet Shoot

M. H. Miot captured first honors in the skeet shoot held Saturday afternoon at the Western Union Club, with a score of 40 hits out of 50 tries. He was closely pressed by Klassett with 39x50.

It was announced that a practice shoot will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in preparation for the big turkey shoot next Saturday.

Yesterday's scores were as follows: Miot, M. H., 40x50; Klassett, 39; Ellis, 35; Dozier, 34; Field, 33; Norman, J. M., 32; Edwards, 30; Wright, 30; Link, Dr. A. F., 28; Mitchell, 27; Martin, J. Oregon Team Wins From U.C.L.A., 7-0

EUGENE, Ore., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The University of Oregon defeated the University of California, of Los Angeles, 7 to 0, here today in a game filled with punting duels. The ball was in California territory most of the time.

Johnny Kitzmiller, Oregon's "Flying Dutchman," was injured.

SANDLOT TEAMS CLASH ON GRID

O'Keefe and Grant Park Battle to Tie; Druid Hills Nosed Out.

The fourth series of games in the Sandlot Football league, sponsored by the Rotary Club was played at the Rose Bowl field Saturday morning. Winning teams in both the 115-pound and 130-pound divisions at the end of the season will be awarded silver footballs by the Coca-Cola Company.

In the former class the West End Tornadoes led off by downing the Morningside Tigers, 19 to 13, in a game featured by the strong comeback of the winners in the second half. Morningside had a lead of 13 to 0 at intermission time, but wilted before the rush of their opponents in the last two quarters.

The undefeated O'Keefe Panthers and the Grant Park eleven, unbeaten in play but having lost one game by forfeit, tied up in the prettiest battle of the morning. It ended in a 6-6 tie, O'Keefe scoring in the first quarter and holding Grant Park three times within two yards of the goal in the first half. During the third quarter, however, Bloodworth took a long pass over the goal line for the tying score.

Kirkwood was awarded a forfeit over the Buckhead Bullpups when the latter team failed to put in an appearance.

In the 130-pound division, the Buckhead Bulldogs had little trouble in downing the crippled Morningside Wildcats by a count of 40 to 0.

The hardest fought game in this class came when the O'Keefe Indians downed the Druid Hills eleven, 12 to 6. Punting was resorted to often by both teams. The Indians scored in the first period, and held their advantage until the third quarter when Druid Hills tied the count. The tie stood until the last three minutes of play, when the Indians picked up the winning margin on a long forward pass.

Marty Wrecks Penn--Also Dad's Pocketbook

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Martin Brill's gala afternoon against his former teammates at the University of Pennsylvania turned out to be a costly entertainment for his father, J. Edward Brill.

Some weeks ago Mr. Brill wrote to Marty making an offer of $1,000 for each touchdown scored by him against Pennsylvania. Marty himself revealed this after the game today.

In the first period today, Marty ran 67 yards through the Pennsylvania team for a touchdown.

Then being $1,000 to the good, Marty prepared for a campaign of bigger and better touchdowns. He went into action in the third period with a 38-yard run that netted him another thousand, and a short time later made his third and final score of the day—$3,000.

Major Leagues Have Found Suprisingly Little Help in Draft

ONE POTENTIAL 'REG' OBTAINED IN HUNNEFIELD

Hack Wilson Is Sole Drafted Player Who Has Starred.

By Thomas Holmes,
Brooklyn Eagle Writer.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 8.—While the major leagues and the minor leagues are unlikely to trot out armored tanks and bombing planes in their imminent war over the draft, the contestants seemed to be immensely steamed over the matter. But when the two factions lock horns next month the general public will wonder what all the shooting is about.

Whether any change of system will come to pass or whether the wrangle will continue after December remains to be seen. The belligerents ought to do something about it besides talk, even if it means the severence of diplomatic relations. The present draft system seems to be generally unsatisfactory to everybody.

DRAFT LAWS.

At present only the lower forms of minor league life are subject to the universal draft, which the major leagues quite naturally advocate.

The Double-A leagues and some of the Class A leagues are liable only for the drafting of players who have been in the major leagues and who were sent back. Only one player can be selected from each club.

The major leagues complain that their limited field for selection is not for the good of baseball, meaning their own good. At this the minor leagues rave and rail that the major leagues are already getting more than they deserve, because occasionally a minor league team loses a player at the draft price of $5,000, a player who would draw more than that in the open market.

ONE FOR 150.

As a matter of fact the major leagues seldom help themselves in the draft. In the past six or seven years the big league clubs have drafted perhaps 150 players from the howling minors, and of all these Hack Wilson is the only one I can recall who startled the world.

And the drafting of Wilson was an accident. The Giants had sent him to Toledo on option, then neglected to recall him, leaving the way wide open for the Cubs to select him. John McGraw, not the Toledo club, rated a squawk.

Still, hope springs eternal, you know, and more than one manager hopes that his club will fare better this fall in the annual dive into the grab-bag. However, it is doubtful.

VETS TOP LIST.

Perhaps the most valuable ivory in the draft consists of several veteran pitchers.

Wiley Moore, canned by the Yankees because he had a sore arm, pitched really fine ball at St. Paul and may come back with the Red Sox.

Phil Weinert, from Louisville, has been rated a pretty good pitcher for several years.

What old Ridge Day will accomplish with the Robins, apart from the laughs he will give the boys is problematical. No spring chicken here. Moore is 33, Weinert is 29 and Day is 30.

YOUNG CATCH.

Perhaps the best catch of the whole collection is Stewart Bolen, a young left-hander who has been the ace of the Baltimore staff for the last two years. He is 28 and may be a winner in the majors if the Phillie bandbox doesn't break his heart.

Baltimore could have sold Bolen for real money, but were satisfied to see him go to the Phillies at the draft price, because that automatically protected Joe Hauser, the Oriole first baseman, from the ravages of the draft. Hauser had hit 63 home runs in the International league, breaking all records, and several clubs were eager to grab him.

The Phillies, however, can better employ pitchers and the Phillies had first crack.

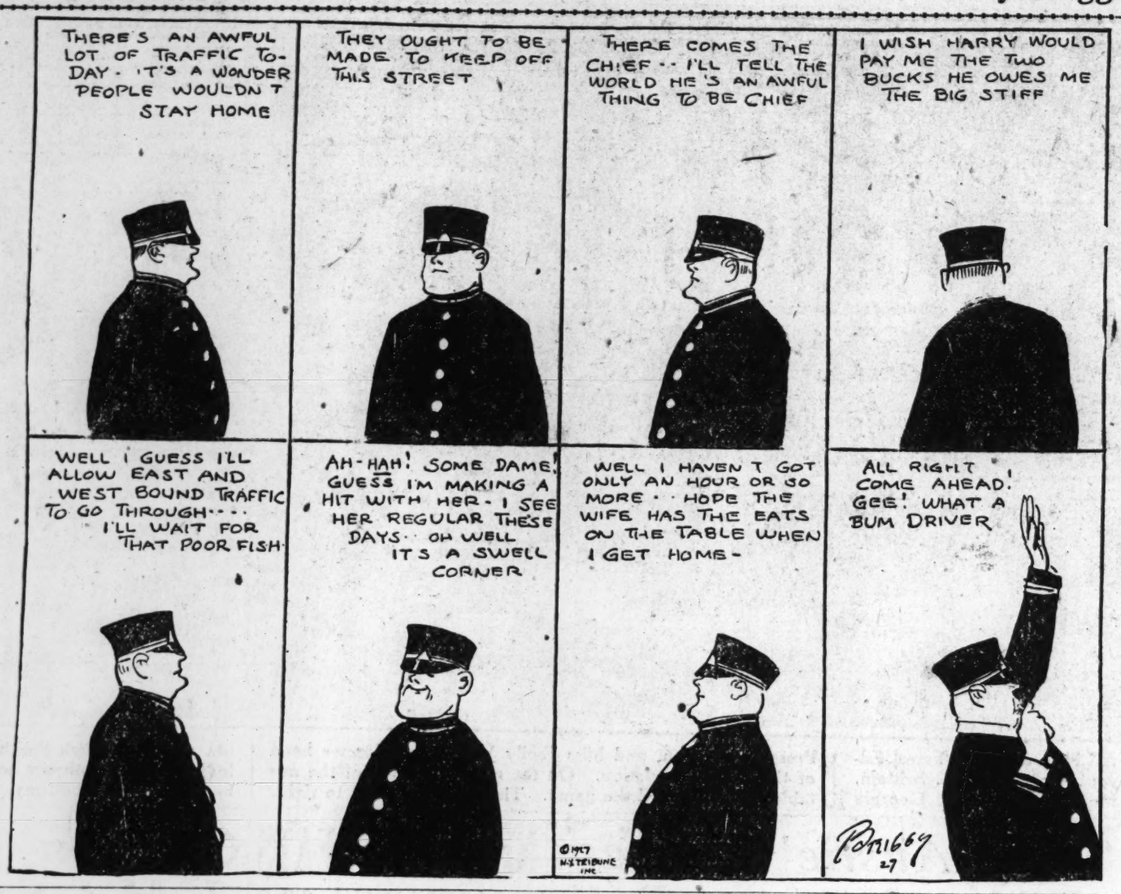

ONE REGULAR.

It is a fitting commentary on the draft that only one of the draftees of 1930 is likely to open next season as a regular big leaguer. That one is Bill Hunnefield, regarded by Manager Roger Peckinpaugh, of Cleveland, as the 1931 shortstop of the Indians. Peck, it develops, always liked Hunnefield and tried several times when the White Sox had him to swing a deal. When the Sox sent Hunnefield to Toledo last summer, Peck sadly waived in accordance with the gentlemen's agreement.

But in the draft no manager is a gentleman. That's what the minors say, anyway.

Early Sheely, 36 years old and a great ball player in every respect save speed, may hold on with the Braves, while Frank Sigafoos has more than a slight chance to dispossess Leo Durocher from the Cincinnati shortstop berth.

MARYLAND TRIMS GENERALS, 41 TO 7

Old Liners Get Jump on Opponents for Conference Victory.

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The University of Maryland walloped Washington and Lee, 41 to 7, today in a Southern conference football game.

It was the second victory for the Old Liners against four for the Generals since the teams have been meeting. It also was the most decisive victory ever scored by either team against the other.

Exhibiting a smashing mixed attack, the Old Liners outclassed the Generals all the the way and used their second and third teams through most of the last half.

Bozie Berger and Ray Poppelman led the Maryland attack. The former scored three touchdowns and the latter two. Chalmers place-kicked four times out of five for the extra point.

With its attack clicking perfectly the Old Line team lost little time in making the home-coming throng in the stands realize it was to be a big Maryland day. Six plays after the first kickoff the Old Liners registered a touchdown. Five plays after the second kickoff they scored another. And four plays after the third kickoff the third points were recorded by the home team.

Demoralized by this dazzling attack the Generals were easy prey for the Old Liners in the second quarter and thereafter.

Only in the final quarter, when the Old Line outfit was a mixture of second and third-stringers, was Washington and Lee able to batter its way across the Black and Gold goal.

Great Volo Shows Promise as Sire

Judging by the way the youngsters by him have performed this year, the trotting stallion, The Great Volo, 2.02 1-4, recently purchased by Hanover Show Farms, Hanover, Pa., from Sanford Small, Boston, Mass., gives promise of becoming one of the best speed siring sons of his illustrious sire, Peter the Great, 2.07 1-4.

While only on the threshold of his career as a sire, The Great Volo is already the sire of several very high-class youngsters, among them the crack two-year-old trotting filly, Calumet Belricka that raced around 2.05 this year on the Grand circuit.

The Great Volo was bred at Laurel Hall Farm, Indianapolis, and under the guiding hand of Walter Cox, trotted many sparkling races along the Grand circuit. He was a horse that always trotted the last part of his miles the best, and Cox never feared about his gameness. He trotted to his record in a winning race at Columbus in 1.02, and in this battle defeated Peter the Brewer, 2.02 1-2; Great Briton, 2:02 1-4; Czar Worthy, 2.01 1-4, and other good trotters.

Columbia Walloped By Colgate Machine

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Playing without its varsity backfield and with a second and third-string line, Columbia was swamped by a fast and formidable Colgate eleven in their annual game today with a crowd of 20,000 fans watching the one-sided fray. The final score was 54 to 0.

Andy Kerr kept his high-geared varsity in the game for the first period and several minutes of the second period, and the result was a 40-0 lead when the substitutes went in.

Columbia penetrated Colgate's territory only twice.

Leonard Macaluso, star Colgate ball carrier, by virtue of his four touchdowns and four extra points, increased his lead as the nation's high scorer by 28 points. The defeat was Columbia's second of the season.

Greens Fee Tax Recovery Sought

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—(AP)—Frank Foran, secretary of the San Francisco Olympic Club, brought suit today in federal court to recover $5.20 he charges he has been unjustly taxed by the government on greens fees.

Foran contends money paid by golf club members for greens fees is not taxable as it was expended for a specified purpose. The government holds different views, claiming this money is a part of the member's dues and is taxable at 10 per cent a

Alabama Not to Meet New York University

Alabama will not meet New York University in a post-season charity game, The Constitution learned from officials of the Alabama school Saturday.

The Crimson Tide has been invited by the eastern university to play in a game to relieve suffering among the unemployed, but Southern Conference rules and the decision of school authorities will not permit the Tide taking part in the proposed contest.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Efforts to match the University of Alabama's undefeated football team with New York University in a game for the benefit of the unemployed have been launched by Mayor James J. Walker, it was announced today.

N. Y. U.'s services having been placed at the disposal of the city, Mayor Walker and a committee of city officials and sport writers selected Alabama as the most desirable opponent. The mayor then telegraphed to his friend, Major John S. Cohen, publisher of the Atlanta Journal, to inquire whether Alabama could contain the necessary faculty and conference permissio...

Should Alabama not be available, the New York Giants' professional team was suggested as a possible opponent for N. Y. U.

INJURED LEGS.

Ammerman, Ross, Brumbaugh, Hinkle and Slate, Bucknell backs, have all had leg injuries this year.

Wallace Wade Silent On N. Y. U. Proposition.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Coach Wallace Wade, of the University of Alabama football team, had no comment to make today on New York dispatches that Mayor Jimmy Walker was endeavoring to match the Alabama squad with New York University for a game to aid unemployment.

Questioned at the end of the second period of the Alabama-Florida game here, Coach Wade replied:

"We are trying to beat Florida now. I'll have to answer your question regarding Mayor Walker's proposal later in the season."

Spring Hill Beats Southwestern, 20-6

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A fast moving Spring Hill College Badger team took advantage of a neat clicking aerial offense here Saturday afternoon to play the heavier Southwestern Bulldogs, of Lafayette, La., off their feet and win, 20 to 6.

With the Aitkens-Lovell pass combination working to perfection the local eleven started right off in the first quarter to wear down their opponents from Louisiana, putting across two touchdowns in rapid-fire order.

Quarterback Bienvenue proved the mainstay in the visiting squads' offense, while Captain Boulet, at guard, bore the brunt of the defensive work.

Stanford Drops Third Straight To Trojans

Stanford University, under the tutelage of Pop Warner, has lost its last three grid encounters with the University of Southern California. In 1928 Southern California won in an upset of 10 to 0. Last year Howard Jones' boys won 7 to 0, while this year the count was 41 to 12.

V. P. I. GOBBLERS DEFEAT VIRGINIA

Bird Hooper Stars as Polytech Comes Back To Win, 34-13.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Nov. 8.—(AP) After battling Virginia to a 13-13 tie in the first half, a fighting Virginia Polytechnic Institute eleven unleashed a crushing driving attack in the third and fourth periods to push over three more touchdowns for a 34-to-13 victory here today.

Captain Bird Hooper was a formidable runner and passer for the V. P. I. Gobblers, and in punting always managed to place the ball out of reach of Thomas, fleet Virginia back. Four times he punted out of bounds within Virginia's ten-yard line.

Virginia was the first to score. Thomas passed to Bryant, who raced 50 yards for a touchdown. Tech came back with a 50-yard drive to put the ball over. Virginia's second and last touchdown came after a drive of 70 yards. Sippley finally driving over the line to score.

V. P. I. ran wild in the last half. Howard and Owens fought through the line to the 10-yard mark in the third and Hooper plunged over. Owens smashed over for another tally after another drive.

'No Smoking' Is Law For Penn Huntsmen

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—"No smoking became the law in all the forests and woodland of Pennsylvania when Governor John S. Fisher recently issued a sweeping proclamation to avert further loss of game and other resources from forest fires.

The most extreme measure so far invoked in the face of serious fire hazards threatening the entire country because of drouth, Governor Fisher's proclamation prohibits the smoking of tobacco in any form and the building of fires within any woodlands of the state or inside of 200 feet of them.

Any violation of the proclamation is punishable by a fine of $100, and the strictest enforcement will be attempted, according to reports sent immediately by the Pennsylvania board of game commissioners to officials of the American Game Protective Association.

A proposal that all forests be closed to hunters during the period of extreme fire danger was considered by the board, but decided against on the strength of reports that most hunters are careful of fire in the woods and active in forest fire prevention, the information stated.

Since forest fires take frightful toll of wild life annually, destroy hunting territories and even poison streams their whole length and kill the fish, the game board expects the eager cooperation of sportsmen during the crisis.

Official statistics influencing the board's decision and that of the governor showed that fire swept 46,229.320 acres in 1929, and all except 1 per cent was traced to human carelessness, 21 per cent to thoughtless smokers.

Rich La Gorce Open Scheduled for March

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The richest golfing purse of the southeast will be offered March 19, 20, 21 in the third annual revival of the $15,000 La Gorce open championship here, Irving A. Collins, vice president of the Carl Fisher interests, said today.

The 72-hole tourney, with its $5,000 first money dangling before the winner, will be conducted "for anyone who wants to play," Collins said.

"The tournament will not be conducted in accordance with the request of the Professional Golfers' Association for a percentage of the prize money," he continued. Players may turn over a portion of their prizes to the association if they desire, he said.

Wild Bill Mehlhorn, winter time professional at Pensacola, Fla., copped the crown of the 1930 contest for one of the richest prizes of golfdom. Before him, first honors were won in 1929 by Horton Smith, as he drove his way to one of the largest money seasons of any professional golfer. Johnny Farrell, former national open champion, won the inaugural crown in 1928, as he skirted the wily traps of the ocean side course in record-shattering strokes.

Local golfing enthusiasts so far this year have seen no indication that the Miami Beach open tournament, discontinued last year because of the $3,500 drain on the municipal pocketbook, will be revived during the coming winter season.

SALLY ELEVENS SEEK SECTIONAL GRIDIRON TITLE

All Out of Conference Race, Teams Contest Minor Laurels.

By William H. Wranek, Jr.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 8. As mid-November draws near and finds all of the football teams in the South Atlantic states eliminated from the Southern conference race, the fans are beginning to consider this and that candidate for all-sectional or all-state honors.

Next Saturday will be the last time all of them will be in competition at once. As Thanksgiving draws near some cut their schedules short, while others drag them out into December. All but one of the eight teams will be centered in Virginia and North Carolina next week-end.

SCHEDULE SET.

Virginia and Washington & Lee will be playing their 14th game in 40 years on Lambeth field. Virginia Polytechnic Institute will be opposing Maryland in Norfolk, while Virginia Military Institute will be out engaging Kentucky in Lexington, Ky.

Duke's meeting with North Carolina State will provide entertainment in Raleigh at the same time that North Carolina is taking on Davidson in the Keenan stadium.

Each of these contests will bring into action one or more stars, all contesting for all-southern honors.

The Virginia-W. & L. game will present two of just this sort. Bill Thomas, of the Cavaliers, and Monk Maddox, of the Generals, would be sure of all kinds of honors if they were on a championship club. But, because they have been carrying on against odds, they have a real task.

OTHER STARS.

Down in Norfolk the Marylanders will be offering a trio of stars—two backs, George Chalmers, the versatile steadying member of the Old Line crew, and Louis Berger, the fleet-footed inspiration who broke into the limelight when he outscored Yale last year. He has been in it almost all this season. There's also a lineman, Ernie Carlis, the 190-pound tackle.

Captain "Bird" Hooper and the toe that's gained Tech at least two victories, has taken most of the glory away from Phil Spear. These V. P. I. men will have a hard time defeating Maryland. Spear is now paying the penalty of fame. He's been watched since the start of the season and was so injured in the Vanderbilt game that he's had trouble in getting away on the runs that made his outstanding last fall.

V. M. I. will have a hard time with the 200-pound Wildcat line. They may be able to sew up Kelly, but the type of ball toting done by the Phipps brothers may wreck them. Last year Covington flanked Gregory, who had replaced Scott at end, with the touchdown that put Kentucky ahead. This year Gregory is on one end of the Cadet line and a somewhat more skilled wingman, Gill, on the other. Kaylor, at tackle, has been the best performer in the V. M. I. line, and Captain Roy Dunn in the backfield.

DUKE'S BIG SHOTS.

Bill Murray and Kid Brewer are the boys who have brought touchdowns and fame to Duke this fall. North Carolina State won't be able to stop them. Of course they've had a fine line ahead of them and a heady field general, one Buzz Rosky, who has been calling signals from end.

The Wolfpack hasn't done anything notable this season—it's been their second hard year. There are some rather good backs at Raleigh—Sparky Adams, Dink Dellinger, Charlie Jeffrey, Bob Cook and Hank McLawhorne—but they've won only two games and they are headed for two more rough afternoons against Duke and South Carolina.

North Carolina has the backs again, but not the linemen. Red Lipscomb at center is the only Tarheel forward who has been winning any great praise. Johnny Branch and Rip Slusser have attracted a bit more attention than the other ball carriers from the Hill, but Captain Strud Nash, Jim Magner, Henry House and some others are still there to go whenever holes are opened.

The Tarheels hope to ease up against Davidson before going on to play Virginia and Duke. But they won't be taking Monk Younger's lads any too lightly.

American Trotter Sold to European

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 8.—The foreigners continue to pluck off America's good trotters, their latest selection being the three-year-old trotting filly, Jessamine, 3, 2.06 1-4, which W. J. Rosemire, Pastime stable trainer, acting for a European sportsman, purchased from Henry H. Knight, of Columbus, Ohio, the reported price being $10,000.

Despite the fact that she was hardly up to the task of winning many times over the high-class lot of two-year-olds in 1929 and three-year-olds in 1930 which, included Hanover's Bertha, 3, 1.59 1-2; Main McElwyn, 2, 2.02 3-4, and many other youngsters of class, Jessamine did prove to be far better than an ordinary juvenile performer. Her best effort was in the $14,000 Kentucky futurity at Lexington, Ky., in which she raced second to Hanover's Bertha in 2:01 1-4 in the second heat.

As she demonstrated that she could trot around 2:02 this year as a three-year-old, Jessamine should figure in the battles for the big money across the water in 1931.

Wild Animals to Star In Moving Pictures

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Denizens of Hollywood who have long lived and loved on the screen and are familiar to every theatergoer may soon find competition in little-known but talented Garbos, Gilberts and Dougs of a different world.

Turning production men, game commissioners of Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and other states for several years have been making movies with birds and animals in their natural haunts as actors, according to an announcement from officials of the American Game Protective Association.

Because the interest in such wild life pictures appears to have extended beyond the limit of schools and meetings, efforts are being made to have them released through theaters of the country, it is said.

Georgia Is Big Obstacle in Tulane's Path to Title.

By Herb Clark.

Tulane's brilliant Green Wave, which has rolled serenely over a series of more or less important obstacles during that part of the present football campaign which has already been written into history, bumps into a real breakwater Saturday in its drive to that harbor labeled "Conference Championship."

The Bulldogs of the University of Georgia are nothing if not firm, and they have ideas of their own about letting Tulane romp off with the honors. The conflicting notions of the correctness of things will be tested Saturday at New Orleans.

TULANE—SLIGHTLY.

If anything, the Wave seems to have a slight edge. The Bulldogs have come through two very, very hard games with Florida and N. Y. U., and they were forced to travel to play each of them. They again called on to board one of those aptly-named "rattlers" this week, and the cumulative effects of the train rides, plus the normal wear and tear of battle, will probably leave them in poor shape Saturday. And they will have to be in good shape to win.

Tulane is just naturally strong this year and has prepared wisely—if in a manner open to criticism by those who like to see the gridders go out each week to give their all—by taking on the Mississippi Aggies and Auburn to rest up. They have rested, and will throw a lot of power at the tired and sleepy Bulldogs.

TWO LEADERS.

Pushing that game hard for the attention of the fans will be the annual clash between Vanderbilt and Tennessee and Georgia Tech's second invasion of the east, this one to battle Penn's Quakers at Philadelphia.

The Vandy-Vol tussle should be what the boys in the back room call a hummer. Both teams have been beaten, both by Alabama. Yet each is still a factor in the titular race and each has power and to spare and speed in abundance. It will be a matching of two good teams, well-generaled by smart quarterbacks and with stout lines to clear the way for fast backs.

Tech, slowly climbing back after a fair start and a relapse, meets one of the east's best in the Red and Blue machine of Pennsylvania. The Quakers, true enough, have not always been too strong this year, but they have never been weak and have risen to heights which mark them with that indefinable something.

EARL STILL LOST.

The Jackets will again be without the services of Captain Earl Dunlap, according to latest advices from the Flats, but they have shown an ever-increasing strength of late and are conceded a good chance by the gentry of the curbstone, who are, after all, not bad prophets. Tech will be accompanied to the Quaker city by Oglethorpe's Petrels, who are to play Villanova Saturday.

Of the other "top flight" clubs of the conference, Florida's 'Gators seem to have laid themselves out the stiffest assignment. They meet Josh Cody's fighting Tigers, who have another good game in them this year and may deliver Saturday. It will take that to win, however.

Kentucky's flashy Wildcats figure to shine against V. M. I. on the "Cat" stomping grounds. Shipwreck Kelly alone should be enough to win from the Cadets, who are none too well-fortified this year, and Kentucky assuredly has more than Shipwreck with which to batter the foe.

BIG CRIMSON.

Alabama's steam roller undertakes this week to flatten L. S. U., and, despite the prowess of the fleet backs from the delta country, the Red Elephants and the Red Riders will probably consumate the flattening process with as much speed and as little pain as possible.

North Carolina's battling Tarheels catch Davidson at Chapel in a sort of "spider and fly" game, with the invaders cast in the role of the winged party to the murder.

The next rung in Auburn's ladder to fame is Mississippi A. & M., which may or may not be satisfactory. The Aggies should be very, very tired of walking off with the losing end of an argument, and Chris Cagle will just about figure this as his game of the year. Chet Wynne, of course, will oppose that idea, and the result should be entertaining.

Sewanee and South Carolina meet in another battle of the lesser lights which loses none of its attractiveness for that reason, the teams seeming well-matched.

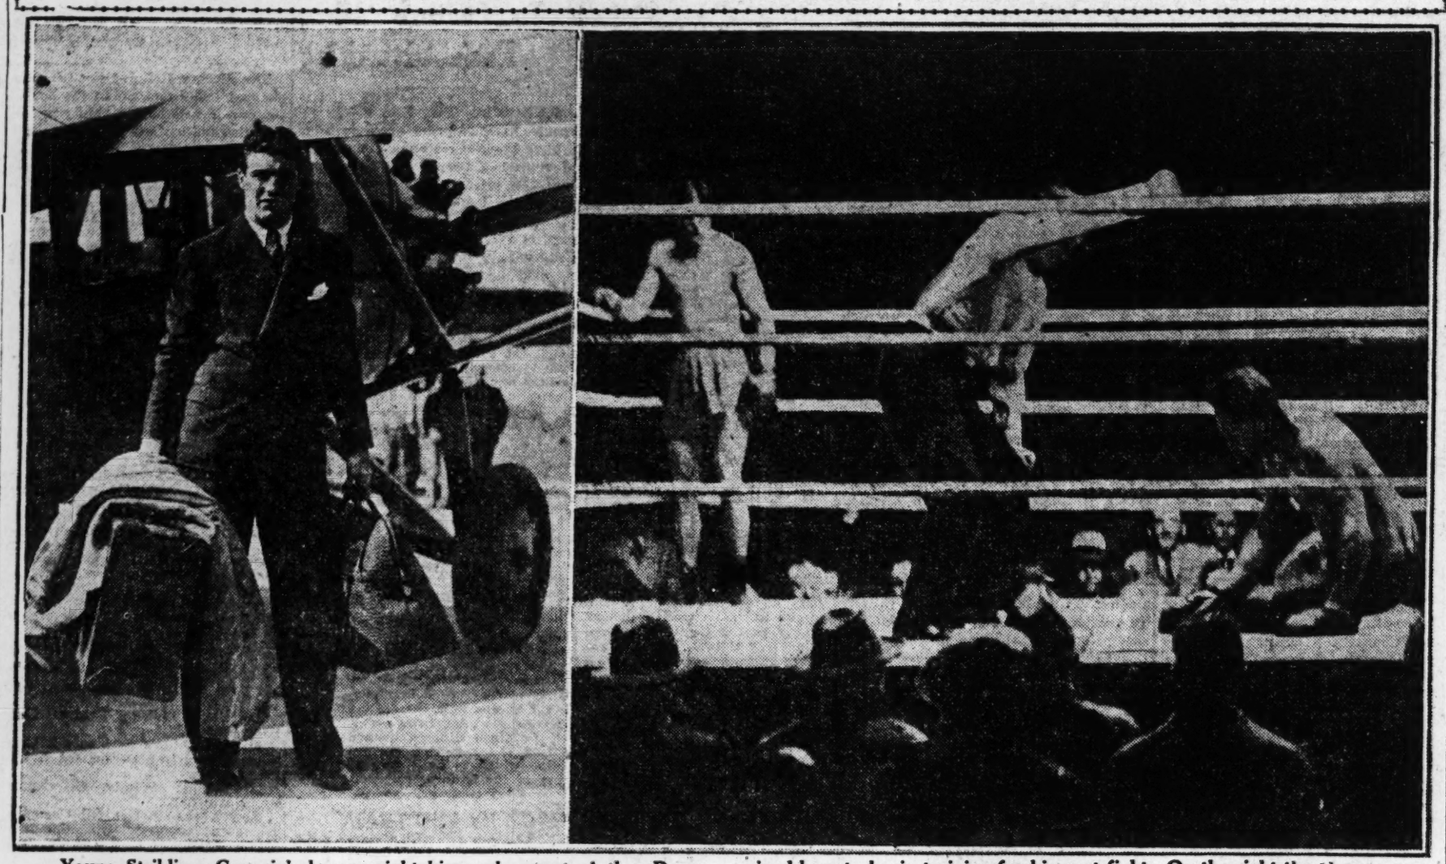

N. C. State, which won its first conference game in two years some three weeks ago, does not figure to go farther than that against Duke. It would be too much of a shock.

Washington and Lee invades Charlottesville for a struggle with Virginia. And the term is used advisedly. It will be just that.

Maryland and V. P. I. clash in the other conference game of the week at Norfolk, with Maryland having an apparently untouchable lead.

Mississippi leads the conference elevens into battle Friday afternoon, taking on Southwestern at Oxford and entering the game with a sizeable advantage.

Stribling Distinguishes Self With Gloves, Plane

W. L. Earns Plaudits for Work at Controls As Well As in Ring.

W. L. Stribling is distinguishing himself in two fields at this writing The ring knows him, and has known him intimately for the last 10 years, and the world generally is aware of his deeds inside the hempen strands, but not everybody knows of the young man's prowess as an aviator.

Young Stribling, the fighter, has had over 800 hours of solo flying. He is a lieutenant in the air reserve corps, and is thinking quite seriously of enlisting in the regular air service.

Contrary to some opinions in the east where on occasions Stribling has had a difficult time convincing critics of his ability as a ringman, Georgia's fighting son is considered by pilots of experience, one of the most accomplished and fearless men at the controls in the business today.

Pilots at Candler Field where the flying fighter frequently alights and takes off on journeys to and from his bouts, are agreed in declaring that W. L. is perhaps the outstanding non-professional flyer of the globe. Several of them assisted him in learning to fly, and gave him helpful pointers about the art.

However, they assert now that he needs no further coaching—that his skill as a pilot could be increased but little, and that the little fineness that he lacks he will acquire naturally through added experience.

Only recently, he flew from Macon, his home, to Boston, making a couple of stops for refueling, for his fight with K. O. Christner, whom he stopped in three rounds. He carried his entire family, including his wife, two children and Pa and Ma Stribling. The morning after he bumped off Christner, they clambered back into his speedy six-passenger job and flew back to Macon.

W. L. has owned half a dozen planes since he started out to conquer the air. At one time he owned two. Just now he has but one which he only recently purchased, a streamlined, speedy buzz wagon, with which he has had no difficulty at all and which has yet to cause him to make a forced landing.

Stribling flew to Atlanta from Macon to inaugurate his training Thursday for the fight of ten rounds with Arthur DeKuh Armistice Day in Spiller Field, which is certain to establish a new attendance and gate record for a fight in the state of Georgia. It will be Atlanta's biggest fight day, with 48 rounds of milling and Jack Dempsey, the ex-champion, refereeing the main event.

EMORY JUNIORS TRAMPLE SOPHS

Team Takes Second Place in Standing With Win, 17-0.

By Max Hall.

After handing the victorious freshmen their first defeat of the season Wednesday, the red-class Junior team at Emory University trampled on the Sophomores Saturday morning by the score of 17 to 0.

It was the first shutout game at Emory since the system of a point for each earned first down was started at the beginning of the season. The Sophomores did not score a single earned first down.

The Juniors, who have won three straight games and now are in second place in the Emory team standing, showed a nice passing attack, with Claude Quillian twirling the ball. Their end-running assault, which helped defeat the Freshmen, was not successful, due partly to the sterling work of Camp and McCormack, Soph ends.

With the score 5 to 0 at the half, the Juniors having made five first downs, the winners returned to score two touchdowns. In the third period, after a couple of completed passes, Morgan Driskell spun off tackle for a touchdown from the 10-yard line.

Toward the close of the game, the Juniors blocked a Soph punt, recovered the ball, ran it twice through the line, and then pulled a short pass from Quillian to Hall, who crossed the goal line standing up.

The Junior line, whose work has improved steadily since the beginning of the season, caused the Soph attack to be almost ineffective. Sam Cooper, big tackle, played probably the best individual game, and Gibbs turned in a good performance at center.

Claude Quillian, Junior captain, ran the team from quarterback's position and was the passing star of the game. Scott Hogg continued his slashing playing, and Morgan Driskell bore the punting burden with the handicap of a badly bruised leg.

In the powerful Sophomore line, besides the two flankmen, Camp and McCormack, Sidney Penny at guard broke up a lot of Junior plays, and S. R. Bridges played a whale of a game backing up the line. The Soph offensive game was not very successful.

The standing of teams at Emory now, with three more games to be played, is as follows:

TEAM—	W.	L.
Juniors	3	2
Seniors	2	2
Sophomores	1	4

Sunday School Loop Forms Hoop Leagues

Organization of three basketball leagues and selection of referees for the coming season will be the main work in view for members of the Sunday School Athletic Association Monday night at the Atlanta Athletic Club, at its regular weekly meeting, starting at 7:30.

So far enough teams have signified intentions of entering to assure the three leagues, two of boys and one of girls.

The opening of the season has been definitely set at Monday, December 1, and play will continue each Monday and Thursday night at the Atlanta Athletic Club, until late in February.

All teams now members of the S. S. A. A. should have some one at the meeting, while any new teams desiring to enter should do so at once.

Sectional Billiard Tourneys To Open

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Three-cushion sectional championship tournaments will open Monday in eight cities to select four players to compete in the world's championship three-cushion tournament in January or February. A total of 58 entries has been approved, 16 more than saw action in the 1929 three-cushion sectionals.

There will be four sectional tournaments, each section having two divisions. The winners of the divisionals will meet in the sectional finals on November 19, 20 and 21, and these winners will be officially recognized as the title tournament entrants.

Sixteen players have been named to compete in the northern section, playing in two divisions. Sixteen will start in the eastern sectional, eight each playing in two divisionals; 16 are to start in the western sectional in two divisions, and 10 have been chosen for the southern sectional, five in each of two divisions.

Class for Basketball Coaches at Missouri

University of Missouri will conduct classes for basketball coaches to insure a uniform system of refereeing high school games.

New Penn Coach Calls Hoop Practice

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Lon Jourdet, who succeeds Edward McNichol as head basketball coach at Pennsylvania, has issued a call for candidates to report to him next Monday for the initial practice of the 1930-31 season.

Twenty-six contests have been scheduled with the best teams east and west. Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, Fordham, Syracuse, Michigan, Indiana, Harvard and Wisconsin are on the schedule. The usual league contests will also be played with Yale, Cornell, Princeton, Columbia and Dartmouth.

Hockey Stars Plan European Invasion

TORONTO, No. 8.—University of Manitoba graduates are organizing a hockey team to tour Europe. Dr. Blake Watson, captain of the Manitoba varsity team in 1928, now is in Europe arranging for a two-month tour which is to start at London in the first week in January and extend to all the leading cities of Europe.

THANKSGIVING CARD PLANNED

Boxing and Baseball Top Slate at Federal Penitentiary.

Boxing and baseball top the Thanksgiving Day program being arranged at the federal penitentiary by athletic heads.

The ring card is set to be held in the forenoon, and Mr. Simpson, athletic officer, Promoter Joe Ballentine and Matchmakers Stratman and Borelli are to out schedule an all-star program. A card of headline talent is in the making.

In the afternoon the Commodore Feds are to face the Grant Park nine on the diamond. The Feds have compiled an average of .657 for their season, having won 23 games, lost 12 and tied one. The Indians, playing but 12 games, won seven and lost five for a mark of .583.

Georgia Builds Nine New Tennis Courts

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Nine new tennis courts are being constructed on Herty field at the University of Georgia, and will be ready for use within the next two weeks. The backstops and railings are already in place and have been painted.

The courts, which practically cover the old drill field, have been graded and are ready for the final rolling. Lanes have been left at the ends and sides of the courts to allow room for the passing and parking of automobiles.

Violet Boxers Card Seven Dual Matches

New York University's boxing team will meet seven opponents in dual meets this winter besides competing in the intercollegiate title matches. Its dual meets include matches with three newcomers to its schedule, Rider College, City College of New York, and Temple University, as well as engagements with Army, Syracuse, West Virginia and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Penn State, Syracuse Turn In Scoreless Tie

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Penn State and Syracuse battled to a 0-to-0 tie here today. State had two opportunities to score, but both times the Syracuse line held and State failed at attempted field goals.

Each team made 11 first downs, both depending on aerials to make their gains. Penn State tried 13 forward passes, four of which were completed and one intercepted. Syracuse attempted nine and completed two, both in the final quarter, to give the Syracuse team its most effective gain.

Special Rail Rates Made for Big Bout

Special rates into Atlanta from all points in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee and Georgia for the Stribling-DeKuh fight on Armistice Day were announced Friday by all railroads.

Tickets will be sold for trains reaching Atlanta on November 10 and the morning of November 11, the day of the fight. Return limit has been set as November 13.

WEEKLY COURT MEETING IS SET

Few Vacancies Left for Teams Wishing To Play in Loops.

The weekly meeting of the boys' division of the Y-Church Athletic Association, scheduled for 8 p. m. Monday at the Y. M. C. A., will bring the opportunity for basketball teams to enter the leagues, now being formed, to a close. Any clubs sponsored by a Sunday school and wishing to secure a place in one of these leagues should have a representative present.

At the meeting held last Monday night teams from Haygood Memorial and Rahmay Baptist, of Palmetto, entered, completing the rosters of the Dixie and Sewanee leagues and leaving the Georgia loop as the only incomplete circuit.

Opening games will be played the first week of December with the following schedules for the completed leagues:

DIXIE LEAGUE.

MONDAY NIGHT, Y. M. C. A.

Kirkwood Presbyterian vs. Alpha class, 6:40 p. m.

Decatur Presbyterian vs. J. O. Y. class, 7:00 p. m.

Clarkston Baptist vs. Peachtree Christian, 8:00 P. M.

G. F. G. class vs. Anchor class, 8:20 p. m.

SEWANEE LEAGUE.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT, Y. M. C. A.

Central Presbyterian vs. Pep class, 6:40 p. m.

Pattillo Memorial vs. Vanguard class, 7:00 p. m.

Boethean class vs. Clifton Presbyterian, 8:00 p. m.

Rahmay Baptist vs. Western Heights Baptist, 8:20 p. m.

Cherokee League Still Lacks Team.

With the opening of the season but two weeks away the Cherokee girls' basketball league needs another club to complete its roster. Any team sponsored by a Sunday school which wishes to play ball should send representation to the final pre-season meeting, scheduled for 7:30 p. m., Monday at the Y. M. C. A.

This league has seven clubs, and the schedule for the opening night's games has been drawn. Central Presbyterian court has been secured for play every Tuesday night throughout the season, which begins on November 18. All officials have donated their services for the first games, which will give the clubs a good financial send-off.

Decatur Presbyterian, making its debut to the fans, plays College Park Methodist in the first game, while Western Heights Baptist, champions for the past two years, meets J. O. Y. class of Central Baptist in the final tilt. The other game of the schedule brings Central and Associate Reformed Presbyterian together. Should another club enter, it will play the Woodward Avenue Baptist quintet.

Caldwell Seeks McCready's Fame

STILLWATER, Okla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—It's a tough assignment handed out to Conrad Caldwell, of Commerce, Okla., a wrestler on the Oklahoma A. & M. College squad.

Caldwell's job is to fill the shoes of the leading heavyweight wrestler in intercollegiate competition for the last four years—big Earl McCready, of Amulet, Sask., Canada, undefeated except in the Olympic games at Amsterdam.

Caldwell is no beginner, however. He was national intercollegiate champion at 165 pounds in 1928. Last year he won another national title at 175 pounds.

This season, grown to six feet one inch in altitude and weighing 200 pounds, Caldwell probably will be assigned to the unlimited class.

STRIB AWAITS GONG TUESDAY

at the Robert Fulton hotel when officials of the baseball company and figures in the city's sports life will be present.

Indications are that the largest crowd that ever attended a fight show here will gather. The first preliminary will start at 2 p. m. and the card is long enough to carry the show well along toward dark. Forty-eight rounds have been arranged in all.

Special round-trip fares of one fare and a half have been authorized by 13 different railroads of this territory for the fight.

DATES OF SALE.

Tickets are to be sold November 10 and November 11 from stations and for trains of that date scheduled to arrive in Atlanta by 2 p. m., and tickets are to bear the limit of November 13, prior to midnight of which date return trip must be completed.

The announcement, it was believed, would add greatly to the attendance at this show, the biggest outdoor fight ever staged in the state of Georgia and one of the biggest in the south's heavyweight history.

The railroads granting special rates for the occasion are as follows:

Atlanta & West Point, Georgia railroad, Western Railway of Alabama, Atlantic Coast Line railroad, Appalachicola Northern railroad, Central of Georgia railway, Columbus & Greenville railway, Florida East Coast railway from Miami, West Palm Beach and intermediate stations only; Illinois Central railroad, Louisville & Nashville railroad, Mobile & Ohio railroad, Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railway, St. Louis-San Francisco railway, Southern Railway system, Seaboard Air Line railway.

These rates are for those coming from points in the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee.

The fight ticket sale took a jump yesterday, when 500 seats were shipped to Macon, the home town of Stribling, for distribution, and 20 more ringsides were forwarded to Columbus, Ga. Many other points over the south sent in requests for the pasteboards.

ON SALE SUNDAY.

The 500 sent to Macon are to go on sale at 11 a. m. Sunday and remain there until 6 p. m. Monday, when any that may be left will be returned to the Atlanta box office. A large delegation of fans is certain to come up from the central city to see their pugilistic idol in another attempt to batter his way into a championship fight with Max Schmeling.

Stribling and Dempsey will be honor guests at the luncheon Tuesday. Only Dempsey will actively participate, however, for W. L. must taboo anything to eat until after the fight, which is scheduled for about 4 p. m.

Injury to Jack Tunney, the Birmingham heavyweight, who was to have encountered Mike Maurer, Pa Stribling's German heavyweight in the 10-round semi-final to the Stribling-DeKuh bout has necessitated a change, it was announced yesterday.

REVISS SIGNED.

In Tunney's stead, Roy Reviss, of Philadelphia, a heavyweight walloper who only recently administered a beating to Mike Firpo, the rugged Cuban, will face the foreign Herr Maurer.

This will detract nothing from the interest of the card, the promoters say, since Reviss' record indicates that he is fully as good as Tunney and thoroughly capable of giving Maurer a furious 10 rounds of it.

Referees for the 48 rounds of fighting will number four. First, of course, is Jack Dempsey, who will officiate in the main struggle. Then Jake Abel, former lightweight star of Chattanooga and Atlanta, now a hotel proprietor here, will work the semi-final of 10 rounds and the eight-round event preceding. Another man, yet to be chosen, will render the decisions in the other matches; and the battle royal will be directed by Billy Hooper, dean of battle royal matchmakers.

Maine To Elect Heads After Seasons End

Captains of University of Maine teams will not be named in the future until after the season is closed. An acting captain will be appointed by the various coaches to the captaincy, by vote of the players, will be an honorary one.

PURPLES RENEW FOOTBALL FEUD WITH SMITHIES

Two Teams Meet in Annual Prep Classic Satday.

By Roy White.

With city and state championship possibilities at stake, Boys' High and Tech High are steaming up for their annual gridiron battle, which takes place at 2 o'clock Saturday at Spiller field.

It is the only attraction for Atlanta football fans for the afternoon, as Tech and Oglethorpe will be in Pennsylvania and Georgia will be in New Orleans. The fans are expected to get plenty of action, however.

Those Tech High-Boys' High battles are always worth while, even though neither team be in the running for titles, but this year two titles are at stake. Yet a victory Saturday is worth all the titles, as far as the two student bodies are concerned. The season's success is wrapped up in this game.

A victory for Tech High will mean the city title—if G. M. A. loses to Boys' High later on, and it will mean a chance to get into the play-off for the northern division title of the G. I. A. A.

A Boys' High victory will give the Purples a decided lead in the race for city honors, with only G. M. A. left in their path, and an almost sure shot at the northern division G. I. A. A. playoff.

Tech High holds a record of 12 victories in the past 17 years, but has dropped three out of the last five, since Coach R. L. Doyal has been in charge at Boys' High. Coach Tolbert's Smithies won out in 1927 and 1928, while the Purples copped in 1925, 1926 and 1929.

In nine of those 17 games, one scoring play has decided the issue and four of those nine have been field goals. The teams have never played a tie game.

Tech High has piled up a total of 243 points against only 73 for Boys' High. The largest margin of victory was in 1924, when Stumpy Thomason, Coot Watkins and their "gang" went wild and scored 69 points.

Boys' High rang up its largest point total last year, with an 18-to-6 victory, and in 1918 they won out, 12 to 0, for the same margin of victory as in 1929.

Comparative scores count for nothing when Tech High and Boys' High get together. They forget all about their season's record and go after that one game.

This year's game will be a renewal of the old custom, with another year of rivalry added on. There is little to choose between them, and both are well coached.

In six games this year Boys' High has won four, lost one and tied another. They have scored 93 points to 9 for the opposition.

Tech High has three victories, two defeats and one tie on its record. They have scored 85 points against 40 for the opposition.

Their records against each other follow:

1914—T. H. S., 0; B. H. S., 3.
1915—T. H. S., 7; B. H. S., 6.
1916—T. H. S., 6; B. H. S., 0.
1917—T. H. S., 7; B. H. S., 0.
1918—T. H. S., 0; B. H. S., 12.
1919—T. H. S., 0; B. H. S., 0.
1920—T. H. S., 3; B. H. S., 0.
1921—T. H. S., 19; B. H. S., 7.
1922—T. H. S., 13; B. H. S., 3.
1923—T. H. S., 15; B. H. S., 0.
1924—T. H. S., 39; B. H. S., 0.
1925—T. H. S., 0; B. H. S., 3.
1926—T. H. S., 7; B. H. S., 9.
1927—T. H. S., 39; B. H. S., 0.
1929—T. H. S., 6; B. H. S., 18.

College Football Nearly 'Racket,' Committee Says

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 8. (AP)—The rich financial rewards declared to be frequently accruing to successful football coaches, threatens to make a veritable "racket," of the college game if they have not already done so, in the opinion of the University of Pennsylvania's alumni committee on athletics.

The committee made its report today to the national conference of the Associated Pennsylvania Club.

The report declared that "college football is no longer the player's game, but is a struggle between sagacious and clever coaches, a match between press-agented systems.

"Our war is not against high-salaried coaches," the report stated. "Whatever they are paid they earn by sleepless nights and criticism from all sources, as any who ever filled such berths will affirm. The rub is that a situation similar to that in amateur golf and tennis, the old stunt of soft sinecures, has arisen, the game threatens to become a "racket." It may already be one. Here is food for thought. The report recommended frankness and praised the scholarship-player system of the mid-west.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—(AP)—College football as it is administered and played today was defended tonight by Coach Knute Rockne, of Notre Dame, and Coach Lud Wray, Pennsylvania, against the criticisms by the committee on athletics of the University of Pennsylvania alumni in Wilmington, Del.

"I make $10,000 a year, win, lose or tie," Rockne asserted. "I never heard of this side money which they say comes to coaches, and I wish the report had been more specific and named some real instances.

"The boys who play with my team are well above the average in their studies. There are more brains in my squad than in a large part of the student body."

Wray said: "Our point of view and objective in football at Pennsylvania is to make the boys enjoy the game and develop their character and will to succeed in life after they are graduated."

PENN COACHES SEEK REVENGE OVER JACKETS

Tech's Victory in 1917 Still Lingers in Minds of Old Players.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Two members of the University of Pennsylvania football coaching staff have an added interest in the Georgia Tech game next Saturday afternoon on Franklin field, an interest that dates back to October, 1917.

J. R. Ludlow Wray, head coach, and Carl Thomas, line coach, of the Pennsylvania team, were members of an eleven that invaded Grant field in Atlanta. Wray was a center and Thomas a guard on the 1917 team.

That season was one of Georgia Tech's greatest. In the backfield were such stars as Strupper, Guyon, Hill and Harlan. They ran rampant against Pennsylvania, rolling up 41 points while holding Wray and his teammates scoreless.

Georgia Tech that year was coached by John Heisman, who three years later became head coach at Pennsylvania. William Alexander, then assistant to Heisman in 1917, is now the head coach of the Atlantans.

Tech's season to date has not been in keeping with its usual high record, but Pennsylvania's scouts have brought back reports that the southerners have a team that should be at its best against Pennsylvania. Earl Dunlap, captain and quarterback, is one of the best backs in the south. He is injured, however, and may not play Saturday.

Pennsylvania's hopes for a triumph over the Golden Tornadoes depends on the manner in which the players react after two such hard games as those played with Kansas and Notre Dame. If the players recuperate the way the coaches expect them to, Pennsylvania will avenge the reverse of 1917.

The game is the first of two between the two institutions. Next season the southerners will invade Franklin field again.

The rise to varsity ability of Cyrus Newcomb, a guard, and Carl Perina, halfback, is one of the features of Pennsylvania's season to date. After slow starts both players displayed sufficient ability to oust veterans from positions that appeared fixed for the entire season.

Newcomb was the star end of the freshman eleven last season and because of the dearth of candidates for the line this fall, was switched to guard. His rise from the third team to the first is one of the most marked of any this season. It took him weeks to master guard play, but once he got the knack of it, he came with such a rush that Tom Barrett, veteran of three campaigns, was forced to the second eleven.

Perina, 200-pound fullback, of the freshmen last season, was a substitute until just before the Kansas game, when he displayed sufficient talent to cause the coaches to switch him to the first team in place of Warren Gette, a veteran. Defensively Perina is one of the best backs in the squad. As a ball carrier he also ranks with the best.

Pennsylvania's varsity line-up as now constituted, has five sophomores. This is the largest number of second-year men in years. Willson, Newcomb, Bloch, Engle, and Perina were all freshmen a year ago. Captain Gentle and John Olsen are the only seniors on the present varsity team. Raffel, Riblett, Graupner and Greene, are all juniors.

Field Is Complete For Cue Tourney

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—With the four 1930 sectional champions crowned, the field of eight now is complete for the world's pocket billiard championship tourney which will be played at Dwyer's Broadway Academy in New York from December 8 to 18. The sectional finals ended last week, the winners being Bennie Allen, of Kansas City, former world's titleholder; Pasquale Natalie, of Chicago; Arthur Woods, of New York, and Thomas Boatman, of Portland, Oregon.

These sectional champions will compete for the world's crown against Ralph Greenleaf, defending titleholder; Frank Taberski, of Schenectady, N. Y., and Erwin Rudolph, of Chicago, both former champions, and Onofrio Lauri, of Brooklyn, 1922 eastern champion. All tournament games will be at 125 points.

First prize is worth $8,500, exclusive of the gate receipts, and is represented by a cash award of $2,500 and a salary for one year of $6,000, to be paid by the National Billiard Association of America.

"Golfers' Paradise" Is Opened Here

Golfers' Paradise, a driving course equipped for play in all kinds of weather, has been opened under the management of J. O. Steele at the intersection of Glen Iris drive and North avenue.

The course is complete in every detail and offers many unusual features. The tee and back of the tee are enclosed, and markers are placed every 25 yards, beginning at the 75-yard line.

Every convenience has been added to make the place attractive. Eats and drinks are served and a comfort room is provided. The course is designed to accommodate 100 persons an hour.

Amateurs Invited To Boxing Tourney

The Metropolitan Association of the A. A. U. has invited eight cities to send amateur boxers to clash with New York's in an intercity amateur boxing tournament which will be staged in Madison Square garden November 24 and 25. Thomas F. Lockhart, chairman of the boxing committee of the New York city amateur body, has extended invitations to Boston, Baltimore, Buffalo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington and Montreal.

OPTIMISM FOR BUSINESS FUTURE CRYSTALLIZES INTO ACTION

New Chevrolet Models Appear Two Months Early

1931 Line Styled to Minute With Fisher Bodies and Changed Fenders.

BY E. Y. WATSON.
Written Exclusively for The Atlanta Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.

DETROIT, Nov. 8.—Optimism for the business future crystalized into action this week when General Motors cut loose new 1931 Chevrolet models nearly two months ahead of schedule.

It was a surprise move that upset the precedent of former years. Instead of springing the annual program from New York on January 1, President William S. Knudsen and his associates decided to make Detroit the base of operations. Accordingly, the largest public auditorium available was engaged and 1,200 persons got a preview of the new jobs. The rest of the country will see them one week hence.

The assembly included dealer groups from the Detroit and Flint areas with their bankers, the company's field representatives and factory heads.

The rise of a curtain disclosed a selected group of the new cars. They were styled to the minute with new Fisher bodies. Frond fenders have been raised, while the rear fenders have more sweep and the hood is longer than before.

On side view the cars show greater over-all length, which comes from a two-inch addition to the wheelbase, bringing it up to 109 inches. Chromium plating embellishes the bright parts, including headlamps and tail lamp, hubs and tie-rod.

Sport Models.

The sport models have parking lamps attached to the cowl and a radiator grille like the Cadillacs, also done in chromium. Wire wheels are standard on all the cars with tires 4.75x19.

The six-cylinder power plant is continued. In structure, the chief change is in ribs added to the engine block for rigidity. Metal has been added to the short arms of the crankshaft for smoothness.

The effect that the Chevrolet introduction will have on trade in general may be judged by the fact that it will stimulate operations in 19 assembly plants covering that many trade zones throughout the United States. The Fisher plants that produce the bodies already have felt the upturn. A few days ago it was announced that ten of them outside the Detroit area were going back on full time. Their operations are confined to General Motors work. For weeks past they had been reduced to three days a week.

Coupled with them will be numerous parts factories that contribute to G. M. operations. They have been retooled to comply with the manufacturing changes and are to proceed on increased schedules.

The Chevrolet sales division, under the direction of H. J. Klingler, vice president, proposes to blanket the country with a sales campaign that will cover 50 centers of distribution in as many cities from coast to coast.

The campaign will involve the division of the staff into four groups. Each of them will be conveyed from point to point in special trains carrying carloads of trade promotion equipment, including motion pictures and stage scenery.

Extensive Organization.

The officials say the company is now using approximately 10,000 dealers to market the cars in America. The dealers employ 22,000 salesmen. It is estimated that 200,000 persons in all are dependent on this single General Motors division for their livelihood.

President Knudsen has expressed the view that November and December should compare favorably with the corresponding months of other years and possibly may exceed them in volume.

That other Detroit plants are swinging into activity in preparation for next year became apparent when Hudson began shipment this week of new Hudson and Essex models. These go to parts of the country remote from Detroit in advance of a national showing scheduled for later in the present month.

In launching 1931 operations, Hudson let it be known that the five-day operating week has been adopted as a general policy. The change is the result of long study of the economic and employment situation and observance of results obtained by other manufacturers who are using the policy successfully.

It was stated by William J. Mcaneeny, president, that stocks of cars in the hands of the company's dealers are at a lower point than for the last six years. This, he believes, points the way for the favorable reception and merchandising of new models.

MACHINE INVENTED TO TEST PEN POINTS

How good a gold fountain pen point may be, only an expert can tell. All points, when new, look good. But a famous fountain pen maker has now devised a machine to test all points, and they write their own qualities or faults in a permanent record.

This new machine is called "the truth detector" and it is the counterpart of the famous lie-detector used successfully by police in several cities. George S. Parker, veteran fountain pen inventor and manufacturer, is responsible for the truth detector.

A fountain pen is attached to the revolving cylinder of the truth detector which is covered with paper. The pen's weight alone gives pressure to the point. An ink reservoir is attached to the pen barrel, and the machine starts. After one million feet had been written by the Parker Duofold it was shown that it had written the entire distance without once skipping, or blotting. This is a distance of 200 miles of continuous writing and equals, experts estimate, the amount of writing the average person will do in 50 years.

Yarbrough Appoints J. Harry Hopkins To Important Post

J. H. HOPKINS.

Announcement was made recently by J. E. Yarbrough, president of the Yarbrough Motor Company, local Studebaker and Pierce-Arrow dealers, of the appointment of J. Harry Hopkins to an important post on his sales staff. Mr. Hopkins, an Atlanta boy, has had 10 years' experience in the automobile business, covering every phase of the business, and his new duties find him well qualified to answer for any problem he is confronted with.

MERCHANTS' BOARD TO MEET THURSDAY

The final 1930 board of directors' meeting of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association will be held Thursday, 12:30 luncheon, Atlanta Athletic Club, with President Sinclair Jacobs presiding.

The Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association is composed of nearly 500 members, representing practically every retail trade line in the city. At this meeting the executive secretary will submit for confirmation a number of matters recently handled, of importance to the retail buying public and the retail trade in general.

In this report, particular stress will be laid on the activities of the association to protect the retail buying public during the coming Christmas shopping period. The report will show that itinerants, fly-by-nights, peddlers and others, handling doubtful or questionable merchandise, will be subjected to a close investigation, and every legal protection invoked to rid the city of them.

In this respect, Atlanta, at the present time, has the reputation of being one of the cleanest retail buying centers in America, largely due to the vigilance of the local association.

FURNITURE DEALERS ANNOUNCE BANQUET

W. H. Slater, manager of Haverty Furniture Company's Atlanta store and chairman of the furniture dealers' division of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association, announces that the organization will hold its annual banquet Thursday at 6:30 at the Winecoff hotel.

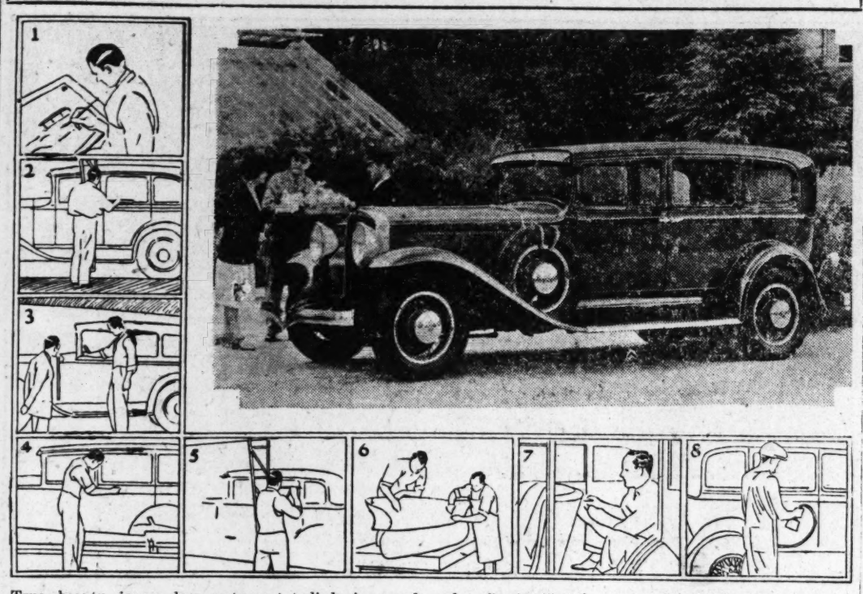

The feature of the meeting will be an address by Paul C. Sillin, of Myers-Dickson Furniture Company, on the subject "The 1931 Salesman." Mr. Sillin's address will bring out clearly the training, the education and the knowledge of furniture necessary for the 1931 furniture salesman to succeed. In addition to the feature address there will be an interesting entertainment and a special round-table discussion of business matters of vital concern to the furniture dealers.

A number of the dealers have indicated their intention of bringing to the meeting their entire sales forces.

CREW OF SCHOONER SAVED AS SHIP SINKS

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Nov. 8 (AP)—The steamer George W. Barnes sent a wireless message to the Radio Marine Corporation here today saying the four-masted schooner Dunham Wheeler, in distress off Cape Canaveral, Fla., sank at 10 a. m., shortly after its crew had been taken aboard by the steamer Aztec.

How a Motor Car Body Is Designed

True beauty is no happenstance. In creating its new Series President and Commander Eights, Studebaker has incorporated design in line and color which interprets the very spirit of free wheeling.

A lovely statue, a beautiful building, a chic creation in apparel—all must be developed from an idea to the finished masterpiece with painstaking care. So with truly beautiful motor cars. Here are illustrated the progressive stages of the development of these new Studebaker creations in coachcraft.

(1) The artist sketches his ideal in miniature (2) which is then reproduced on a blackboard "life-size," studied, improved and refined. (3) To provide the effect of color, a full size painting of the car in conventional shades is made. (4) When the "portrait" is satisfactory, a wood and clay dummy model is built up—in effect a life-size statue of the finished car. (5) More refinements in line and contour are worked out and master drawings of every feature of design and construction are begun on aluminum sheets. (6) Hammering forms are built up to act in the capacity of dies and (7) the body is built up in metal, every part carefully hammered out—a hand-built custom body in the truest sense of the term. (8) Finally, after exhaustive tests on Studebaker's proving ground and in the engineering laboratories have proven the body entirely sound in every respect, special color and color schemes are developed to express something of the individual "personality" of the car. Now the new car is ready for production.

These are the obvious mechanical processes in coachwork creation. There is, however, another quality which goes into the development of these cars which cannot be described. That is the intangible ingredient of experience. You can't weigh that 'quality—but you can sense its existence in the new series Studebaker President Eight state sedan with free-wheeling illustrated.

DealerHintsBigAdvancementInNewFranklinAir-CooledCar

Without divulging the new features incorporated in the car, Frank R. Beall, local ditributor for the Franklin air-cooled car, admitted here today, following his return from the factory at Syracuse, N. Y., that a new Franklin would soon be announced and that it would be even more impressive than the introduction of the Franklin airplane-type engine last January.

Mr. Beall broadly hints that the new Franklin might be termed an "airplane type car," when he said that it would embrace "many interesting features and adaptations of airplane practice."

"It is rather difficult where experiments are carried on for months at a factory to keep such a matter entirely secret," Mr. Beall said. "However, the factory executives feel certain that none of the important details of the new car have leaked out. It does seem to be known, though, that the car will embrace airplane features which should place it in a position of distinction in the fine car field, since we all must admit that the rapid strides made by aviation might well be emulated in the motor car industry.

"I can say now, without breaking any confidences, that the new Franklin, in my opinion, is the most impressive in Franklin history, not only from a power and speed viewpoint but from the viewpoint of style, luxury and comfort.

"Although it was originally planned not to present the new Franklin until the New York automobile show in January, the Franklin company decided, because of the interest that has been developing, to present it to the public at once. The date of the announcement has been set for near future at which time the cars will be displayed in our showroom.

"Because of the wide public acceptance of the 1930 Franklin with its airplane-type engine and the tremendous progress and interest in air-cooling both in aviation and the automobile, it is only natural that the public as well as technicians should look to air-cooling for any marked engineering progress.

"Because of Franklin's splendid sales achievement the first nine months of this year, I am confident that the public will continue to give Frankiln a continually growing proportion of the fine car business through this latest product which stresses both value and quality.

"That this trend is assured is already shown by the way distributors ordered cars during the conference. Demand developed beyond the factory's immediate ability to supply."

Further new developments are hinted by Mr. Beall in his statement that: "Introduction of this new line will provide Franklin with a much broader market and will consequently bring the advantages of air-cooling to a greater field of buyers."

Reo Reports Big Increase In Car Shipments

Reo Motor Car Company shipped 2,365 passenger cars from its factories in Lansing during October, a gain of 112 per cent over October, 1929, when shipments totaled 1,116 and an increase of 237 per cent over September, this year, when the passenger car output was 702 units, according to a statement released by the company.

Georgia's Own---for 1931

Georgia's well dressed car for 1931 will wear a green and white license tag, says Miss Katheryn Hays, of the Oldsmobile Atlanta retail store. She is holding one of the new plates, with dark green background and white numerals, in front of an Oldsmobile sedan.

Delivered Prices To Feature All Nash Advertising

KENOSHA, Wis., Nov. 8.—In response to widespread requests from dealers the Nash Motors Company is advertising delivered instead of factory list prices. This move follows a recent announcement of new models at the lowest prices at which Nash cars of comparable size, power, and quality have ever been built. Commenting up the radical departure from accepted practice, C. H. Bliss, general sales manager, says: "It is of course extremely gratifying to us that Nash dealers are so enthusiastic about the value which Nash has been able to offer in these new cars. Our dealers report that our cars, in many instances, with freight, tax, bumpers, spare tire, and other equipment added, are still below the f.o.b. prices of other cars of comparable size and power.

"We feel that in advertising delivered prices we have taken the lead in a direction in which the entire industry should proceed. Healthier, clean-cut, straightforward competition, without camouflage, is one of the beneficial results of advertising delivered price—the price which the motor car buyer must pay for his car irrespective of what the f.o.b. price may be.

"When the dealer is glad to announce the delivered price, it is proof positive that he is equipping his cars with accessories at minimum cost to the buyer—and that is exactly what Nash dealers are doing today. This is all in line with the Nash policy of 'a new deal for today's dollar' and is the Nash dealer's method of assuring the buyer of the full dollar value which is built into the Nash cars at the factory."

ROCK ISLAND TRAIN MARKS ANNIVERSARY

The Rock Island line is celebrating the twenty-eighth anniversary of the inauguration of the Golden State Limited train. The first section of this famous train moved out of LaSalle station Chicago, on November 2, 1902. Since that eventful day, on which the Great Lakes and the Pacific coast were united by this service, thousands of persons have traveled the "Golden Way to the Golden State." Incidentally, this train now makes the trip in seven hours less time than in 1902. In other words, based on present-day schedules, this increase in speed is equivalent to shortening the distance approximately 400 miles. Again, the increase in comforts and luxuries on the Golden State limited have kept pace with the increased speed, until the visitor to California and Arizona may now enjoy the best that modern travel genius has created.

Fifty-Nine Companies Acquired by Sinclair

The Sinclair Refining Company announced today that up to the end of October it had bought this year the facilities and business of 59 petroleum marketing companies, operating in 17 states. This does not include the facilities of the Pierce Petroleum Corporation, acquisition of which was previously announced. The Sinclair Refining Company is the chief domestic marketing subsidiary of the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Corporation.

These 59 companies represented 1,511 bulk distributing plants, service stations and "resale" or dealer outlets.

In addition to these acquisitions, the Sinclair company has bought from individual distributors seven bulk plants and 52 service stations, and has obtained under long-term leases ten bulk plants and 169 service stations.

Divided by states, the companies whose business has been taken over are as follows:

Alabama: Petroleum Products Company, Lafayette; Consumers Oil Company, Bay Minnett.

Arkansas: Home Oil Company, Ashdown; Royal Oil Company, Little Rock; Warden Oil Company, North Little Rock; Burton Oil Company; Nettleton; Guenters, Inc., Little Rock.

Virginia: Fulton Oil Company, Gate City; Russell Gas Company, Hanaker; Midland Oil & Gas Company, Abington; Blue Ridge Oil Company, the Plains; U. S. Oil Company, South Hill; Monticello Oil & Gas Co., Charlottesville; Central Oil Company, Norton.

West Virginia: Arrowhead Gasoline Company, Cameron.

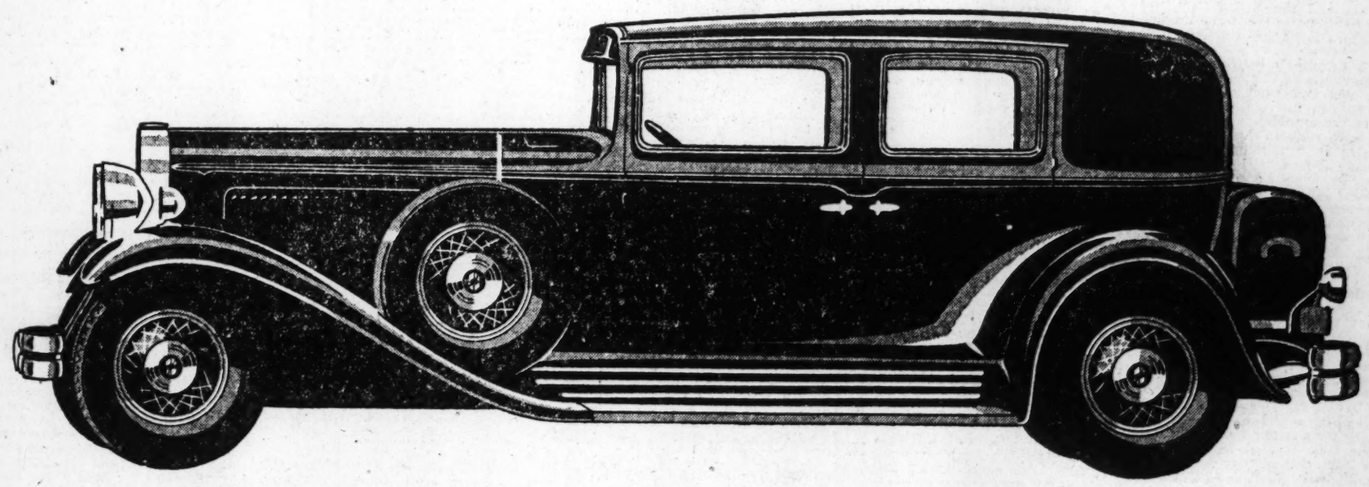

Wisconsin: Conley Oil Company, Eau Claire; Engle Oil Company, Shawano.

Six Hundred Inquire About State Association

In reply to the letter and questionnaire sent out about ten days ago to nearly 600 automobile dealers in the state, asking them to indicate whether they were interested in organizing a state-wide association of automotive dealers, a large number of replies have poured in to acting executive secretary, C. Y. Hohenstein, 1006-7 Citizens' & Southern Bank building, many of which have urged, at the earliest practicable moment, the calling of a state-wide meeting of the automotive industry, at some central location in the state, to perfect a permanent association. Everybody is pleased with the suggestion that the management and control of the association is to be in the hands of officers and a board of directors, who will be selected from various points throughout the state, so as to give every district representation in the management of the association. The business office of the association will be maintained in Atlanta, in order to establish close contact with the state government and all the offices connected with it. The organization committee having the matter in charge are: H. H. Alexander, chairman; R. H. Martin, D. C. Black, Clarence Knowles and C. V. Hohenstein.

Education Group Acts To Revise Tests for College

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Development of a new system of standardized tests for college students which may revolutionize methods of higher education, has been undertaken by the American Council on Education.

Working with a grant of $500,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation, the council plans to evolve a system which will make students advancement in college dependent on actual achievements in learning rather than in spending a certain time, such as semesters, in study.

It is proposed to construct a graduated series of standard knowledge tests for every subject commonly studied in colleges. At present the fundamental basis is "hours of credit."

Freshman Latin, for example, now counts six semester hours for a pupil who manages to attain the minimum requirements. Under the new system it might count twice as much in the way of credits for the good student as for the poor student.

Under the present system each instructor in each college makes up and marks his own examinations. One instructor may give an easy test and mark it leniently. A person teaching the same subject in another college may give an extremely difficult test and mark it most severely. Under the proposed method, the students in both colleges would get identical tests, graded in exactly the same way.

Embezzler Sentenced.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 8.—(AP) Peter L. Simonini, former supervisor of bookkeepers at the National Bank of Commerce, where federal bank examiners revealed a shortage in funds of $246,000 last July, was sentenced to serve five years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta Friday by Federal Judge Ira Lloyd Letts.

DRY NET TAKES IN ALABAMA SHERIFFS

Five Others Arrested for Conspiracy Against U. S. Dry Statutes.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Climaxing a 30-day investigation, federal prohibition agents early today arrested seven persons, including the sheriff and sheriff-elect of Lowndes county at Hayneville. Five white men arrested were charged with conspiracy to violate the national prohibition act.

The seven men were brought here and bonds for all except two negroes caught in the raids were set at $15,000 bail. Bond for the negroes, who were charged with possession, was set at $500.

Those arrested were Sheriff Morrow Willoughby, Buck Meadows, sheriff-elect; Leon West, a deputy sheriff; M. N. Patterson and Wilbur Winn, all of Hayneville.

The raiders were led by James W. Shields, of New Orleans, federal prohibition agent, who had spent 30 days in Lowndes county gathering evidence.

Shields reported to United States District Attorney Grady Reynolds here that he had made purchases of liquor direct from Sheriff Willoughby while posing as a racketeer from St. Louis.

U. S. TO EXTRADITE SHIP SCUTTLING SUSPECT

HOUSTON, Texas, Nov. 8.—(AP)—An order of removal for James A. Fulford, Galveston produce merchant, under federal indictment charging conspiracy to scuttle a ship, was signed by Federal Judge J. C. Hutcheson today and Fulford will be taken to Mobile, Ala., Monday.

Fulford was arrested last week at Galveston on complaint of the United States attorney's office at Mobile where the indictment was returned.

The indictment alleges that Fulford, in conspiracy with four other persons, scuttled the steamship Rose Murphy while it was en route from Boca Grande, Fla., to Norfolk, Va., with a cargo of phosphate rock. The government claims that the ship was scuttled to collect the insurance on the hull.

MORE THAN 100 DEAD FOUND AFTER TORNADO

SAIGON, French Indo-China, Nov. 8.—(AP)—More than 100 bodies have already been taken from debris on the island of Pulo Condore, where French convict settlements have been swept by a tornado. The number of dead still is undetermined.

The extreme southern tip of Cochin China also felt the tornado. Houses were wrecked, crops ruined and fishing boats were sunk. There are 17 known dead among the fishermen at Cape St. Jaques.

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

8-STORY STRUCTURE IS PLAN OF SOUTHERN LIFE PROJECT

REMODELING WORK TO COST $200,000

Modern Shops on Ground Floor, Addition of Two Stories Feature Metropolitan Building Improvements.

Enlargement of the former Metropolitan building, at the corner of Broad, Luckie and Forsyth streets, into an eight-story office structure and remodeling of present portions of the building to supplant the theater front and auditorium with ground floor shops and office space, will be started as soon as final plans and specifications are completed, it was announced Saturday by Wilmer L. Moore, president of the Southern States Life Insurance Company.

Eliminate Theater.

The property was recently acquired by the large insurance concern, which will move into the building as soon as it is completed. Work already has been started on tearing out the theater auditorium and ground floor walls. Preliminary plans for the development have been drawn by A. Ten Eyck Brown, architect, who is now preparing the final specifications.

Although no announcement was made of the sum to be expended on the elaborate remodeling and enlargement, it is understood to be in excess of $200,000. The structure is located in what is regarded as one of the fastest growing sections of the downtown business area. The improvement marks the latest development project for Forsyth street, which recently has witnessed a number of major improvements.

The building will be remodeled and two stories added, making of it an eight-story structure. The Southern States Life Insurance Company will occupy two entire floors for their home offices and the building will bear the name of the company. The remainder of the space in the building will be rented.

New Street Frontages.

Alterations will consist of installing an entire new first floor frontage with attractive architectural designing. The entire ground floor will be arranged for store purposes. In the second floor the space which was formerly used for the theater auditorium and stage, this will be rearranged for office purposes.

Entrance to the building will be changed from Forsyth street to the center of the block fronting Luckie street. Access to the elevators and stairs from Luckie street will be through Broad, well-lighted arcade, stores opening into same, giving both inside and outside show windows for display purposes. The first floor will be high enough for modern store units with mezzanine.

Modern elevator service with three high-speed machines will be one of the improvements. Modern mechanical equipment of every kind will be installed, sanitary floor finishing and decorating will give results in keeping with the most modern and first-class building.

In order to achieve a handsome exterior finish and appearance, marble will be used from the grade to the second story window sills with show windows in aluminum, giving a striking contrast in a metropolitan character. The new seventh and eighth story floors will be faced entirely with ornamental stone, fluted pilasters between the windows and running ornaments on the top belt. Corridors, floors, stairs, rest rooms, etc., will be refinished.

Realty Head To Take Part in Conference

Harry S. Kissell, Springfield, Ohio, president-elect of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will represent the country's real estate interests on the executive committee of the national conference on construction. The initial meeting of the executive committee of the new conference, which will deal with problems common to the 65 business and industrial groups identified with construction, will be held in Washington this month. The new conference takes the place of the national building survey conference.

Secretary of Commerce Robert P. Lamont will serve as general chairman of the construction conference. Julius H. Barnes, chairman of the board of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, will be chairman of the executive committee.

$200,000 Major Development Planned for Broad, Luckie, Forsyth Corner

Major improvement planned for Luckie, Broad and Forsyth streets, which will provide Atlanta with another modern office structure and a series of ground floor commercial shops. The project, understood to involve an expenditure in excess of $200,000, calls for reconstruction of the old Metropolitan theater into commercial and office units, with an addition of two stories to the structure, making it an eight-story office building. It will be known as the Southern States Life building, having been acquired recently by the Southern States Life Insurance Company. Pictured above to the left is the completed building as conceived by the architect, A. Ten Eyck Brown. To the right is a view of the structure as it stands today.

COBB C. TORRANCE JOINS ADAMS-CATES

Cobb C. Torrance, young real estate man who has been prominently identified with the local residential market, has joined the staff of Adams-Cates Company, it was announced Saturday.

COBB C. TORRANCE.

Mr. Torrance's new connection with the large realtor firm will be viewed as an item of interest among his wide circle of friends. He will specialize in homes of the finer class, including the Peachtree road section and Druid Hills.

Considerable activity recently has been manifested by the Adams-Cates residential department, with large homes and estates included in the lists of late transactions. Mr. Torrance will be associated with W. Hoke Blair in the home sales department.

Mr. Torrance has been active in real estate for the past seven years. He is a graduate of the University of Georgia and active in Atlanta social clubs and affairs.

J. L. KEY TOO ILL TO TEACH TODAY

Mayor-elect James L. Key, who is a victim of the general cold epidemic and confined to his room at his home, 375 Ponce de Leon avenue, N. E., will have a substitute pinch hit for him today in teaching the men's Bible class at Grace Methodist church.

Mr. Key will be out in the next few days, doctors announce.

TWO BOYS, AT PLAY, FIND BODY OF CHILD

Playing near the abutment of a bridge on South Moreland avenue, a short distance beyond Confederate avenue, Saturday morning, two little boys discovered the body of a newly-born male child partly obscured beneath the bridge, police reports revealed.

The children, Billy James, 9, of 1132 Confederate avenue, and Junior Jones, 6, of 1112 Shelby place, playmates, found the infant's body and notified passersby, who informed the police. The body was removed to Poole's undertaking establishment where an inquest will be held Monday. It was understood that no indications that the newly-born baby had been slain were apparent.

ATLANTAN IS INJURED WHEN CAR HITS POLE

J. W. Mitchell, of 112 Flora avenue, was in Georgia Baptist hospital Saturday, greatly weakened by loss of blood, after an automobile accident Friday night in DeKalb county.

According to Decatur police reports, Mitchell was riding with Henry Graham, of 109 Flora avenue, on Brown's Mill road, when the car crashed into a telephone pole. Mitchell was thrown against the windshield and an artery in his head cut.

Graham was arrested on charges of operating a car while drunk but later released under $500 bond.

FINANCE FIRM OPENS FIVE POINTS OFFICE

Seaboard Security Quarters in William-Oliver Building Ready.

Lease of large quarters in the new William-Oliver building by the Seaboard Security Company, long-established financial concern, was announced Saturday by C. Y. McCollum, vice president and manager.

The company will open its new offices at Five Points Monday, Mr. McCollum stated. Offices of the Seaboard Security Company have been maintained in the Peachtree Arcade building since the concern started in business more than 10 years ago.

The offices in the William-Oliver building have been newly equipped and provide increased space for the company's activities. The new location is on the third floor of the building, looking out on both Peachtree and Marietta streets and numbered 308-9-10-11-12.

"Since its establishment in Atlanta the concern has grown steadily in size and patronage," Mr. McCollum stated. "The time has come when expansion of quarters is advisable for the enlarged business and convenience of our customers. We feel pleased to have obtained space so centrally located in the handsome new structure," Mr. McCollum said.

BOROUGH TO NEGOTIATE FOR SALE OF FI FAS

Negotiations for sale of $1,000,000 worth of tax fi fas held by the borough of Atlanta to banks will get under way this week, with return to the city Saturday of Aldermen J. Charlie Murphy and J. Frank Beck and Councilman Wiley L. Moore.

Details of the plan have been delayed pending a full attendance of a special committee, appointed at the last regular meeting of council to complete negotiations.

EXPERT ON BIRDS TO GIVE RECITAL

Charles Crawford Gorst, a leading authority on bird life and bird-lore, will appear in an imitative recital of bird songs at the Bass Junior High school auditorium at 7:30 o'clock next Thursday night, under the auspices of the Atlanta Bird Club.

Mr. Gorst is recognized as a leading naturalist by such men as John Borroughs, Frank M. Chapman and T. Gilbert Pearson, and declared to be the greatest imitator of birds in America. He can correctly reproduce 800 songs of 250 species, and will exhibit flood-light paintings of American birds.

QUALITY STORES TO HOLD BANQUET

Greater Atlanta unit of Quality Service Stores, Inc., will hold its formal opening banquet Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in Rich's tea room, with W. O. Stamps, serving as toastmaster.

Among the prominent officials who have been invited to the banquet are Governor-elect Richard B. Russell, Mayor-elect James L. Key, Assistant Attorney-General T. R. Gress and Judge Anton L. Etheridge.

Arrangements are being made to entertain between 400 and 500 persons. In addition to the Atlanta group, it is announced, many will attend from Augusta, Savannah, Knoxville, Columbia and some from North Carolina and Virginia.

Henry T. Swann, national organizer of Quality Service Stores, will attend the meeting and is one of the principal speakers on the program. The Quality Service Stores here will hold their formal opening Friday.

Music will be furnished by a 13-piece orchestra.

VETERAN CONDUCTOR FOR L. & N. DIES AT 59

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8.—(AP) George S. Bowman, 59, who was the first conductor to operate an L. & N. train out of Knoxville, will be buried here Sunday. He had been a conductor since 1904, and was well known on the L. & N. line between here, Louisville and Atlanta.

PATTERSON IS HELD ON THREE CHARGES

$1,000 Bond Fixed Following Disturbance in Police Call Room.

John E. Patterson, 42, of 1003 Longley street, for seven years deputy clerk of the civil division of superior court, was ordered held in bond of $1,000 Saturday afternoon by Recorder A. W. Callaway on charges of assault and battery, carrying concealed weapons and operating an automobile while intoxicated.

The charges grew out of Patterson's alleged action of suddenly drawing a revolver, which he fired, in the call-room of police headquarters Friday night while he was waiting to be docketed on charges involving an alleged collision of his automobile with a furniture truck.

In reaching his decision to hold Patterson on the three charges, Judge Callaway, who witnessed part of the exciting call-room scene the previous afternoon, said that he would not uphold the charge involving the shot fired in the call-room as he believed that Patterson had not intended to discharge the weapon. Patterson told the court that he could not contradict any of the allegations made by the arresting officers because he was "so drunk" that he did not remember anything about his arrest.

MORNINGSIDE CHURCH TO OBSERVE BIRTHDAY

Fifth anniversary of its organization will be observed today by the Morningside Presbyterian church, at Morningside drive and Highland avenue.

At the morning service the pastor, Rev. Carl McMurray, will speak on "Life's Great Investment," and memorial services will be conducted for the members who have died since the church was founded five years ago.

At 7:30 o'clock tonight Dr. J. Sprole Lyons, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, will preach.

CONVICT IS FOUND HIDING IN COTTON

Captured after two weeks of hiding in a hen house under a huge pile of cotton, John Berry, negro, who escaped from the DeKalb chain gang on October 25, Saturday was again back at work for the county.

Acting on a "tip," DeKalb police went to the home of Bill Nelms, near Chamblee, Friday night seeking the escaped convict. After the house had been searched thoroughly, Berry was found hiding in a pile of cotton in a hen house in the back yard. He told the officers that he had been there for two weeks.

INDUSTRY SCHOOL AUDIT PUBLISHED

The plant of the Georgia Industrial school, Barnesville, was enhanced by addition of a new auditorium during the year ended June 30, the annual audit of State Auditor Tom Wisdom showed Saturday. Receipts of the institution amounted to $49,099.41, and disbursements were $46,922.70, in addition to an outlay of $7,542.12 for the auditorium and $764.44 for new furniture and equipment, the audit revealed.

The audit showed that the school on June 30 had cash on hand of $2,754.45 and was due from the state treasury $19,371.75 on appropriations. Enrollment for the regular sessions was 186.

BUSINESS WOMEN TO HEAR TINDALL

Judge W. W. Tindall, Atlanta attorney and former judge of the Fulton juvenile court, will speak on "Religion in Business" at the November meeting of the Business Women's League of Second Baptist church at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, it was announced Saturday by Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, president of the league.

A special free will Thanksgiving offering will be taken at the meeting to extend the work the league is doing for relief of the poor. Judge Tindall is teacher of the Young People's Bible Class at Haygood Memorial church and former teacher of the Men's Bible Class at St. Paul's church.

A special musical program will be presented by members of the Druid Hills Baptist church choir.

OFFICE FACILITIES LEAD SPACE NEED

Vacancies Mount in Spite of Fast Expansion of Business, National Survey Shows.

The October report of the committee on renting of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers reveals an ample supply of unused office space in practically all cities of the country. The survey made in 43 of the principal cities of the United States and Canada covers a total of 1,960 office buildings with a total floor area of 166,998,875 square feet.

Of this amount, 23,236,010 square feet are vacant, this figure representing more than the total office space reported from the cities of Cleveland, Philadelphia and Los Angeles combined. The percentage of vacancy, viz., 13.92 per cent, is the largest reported in the seven years that the association has been making frequent and periodic surveys of office building rental conditions.

In addition to the present vacancy, 11,054,562 square feet of office space are reported under construction. However, only 1,147,269 square feet of the office space under construction will be ready for occupancy by January 1, 1931. In the face of business conditions prevailing during the past year, and in view of new space brought on the market, it is quite remarkable that the percentage of vacancy has increased only 2.37 per cent since October, 1929.

R. W. McElroy, chairman of the committee on renting, states: "Our successive rental surveys show that American business for several years prior to 1930 was able to absorb a huge volume of office space annually, but that even in those prosperous times new office space was produced at a still faster rate.

"Through the building planning service of our national association, the advisability of constructing buildings at given locations is carefully considered and a complete analysis is made of each economic factor in their construction and operation. Through this building planning service, owners have been saved many millions of dollars in construction and operating costs. It has also safeguarded the economic integrity of a large number of existing office buildings and has, at the same time prevented many disappointing failures on the part of prospective office building owners and builders by bringing to bear on their problems wise counsel based on complete information as to rental and other pertinent conditions which would determine the success of any prospective new building."

MAGAZINE ISSUED FOR YOUNGSTERS

"Lads and Lassies," a bright and attractive weekly news magazine for Atlanta's boys and girls, is being published by Mrs. Martha B. Tauscher, with art and editing assistance from Miss Liddell Burford, it was announced Saturday. The first issue contains many stories and articles, and includes cutouts for the children.

School news is presented in one section of the magazine, and Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and other juvenile activities receive space. There is even a "kiddies' kooking korner," where delicious recipes are given. The magazine announces a weekly prize for the most interesting snapshot accompanied by a poem or story. The price of the magazine is five cents the copy.

DR. COLLIER PRESIDENT OF ATHENS CHAMBER

D. C. Collier, of Athens, who attended the hearing last week before the public service commission on revision of gas rates in Macon, Athens, Rome and Griffin, is president of the Athens Chamber of Commerce, it was said Saturday in explanation of connections of the Athens delegation. Abit Nix, of Athens, is the representative of the Georgia Public Utilities Corporation and counsel for the gas company of Athens. Other Athens men present at the hearing were Thomas J. Shackleford, representing the chamber of commerce as attorney; L. C. Rucker, city attorney, and E. B. Braswell, owner of the Athens Banner-Herald.

Prowler Killed.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP) A prowler, identified by papers in his pockets as Burt Sanderson, of Chicago, was shot to death by George W. Thompson in the bedroom of his home early today. A confederate of the dead man escaped.

Revival of Frame in Popularity of Home Builders Is Reported

BY JOHN L. COOLEY.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The stock market rounded out two months of a virtually unchecked decline today with the downward movement still in evidence. Losses, however, were smaller than yesterday.

Heavy selling of the utilities sent them within 3 points of their 1929 low, as based on the averages. Rails, now indicated by the averages as the lowest in four years, once more were liquidated freely, but the industrials offered rather half-hearted resistance, chiefly in the first hour.

As it was, United States Steel, General Electric, Standard Oil of New Jersey, and even American Can, which had been one of the few leaders to hold above the year's minimum, explored new low ground. Some covering late in the active session served to firm Steel, Westinghouse and General Motors.

Wall Street was gratified at the showing made by the market in the first hour. Whether it was because yesterday's margin calls will not have to be satisfied until Monday or whether some attempts were being made to give the list organized support, prices pointed higher in the first hour when gains of 1 to 2 were well distributed. However, the rails soon softened and the entire market followed their lead toward the middle of the session. The break coincided with a sharp decline in Cities Service on the curb. Sales totalled 2,070,760, the largest Saturday trading in several weeks.

News coming to hand at the weekend was generally unfavorable. Considerable importance was placed on the report of the committee on Petroleum economics which suggested that the industry revise its estimates of gasoline consumption, eliminating the 7 per cent increase of October for the next six months and leaving production unchanged. The committee, in fact, recommended "a substantial reduction in operating rates" of gasoline inventories, not to exceed 45,000,000 barrels. This opinion on an admittedly unfavorable situation attracted particular attention because it followed so closely cancellation of the export price schedule, an action that leaves the way open for competitive price cutting abroad.

Radio's report of a deficit for the third quarter broke the stock 2 points to the new low of 15, although it failed to have any effect on the shares of the two large electrical manufacturers which own large blocks of Radio. Chain store sales for October continued to show a mixture of gains and losses, but Sears-Roebuck receipts were higher for the eleventh accounting period of its fiscal year, although 17.8 per cent below the comparative interval last year. Youngstown district steel operations will be down about 2 per cent next week, according to reports from that important industrial area.

With the general market in new low ground for the past three years, the continued decline was of course disconcerting, particularly in the rails. Norfolk & Western, which had bravely stuck to its guns in the 200 class, broke to 199 on a 5-point drop. Southern Pacific at 99 was the lowest since 1927, off 1 1-2. Pennsylvania, touching 39 1-2, and New York Central, off 3 1-2, were at their lowest in some time. Atchison, Reading, Erie and Central of New Jersey were other weak spots. Union Pacific was steady.

Gillette displayed independent strength, moving up 4 points in response to failure of the injunction proceedings against the Auto-Strop merger. Goodyear Rubber was also firm, gaining 2 points on the report that dividends would be maintained. For the most part, losses in the industrials were small. American Can closed half lower and declines in Allied Chemical, Bethlehem Steel, Du-Pont and International Harvester did not exceed 2 points. North American tumbled more than 5 to 66, which is half of its 1930 high. American Telephone sagged to 187 1-2, recovering only half a point. Consolidated Gas, Public Service of New Jersey and American Power & Light yielded 2.

The commodities were irregular. Wheat sagged fractionally in sympathy with the Argentine market. Corn also eased, reflecting bearish weather and large offerings, cotton's response to the crop and ginning reports was a rally of 65c to $1.10 a bale net.

Wall Street Briefs.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Steel plant operations in the Youngstown district will decline next week to 50 per cent of capacity, a loss of 2 per cent due chiefly to reduction of activities at the Republic Steel Corporation plants, Dow, Jones & Co. reports.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Company is negotiating a contract with the British postal authorities relative to the new trans-Atlantic cable the A. T. & T. is laying. If the contract is made, the British postoffice will share in the expenses and income of the cable with the American company. The cable probably will be ready early in 1932 and will be used primarily for telephone purposes.

The Wisconsin Steel Company has blown out one of its two remaining active blast furnaces. There are now 14 of the 36 stacks in the Chicago district active.

A special meeting of stockholders of G. R. Kenney Company, Inc., has been called for December to vote on a proposal to reduce the authorized preferred stock to 66,000 shares from 80,000. The outstanding preferred will not be affected, as only 51,000 shares, par value $100, have been issued.

The Willys-Overland Company has called back several groups of workers and now has 6,000 men at work on the new models.

Dow, Jones & Co. reports a preliminary estimate indicates October gross of the Burlington railroad will be approximately $13,187,000, against actual gross in October last year of $16,168,779, a decrease of slightly more than 18 per cent, but a gain of about 2 per cent over gross of $12,847,311 in September this year.

The J. C. Penney Company reported October sales of $19,839,838, a decrease of 14.77 per cent from sales of $23,301,149 for the like month last year. During October this year the company operated 1,450 stores, compared with 1,373 units in operation in October last year. Gross sales for the first 10 months this year totaled $180,274,-906, a decrease of 5.47 per cent from $190,681,488 for the corresponding period last year.

BY DONALD C. BOLLES.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Pressure against domestic bonds slacken.d today in the final session of the week and support for gilt-edged issues improved but the market moved irregularly lower.

The sharp reaction in bond prices on Friday resulted in some bargain hunter buying today and changes in better grade investment issues were narrower and mixed. Convertibles and speculative industrials were the weakest spots in the market and a few railroad bonds were sharply lower.

Chesapeake & Ohio 4 1-2s, St. Paul 5s of 2000, Chicago and Western Indiana 4s, Denver & Rio Grande 5s "B," Erie 5s of 1967, Great Northern 4 1-2s "D" and "E," Louisville & Nashville 4s, Pittsburgh & West Virginia 4 1-2s "C," St. Louis-San Francisco 4 1-2s and Southern Railway general 6s were under pressure. Several reached new lows for the year. Seaboard issues were more active than in some time and moved steadily lower. The 6s dipped 2 points to 24 and the adjustment 5s sold at 4, off 1 1-4.

Point losses were registered by many industrials that continue in disfavor as a result of adverse business conditions. Weak bonds included Crown Zellerbach 6s, Central Foundry 6s, Bush Terminal 4s, General Steel Castings 5 1-2s, B. F. Goodrich 6s, Keith first 6s, and Pure Oil 5 1-2s. Remington Arms sinking fund 6s, infrequently traded, touched a new high at par.

While the main body of utilities moved narrowly, American Water Works 6s reacted 1 3-4 to a new year's low, and New Orleans Public Service 5s "A," and North American Edison 5s "A" were under pressure. American Telephone bonds were firm.

A 4-point decline in Warner Brothers 6s was a feature of the stock privilege group. The bonds closed at 74 1-8, the low of the day. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron 6s, another convertible, dipped 3 into new low ground for the year.

Liberty 4th 4 1-4s were well bought at the year's peak price but the rest of the government group was dull and slightly lower. The firmness of United States Governments during the week has been in sharp contrast with the divergent trend of domestic corporation investment securities.

The preponderence of changes in the foreign list was on the downside. German International 5 1-2s yielded 1 1-4 and other German municipal and industrial issues were in supply. Finland Republic 5 1-2s declined about a point. Realizing gave an irregular tone to South Americans, Argentine 6s, Brazil 8s, Peru 6s, and Sao Paulo 7s were lower. Bolivian 7s dipped 5 points on a few sales. Brazilian governments were firm and Chile 6s were in demand.

CUT OPERATING RATE, GASOLINE MEN TOLD

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Present evidence was said today by the volunteer committee on petroleum economics to indicate gasoline demand for the period ending March 31, 1931, will not exceed a year ago and may be even less.

In view of this, the report, which was submitted to the federal oil conservation board and made public by Secretary Wilbur, recommended a 7 per cent reduction in operating rates.

It pointed out that gasoline consumption in recent months has been divorced sharply downward by the business depression, and that to forecast demand for gasoline requires, in consequence, a knowledge of the trend of business activity.

Although an accurate forecast was impossible at this time, the report said during the third quarter gasoline consumption was running about 7 per cent below a level "calculated as normal, and with the business outlook still obscure the prospects for a favorable gasoline demand during the period under consideration are not promising."

The committee said it was obvious, inasmuch as the industry is now operating on a basis near to 7 per cent increase in gasoline consumption, "that a substantial reduction in operating rates is called for."

"A curtailment to balance a breakeven demand for gasoline," it continued, "will require a reduction of 7 per cent from the estimated October rate of gasoline supply, if gasoline inventories next spring are not to exceed 45,000,000 barrels."

The committee was set up by Secretary Wilbur last spring and its membership comprises nationally recognized authorities on petroleum.

The report was prepared at the request of the board of directors of the American Petroleum Institute. It supplemented the committee's report of last March to the secretary of supply and demand factors in the petroleum industry.

Joseph E. Pogue, New York, served as chairman, in the absence of J. Elmer Thomas, chairman of the original committee, who was in Europe. Other members of the committee were Ray M. Collins, H. W. Lowrie, Jr., and H. P. Grimm.

STOCKS SINK LOW IN WEEK'S TRADE

BY CLAUDE A. JAGGER.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The quoted value of equity shares actively traded in the stock exchange shrank about 7 per cent in the past week to the lowest level in three years and three months, as measured by the price index of 90 representative issues.

Undoubtedly the quoted value of all listed shares declined less drastically, for the index of 90, as compiled by the Standard Statistics Company, is based upon the more prominent issues, in which selling was the heaviest, but the index provides an indication of the deflation that has taken place. This index dropped 9 1-2 points to 126 1-3.

There were but five trading days as the market was closed on election day, and trading was in comparatively small volume, exceeding 3,000,000 shares only on Friday. The market held about stationary on Monday, broke four points on Wednesday, rallied slightly on Thursday, dropped 4 1-2 on Friday, and 1 3-5 on Saturday.

Of course there was an inclination in some quarters to connect the action of the market with the election results, but the joint statement of seven democratic leaders on Saturday expressing their intention of co-operating with the administration to remedy the economic situation failed to stop the decline. Such a statement, had there been any wide apprehension on that score, might have caused the normal technical rebound which most observers feel is overdue.

The utilities suffered the widest declines, and some observers pointed in this connection to the victory of candidates favoring strict control of electric power companies in some of the gubernatorial elections. These shares, however, have been selling higher in relation to earnings than the rest of the list, so that their decline could as logically be interpreted as merely a readjustment to the general level of quoted values. Even at the end of the year, while that of 50 industrials was the lowest since 1927, and that of 20 rails the lowest since 1926, the combined index of 90 was the lowest since early August, 1927.

It was difficult to trace the basic source of the further selling. The most common explanation seemed to be that it was still a reflection of disappointment at the failure of the seasonal upturn in business to reach normal proportions in October, as the protracted decline of June was generally traced to disappointment over the failure of business to make the recovery expected in the spring. It was also felt that the decline had been aggravated by unreasoning fear and by certain individual situations, such as the liquidation of impaired collateral loans, and the execution of string stop loss orders.

There was little inclination to trace the decline to professional bearish operations, for the big bear operators are still understood to have been restrained, and the brisk upturns caused by short covering have failed to appear.

A militant American artist, who calls the practice of singing opera in a foreign language "ridiculous snobbery," is Kathryn Meisle, the Chicago Civic Opera Company contralto, who will be star over WSB of the special Armistice Day program of the Atwater Kent hour at 8:15 tonight.

Coming but two days before Armistice Day, the Atwater Kent hour program tonight will have a very distinct patriotic tone. This will be evidenced not only in the character of the program itself but also through the presence in the studio of Ivor Novello, noted British actor, author and composer, who wrote the words and music for "Keep the Home Fires Burning," one of the great songs of the World War.

• • • •

A special version of Verdi's Manzoni Requiem will be given during the Cathederal hour from 1 to 2 p. m. over the Columbia Broadcasting network as a tribute to the men who were killed in the World War.

The perfogmance will be under the direction of Channon Collinge, who trained the choir at the Lewisohn stadium in New York last year.

• • • •

Two choral works of Deems Taylor, American composer, will be presented on the first of a series of programs the National Oratorio Society will broadcast over a National Broadcasting Company network today from 11:30 a. m. to 12:15 p. m.

• • • •

Sketches and resonant negro melodies of the "Deep South" will be presented in a series of Saturday evening programs which the National Broadcasting Company will inaugurate on November 15. The series has been named after the song, "Careless Love."

• • • •

Admiral of the Fleet Earl Jellicoe, who commanded the British naval forces during the war until 1916, will speak from London over the Columbia network in a special broadcast today at 4:30 p. m. on "The Spirit of Armistice Day."

• • • •

Patrick McGilligan, minister for external affairs in the Irish Free State cabinet headed by President Cosgrave, and one of the most brilliant of the politicians and statesmen brought into prominence by the resurgence of Irish nationalism, will speak from London over the Columbia chain at 11:30 a. m. on "Ireland and the British Commonwealth of Nations."

RADIO FEATURES ARMISTICE DAY

Speeches, military pageantry and silent tribute to the soldier dead will distinguish three Armistice Day programs which the National Broadcasting Company plans to distribute to its networks Monday and Tuesday.

Radio's observance of the patriotic anniversary will begin at 10:45 p. m. on Armistice Day eve, when an army bugler sounds "first call" for the massing of the colors at the tenth annual American Legion victory ball at the Hotel Astor in New York. The broadcast description of this ceremony will last for 45 minutes and will be heard through an NBC-WEAF network.

General John J. Pershing, Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson and Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley will close Armistice Day on the networks Tuesday night. They will broadcast addresses from the NBC Washington studios during a 30-minute program which will be heard through a station linked with WJZ, New York.

ATLANTA FIREMAN IN NARROW ESCAPE

H. A. Ewing, member of company No. 2 of the city fire department, narrowly escaped serious injury Saturday while fighting fire at Lee and Dimmock street. Ewing had entered the building carrying a hose line with him, when flames suddenly cut off his retreat. Turning the stream of water on the blaze, he extinguished it and escaped with slight burns about the face.

'TURKEY IN THE STRAW' ON STROMBERG HOUR

Barn Dance Contrasts With Dignified Classic Selections.

"Turkey in the Straw," the old familiar Cowboy Breakdown or barn dance with its zip and gayety, contrasts with more dignified classic selections on the Stromberg-Carlson program, given by the Rochester Civic orchestra under Guy Fraser Harrison's direction on Monday evening. This program, which is presented at 10 o'clock, eastern standard time, originates at WHAM and is carried over WSB and WJZ's national network.

One of the classic numbers is the Overture to "Euryanthe" of von Weber. This opera was written about a century ago based on a romance around medieval maiden of that name. Due to a poor libretto, the oper was a failure and this lovely overture is one of the few fragments that has survived.

Another lovely air from classic sources will be "Heart's Wounds" of Creig which will be played by the string section of the orchestra.

The complete program follows:

Overture, "Euryanthe".....Weber
Overture, "Euryanthe".....Weber
Reverie, "A Voix des Cloches .....Luigini
Turk in the Straw .....Guion
Hearts Wounds.....Greig
For String Orchestra
Polacca—from Third Suite .....Tschaikowsky

SERVICE FOR WILSON ARMISTICE FEATURE

A commemorative service at the tomb of Woodrow Wilson in the Bethlehem chapel of Washington cathedral, here, is to be a feature of Armistice Day programs of coast-to-coast networks of the two major broadcasting chains. It has been scheduled by both the Columbia Broadcasting system and the National Broadcasting Company.

The service is sponsored by the Woodrow Wilson Armistice Day committee in Washington. It is held annually in place of pilgrimages formerly made to the Wilson residence on S street. Members of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation and friends of the World War president throughout the land are expected to be among the listeners.

The Right Reverend James E. Freeman, bishop of Washington, will read scriptural passages which were beloved especially by Mr. Wilson and make the memorial address. Prayer will be offered by the Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, which President Wilson attended while he was in the White House.

The music will be provided by the Washington cathedral choir of men and boys and will consist of hymns which were favorites of Mr. Wilson. During the course of the service, which is to begin at 2:30 p. m. and continue until 3 o'clock, floral tributes will be placed on the tomb by various national organizations, including the American Legion.

Mrs. Wilson, members of her family, close associates of the World War president, national officers of patriotic societies and a delegation from the World Alliance for International Friendship are expected to be in the congregation which will assemble in the Bethlehem chapel.

This chapel is in the crypt of the great edifice, which General John J. Pershing and other eminent Americans are assisting to build on the most commanding elevation in the District of Columbia. It is visited yearly by more than 300,000 worshipers and pilgrims. Mr. Wilson's tomb is recessed in the south wall. It consists of sarcophagus, grill and canopy surmounted by two president's flags and an historic United States emblem.

It was in the Bethlehem chapel of Washington cathedral that President Wilson and members of his cabinet gathered in 1918 for a special service of prayer and thanksgiving on the Sunday following the armistice.

MARION F. DUNWOODY IS LAID TO FINAL REST

Funeral services for Marion Francis Dunwoody, native Georgian, director of music at Louisiana College, and a noted piano teacher, who died Thursday at his home in Alexandria, La., were held Saturday afternoon at Spring Hill chapel, with Dr. Richard Orme Flinn officiating. Interment was in West View cemetery.

Mr. Dunwoody was born in Mimosa Hall, at Roswell, and spent the early years of his life in Atlanta.

Chevrolet Sales Contest Winners Entertained by Regional Manager

Officials and sales representatives of the Chevrolet Motor Company in this territory, who were in Atlanta Saturday as the guests of L. S. Costley, regional manager. These men were the winners of the special new and used car sales campaign for October.

L. S. Costley, southeastern regional manager for the Chevrolet Motor Company, was host to the zone sales executives in the Atlanta territory Saturday. The zone managers and department heads invited to Atlanta were winners in a sales contest conducted during October.

The sales campaign was on both new and used cars, and all Chevrolet dealers in the southeastern states of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina, participated. The campaign resulted in an exceptionally large volume of sales and reduced dealers' stocks of both new and used cars to the lowest level in the history of this region.

The volume of business done by the Chevrolet dealers in this territory during October indicates an improved condition in the southeast, Mr. Costley believes.

The men attending the meeting were T. D. Hunter, zone manager, Charlotte, N. C.; P. A. Watson, zone manager, Columbia, S. C.; R. W. Peek, zone manager, Atlanta, Ga.; E. R. Fenton, assistant zone manager, Charlotte, N. C.; W. A. Harding, assistant zone manager, Columbia, S. C.; C. P. Barron, assistant zone manager, Atlanta; J. T. Love, sales promotion manager, Charlotte, N. C.; J. M. Glass, sales promotion manager, Atlanta; J. O'Leary, parts and service manager, Columbia, S. C.; J. M. Glinn, parts and service manager, Charlotte, N. C.; E. A. Randall, parts and service manager, Atlanta; E. L. Hiller, accounting manager, Atlanta; M. B. DR. WALTER HAMBY LAST RITES TODAY

Funeral services for Dr. Walter B. Hamby, 64, of 1662 Peachtree street, N. W., prominent retired physician and capitalist, who died Thursday night at Winter Haven, Fla., will be conducted at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the chapel of Barclay & Brandon by Dr. N. A. Cooper. Interment will be in the West End mausoleum.

Dr. Hamby had practiced medicine here for more than 20 years, and was one of the foremost growers of citrus fruits in Florida. He was a director of the Citizens & Southern National bank, a member of the state and national medical associations, a 32d degree Mason, and a member of the Atlanta Elks and the M. & M. Club.

He is survived by his widow, five brothers, and two sisters.

FINAL RITES TODAY FOR ANDY E. BROWN

Last rites for Andy E. Brown, 70, of 717 Dill avenue, well-known grocer, who died Friday afternoon at his residence, will be conducted at 2 o'clock this afternoon at Spring Hill by the Rev. W. Lee Cutts. Interment will be in Crest Lawn cemetery.

Mr. Brown, who formerly was of Anderson, S. C., had lived in Atlanta for the last 25 years and was an active member of the Capitol View Baptist church. He is survived by his widow; three sons, Olin, Erwin, and Ralph Brown, all of Atlanta; six daughters, Mrs. Edgar Crost, Misses Jessie and Ruth Brown and Mrs. A. L. Burt, all of Atlanta; Mrs. L. A. Chamblee, of Hartwell, and Mrs. W. F. Echardt, of Greensboro, N. C.; four sisters, and two brothers.

Junior League Stages First Marionette Show Nov. 15

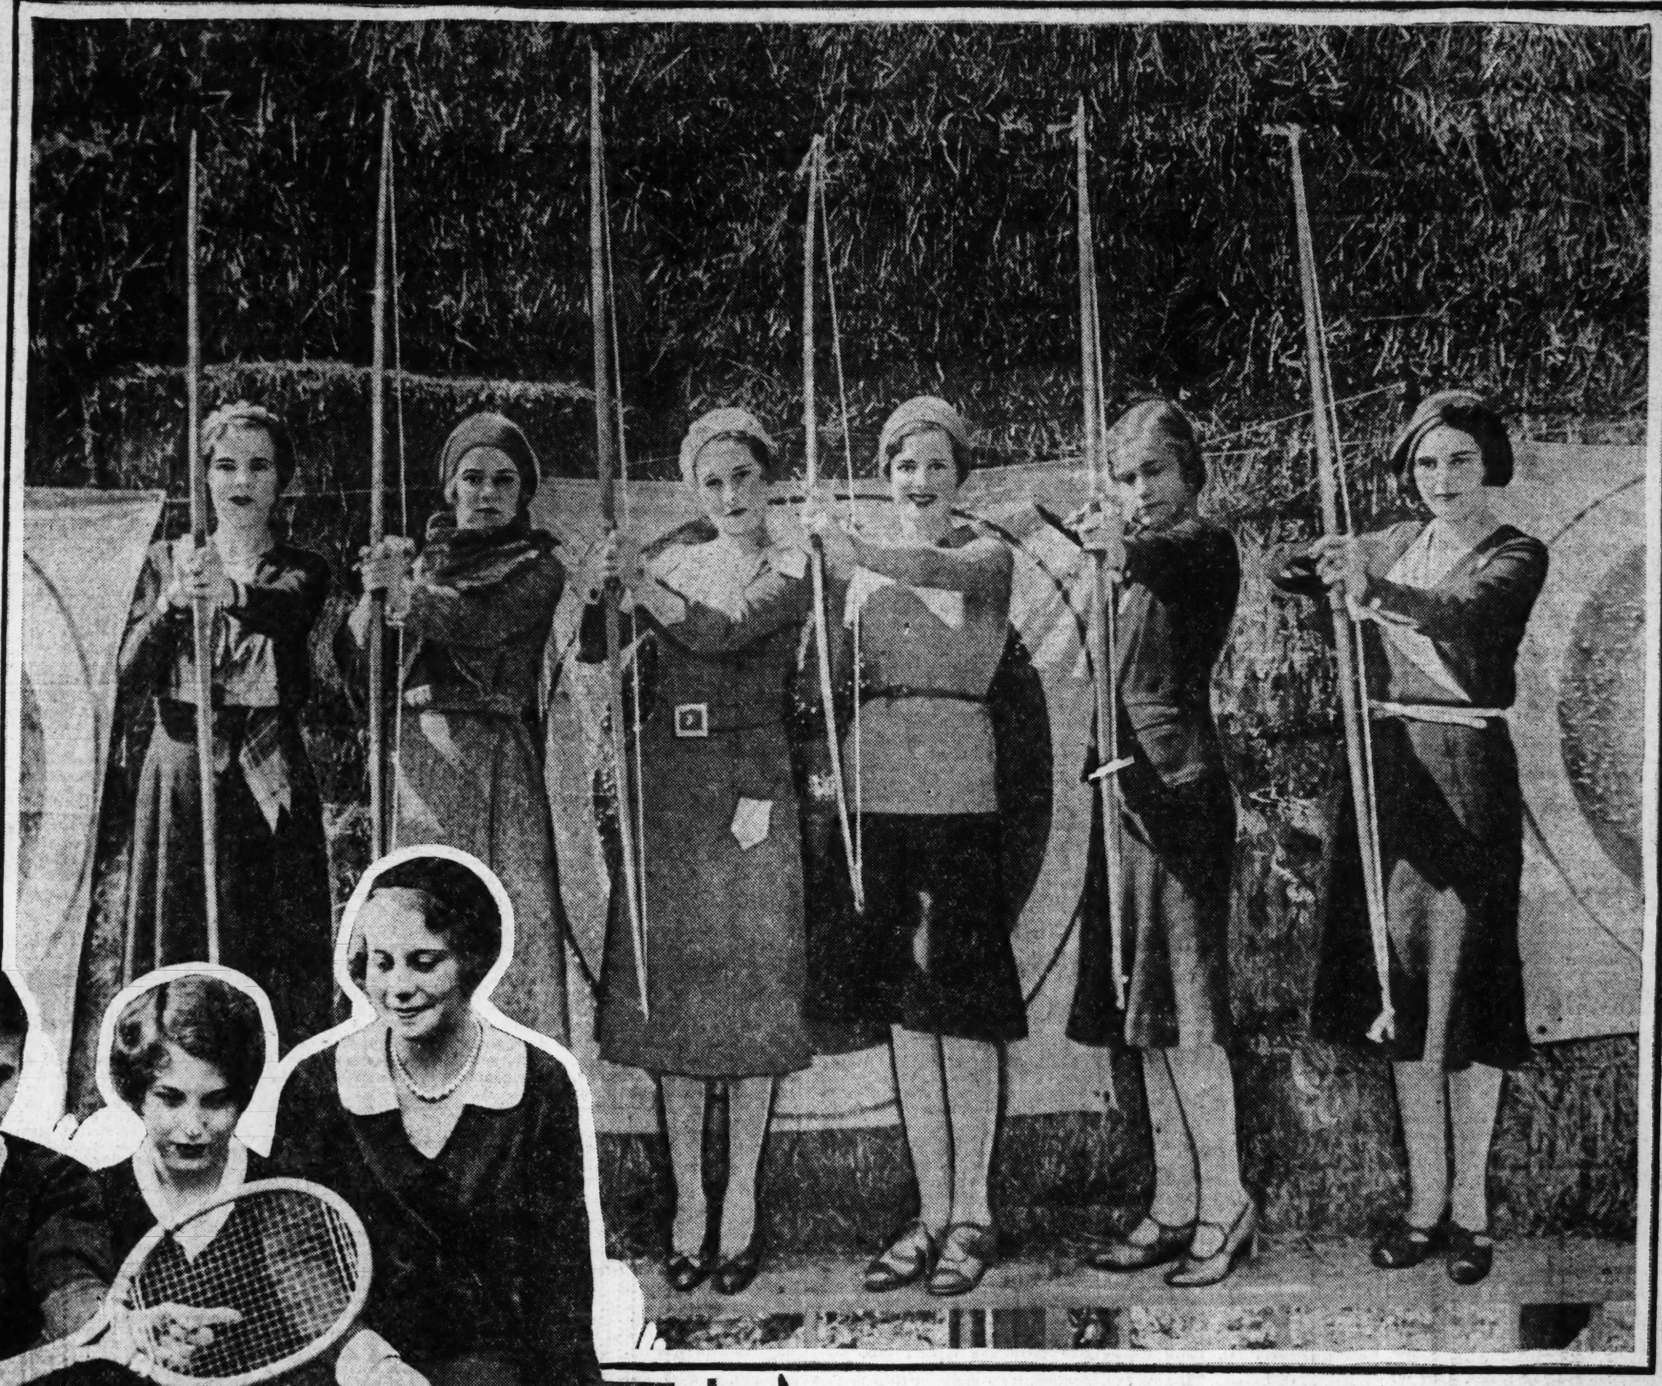

Junior League marionettes will present their first production of the season Saturday morning, November 15, at 10:30 o'clock at the Buckhead theater. Suitable entertainment for children has long been an active and sincere interest of junior leagues over the country. One of the most successful forms of entertainment has been that of the marionette show and in this field the Atlanta Junior League has been one of the leaders. The three plays to be given Saturday are adapted from "Uncle Remus," the beloved character created by Joel Chandler Harris. They are "The Tar Baby," "Mr. Wolf's Plan That Failed" and "Sis Cow and the 'Simmon Tree," three of the best known of the "Uncle Remus" stories. These plays were adapted from the original stories by Mrs. Turner Jones, who wrote the prolog, a scene between "Uncle Remus" and the "Little Boy," by Mrs. Robert Foreman, Jr., who wrote "The Tar Baby" and "Mr. Wolf's Plan That Failed," and by Mrs. Horace Rhorer, who wrote "Sis Cow and the 'Simmon Tree." The delightful charm and humor of the stories have been preserved in the plays and in the reading of the lines by the puppeteers.

Cast Follows.

The cast is as follows: Prolog: Uncle Remus, Mrs. Clarence Laws; Little Boy, Mrs. Albert Irving. "The Tar Baby:" Brer Rabbit, Mrs. Rutherland Ellis, and Brer Fox, Mrs. Murdock Equen. "Mr. Wolf's Plan That Failed:" Brer Wolf, Mrs. Marion Kiser, Brer Fox, Mrs. Murdock Equen, and Brer Rabbit, Mrs. Rutherford Ellis. "Sis Cow and the 'Simmon Tree:" Sis Cow, Mrs. Perrin Nicolson, Jr., and Brer Rabbit, Mrs. Rutherford Ellis.

This year the marionettes have had professional instruction in rendition of the lines by Mrs. Irma Floyd Emmitt, a theatrical coach. Mrs. Charles Rawson and Mrs. John Ottley, Jr., are in charge of the properties for the plays. Mrs. Robert Foreman, Jr., has charge of the lighting effects. The stage which the marionettes use in the productions is a gem of its kind. For the plays to be given on Saturday, three very elaborate back drops have been painted by members of the league. Miss Frances Brown designed and painted the scene for "The Tar Baby," Mrs. Emory Cocke the scene in the cabin of "Uncle Remus," and Mrs. Benson Tigner the scene for "Sis Cow and the 'Simmon Tree." These talented Junior League members have added greatly to the effec-

Whitman-Hunt Wedding Plans Announced Today

Of social importance on the calendar of the forthcoming week's events is the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Whitman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Whitman, and Robert Craighill Hunt, whose engagement was recently announced. The wedding will be solemnized at high noon Saturday, November 15, at the North Avenue Presbyterian church, on Peachtree street, and will be witnessed by a gathering of Atlanta's most fashionable society. The ceremony will be performed by Rev. Richard Orme Flinn, pastor of the church.

The bride-elect will be given in marriage by her father, James R. Whitman, and she will have as her matron of honor and only attendant her sister, Mrs. Albert Hall Lakin, of Emporia, Kan., formerly Miss Margaret Whitman, of Atlanta.

The bridegroom-to-be will have as his best man his brother, Harry Hamlet Hunt, Jr., of Richmond, Va. The little ringbearer will be Jack Fulwiler, little son of Mr. and Mrs. John Tribbett Fulwiler and nephew of the groom-elect. The ushers will include Marshall Whitman, brother of the bride-elect, and Allison E. Thornwell, Errett Van Hook and Phelan Nabors.

Immediately following the ceremony the bride and groom will leave for a wedding trip to points of interest in Florida and upon their return will make their home in Atlanta.

Preceding the wedding this week several parties have been planned, among them a bridge-luncheon to be given Monday, November 10, by Mrs. Reyburn L. Watkins at her home on Briarcliff road.

Tuesday, November 11, Mrs. Truman Bradshaw will be hostess at a small tea at her home on Peachtree street in honor of Miss Whitman.

Wednesday, November 12, Mrs. J. T. Fulwiler will entertain Miss Whitman at luncheon at her home on Seventeenth street.

Wednesday evening, November 12, Miss Whitman and Mr. Hunt will be honor guests at a buffet supper to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Meriwether and their brother, Perryman Little, at the former's home on Peachtree road.

Following the wedding rehearsal Friday evening, Mr. and Mrs. James Robert Whitman, parents of the bride-elect, will entertain at a buffet supper at their home on Juniper street in compliment to their daughter and Mr. Hunt and members of the wedding party.

Football Visitors Are Honored.

Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Griffin and Mr. and Mrs. Jones Harber Aderhold entertained at tea yesterday at the home of the former on Sixteenth street, the affair assembling a group of close friends of the hosts and a number of football visitors. Among the out-of-town guests attending the party were Mr. and Mrs. Milus Matthew Smith, of Augusta, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Aderhold.

Mrs. Gieberich To Be Honored By Mrs. Cohen

Mrs. John S. Cohen entertains at an informal tea tomorrow at the Peachtree road residence, honoring her cousin, Mrs. Oscar Gieberich, of Paris, France, numbered among the most prominent November visitors. Former friends of the honor guest, an erstwhile Atlantan, have been extended invitation to welcome Mrs. Gieberich between 4 and 6 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Gieberich arrived last Wednesday to visit Major and Mrs. Cohen at their home on Peachtree street. Many courtesies will be shown these visitors, Mrs. Gieberich being pleasantly remembered as Miss Mabel Drake, of Atlanta, a member of one of the aristocratic pioneer families. Mr. Gieberich is a noted artist, the exhibit of whose pictures at the Biltmore several years ago is recalled by art lovers in Atlanta. Mr. and Mrs. Gieberich are leading figures in the American colony in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Candler Have New Home.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard Candler, Jr., and their little son, Charles Howard Candler III, last week took possession of their beautiful new residence on Lullwater parkway, adjacent to Lullwater drive, in Druid Hills, a magnificent English home built among a setting of trees high upon a hill. The home is the first to be constructed on this little avenue, which adjoins picturesque Lullwater road.

The home was planned by Mr. and Mrs. Candler and since their marriage, December 3, 1928, when Miss Ruth Ozburn became Mrs. Candler, they have been sketching and planning to have exactly the type of home they desired. The rooms are large, and the living room is entered by descending four steps from the hallway, a feature that Mrs. Candler has always wanted in a home. In the basement they have a large room for a ping-pong table, and one of the most attractive rooms in the house is the nursery for young Howard III. The room is done entirely in blue, the walls, handpainted furniture, draperies, toys and everything in a matching shade.

Mrs. Candler has purchased some exquisite antiques for her home, a real Chinese secretary and two Queen Anne lowboys being especially beautiful. Mrs. Candler was telling about them when she moved last week. One of the moving men came to her and said: "Mrs. Candler, before we move these here two little old tables, I want to tell you that they are all scratched and scarred up. I want you to see them so we won't have to pay for 'em."

Mrs. Candler said she told them that those scratches and scars had already been very dearly paid for, but somehow he couldn't quite understand what she meant.

Georgia Will Join Nation-Wide Observance National Book Week

General Federation of Women's Clubs co-operated with the National Association of Book Publishers from the beginning in the observance of annual Book Week. The accomplishments of Georgia clubs in this observance have been outstanding, the LaGrange Woman's Club winning the prize in the national contest last year. The purpose of Book Week is to call attention to the importance of children's reading, through programs and exhibits in schools libraries, churches, bookstores and clubs. Georgia towns having inadequate library facilities have set aside this week for contributions of books and funds to local libraries. Every one of the community efforts means more books in the home, which means better citizenship; therefore Book Week is a constructive home-building movement. Book Week is observed this year for the twelfth successive season, and has become a national institution. The National Association of Book Publishers says that 17,000 requests have already been received this year, for posters and manuals of Book Week suggestions.

A general federation chairman of literature once said, "The most thrilling work of the division of literature is to celebrate 'Children's Book Week,' and Georgia clubs apparently share that thrill." Some of the plans for observance of the week as given by the publishers' association are given as suggestions for clubs.

Libraries throughout the country are arranging special displays, story hours, and distributing book lists. In Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Boston, and many other large cities, the public libraries act as headquarters for Book Week information. Small libraries are arousing community interest in an attempt to enlarge their book collections, and towns where no library exists are raising funds to establish one. In Saramento, Cal., the city library is sponsoring a community observance. Thirty leading merchants are decorating their own windows that week to represent book titles. In New Orleans, La., the library is working very closely with public and parochial schools, and classes visit the library during the week on special invitation. Oakland, Cal., plans a community observance under the direction of a "Better Book Committee," comprised of representatives from libraries, schools, parent-teacher associations, churches and clubs.

Eleven thousand schools planned special Book Week projects last year, and the number this year will be even larger. Book pageants, contests and book plays will be given to encourage an interest in reading among the boys and girls. Prominent authors are secured for book talks before the school assemblies and special exhibits of books are arranged. Funds are being raised to build up school libraries. Reading clubs are formed to carry on this interest the year round. In many rural school districts traveling displays of books are rotated among the individual schools. Hundreds of state normal schools are devoting the week to the study of children's literature as an important phase of teacher-training.

Mrs. Lummus Is Chairman For November

Mrs. Frank Lummus, chairman of the entertainment committee at Columbus Women's Club for November is planning attractive features to add to the pleasure of guests. The regular "open house" days will be observed with 16 hands of either auction or contract played at any time during the day. The club will at all times be decorated and form an ideal place for entertaining.

The first large party was the reception with which the three local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution entertained last Thursday afternoon complimenting Mrs. H. Fay Gaffney, who has been indorsed by the Georgia D. A. R. for vice president-general of the national organization. This party did not interfere with the bridge-tea as tables were arranged in the green room upstairs for bridge.

The following list of ladies will serve with Mrs. Lummus: Mesdames F. B. Gordon, O. C. Bullock, James Willis, E. T. Rigney, A. Illges, Park Dexter, William R. Blanchard, Marshall Dixon, Ralph Lipman, A. B. Banks, T. C. Hudson, Charles Jordan, R. W. Swope, Adabelle Dooley, Kirven Gilbert, Edgar Chancellor, C. C. Hartpence, Walter Woodall, J. E. Humes and G. S. Murray.

Mrs. Reeve Submits Calhoun Woman's Club Report

Mrs. C. P. Reeve, president of Calhoun Woman's Club, issues the following report to the club page, which she submitted at the seventh district convention held October 23 in Acworth. She said:

"A new movement sponsored by the club resulted in two flower shows this year, one in October, 1929, another in September, 1930. Three girls from each consolidated school in Gordon county entered flowers and were given individual prizes and the school having the most attractive booth received a prize. Mrs. G. V. Johnston and Mrs. E. L. Jackson were the efficient chairmen of this committee. A prize of $25 will be given to the school making the most improvement.

"The Red Cross seal sale, amounting to $50.30, netted the health chairman $11. Interested members held a spend-the-day party on April 3, completely renovating the interior of the cabin and enjoying a picnic lunch together. The district executive board meeting was entertained by the club in April.

"Mrs. A. B. Harbin, Indian cemetery chairman, has completed during the summer a wall of natural stone around the spot where Chief Pathkiller and Mrs. Elias Bondinot lie buried.

"The United States government, through the efforts of Congressman M. C. Tarver, this year appropriated the sum of $2,500 for the purpose of erecting a marker to the Cherokee nation. It became the duty of the Woman's Club to procure a site for this monument. J. W. Gillespie kindly gave an acre of land on the site of New Echota, last capital of the Cherokees. Two special meetings were held in September, when Captain Edwards, of Fort McPherson, met and discussed with citizens of Calhoun and near-by towns a design and inscription for this monument. Within a few months this work will be completed.

"One hundred books have been added, making a total of approximately 1,500 volumes in the library; 2,017 books were read and $62.10 receipts reported by the committee.

"There are 73 names on the club roll.

"Total receipts for the year were $433.56.

"Expenditures through the general treasury $410.35 and $320.61 through committees on local work. Miss Estelle Wright is secretary of the club."

Miss Bessie Crew Accepts Appointment.

Mrs. E. M. Bailey, of Acworth, president of seventh district of Georgia Federation, announces that Miss Bessie Crew, of Dallas, has accepted the appointment as district chairman of public instructions.

Morgan County Federation Officers

At the left is Mrs. J. M. Few, of Apalachee, the retiring president of Morgan County Federation, having held the office for three consecutive terms. She is a successful writer of plays, poems, and songs. A recent accomplishment of hers is a splendid play arranged from "The tales of the Wayside Inn," she having used "The Poet's Tale" as a basis for its arrangement. This she hopes to get the various clubs of the state and particularly of the eighth district, to stage in interest of nature study, of which department of work she is chairman. Pictured at the right is Mrs. R. W. Wallace, of Rutledge, newly elected president of the organization. She is eighth district chairman of music, and a prominent member of the Melton family at Crawfordville, Ga. She possesses an exquisite soprano voice, and is an inspiration to the community in which she resides, through her knowledge of music and her leadership in club activities.

Retrospective Survey Made of Ninth District Convention

In making a retrospective survey of the nineteenth annual convention of the ninth district of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, which met October 9 in Buford, with Beautiful America Club as hostess club, several outstanding things seem of paramount importance in clubdom. Mrs. A. D. McCurry, of Winder, ninth district president, presided, and Mrs. Charles Stringer, of Buford, presented the program. The slogan of the convention was "Community Betterment," the goal, "Enrichment of Life Through Better Adjustment of Human Relations." Mrs. S. V. Sanford, of Athens, state president, brought an inspiring message to the convention and urged the club members to promote community interest. Mrs. R. K. Rambo, of Atlanta, gave an interesting talk relative to the general federation in Denver, speaking briefly on each department of the federation. Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, duchess of Tallulah Falls school, gave a wonderful talk about the school. Mrs. M. E. Judd, of Dalton, brought an interesting message to the club presidents and asked for their support in federating clubs.

Memorial Service.

The memorial service was in charge of Mrs. M. B. Allen, of Hoschton. Those who have passed away during the year are: Mrs. H. W. Christian, Buford; Mrs. Beulah H. Cooper and Mrs. J. W. Harris, Commerce; Mrs. Arthur DeLaperriere, Hoschton; Mrs. M. A. McCoy, Jefferson, and Mrs. W. L. Blasingame, Winder. A chart from general federation headquarters was exhibited, showing in detail every phase of work in the federation. Miss Lola Key displayed a poster on library work. Mrs. M. C. Rhodes made a plea to the clubs for response to the call for assisting in the work of World War veterans. A special feature was the roll call of club presidents, each responding with a three-minute talk on "One Thing the Year's Work Has Taught Me." Many interesting points were brought out, all seeming to point to the fact that club work is a splendid medium for developing leadership and that a wonderful service is rendered the community through club work, and that club work is an important factor in the progress of every community. Ten presidents responded. Mrs. John Holder submitted report for committee on constitution and by-laws, said report adopted, which makes the district conform to the state. A noon luncheon was served by members of the hostess club at which time H. W. Christian and Rev. Mays expressed deep appreciation of work accomplished by clubwomen. An invitation to meet in Winder in 1931 was accepted.

Mrs. McCurry's Report.

Mrs. McCurry's report, informative and constructive, was as follows:

It has been a great privilege to know more intimately the clubwomen of the ninth district as we have met on the common ground of service to our federation and to our community. Am truly grateful to the executive board and every individual member in the district for the splendid accomplishments, the fine spirit manifested, for the expressions of a desire for growth and greater efficiency, a willingness to adopt and work to a stand of excellence, all of which has made the past year one of delightful and happy experiences.

"Our slogan 'A Better Community,' gives us a definiteness of purpose and challenges us to do our very best that we might carry to completion those projects that make for more favorable conditions and happier adjustment in human relationships. Looking backward we find that while all we hoped for has not been realized yet the clubs have accomplished much work and in a most creditable manner; we see results of time and study given to the work and find fresh interest and new sense of responsibility has come to us.

"Looking forward we see unlimited opportunities for gendering a service that will make for a 'better community' and enable us to make a contribution to life that will justify our existence. May we face this task steadily and surely and look to our Heavenly Father for wisdom and guidance. Clubs have done well as regards Tallulah Falls school and student aid. The next year must find us doing more for the need is great. In this connection we acknowledge with deep appreciation the scholarships given by Bona Allen, Buford, and Arthur DeLaperriere, Hoschton, the latter to be known as the 'Beatrice Phillips DeLaperriere scholarship,' honoring the memory of Mrs. DeLaperriere, who meant so much to the federation and her community and who is greatly missed by all.

"We have a new task to take up in the matter of an endowment for Georgia federation, and I feel confident that the clubs will do their part in this important matter. The Club Institute, Athens, is well attended by women of the ninth district. We had the honor of providing the birthday cake for the twenty-first anniversary of Tallulah Falls school.

"Since coming into office in October, 1929, have appointed chairmen for all phases of work corresponding to state plan; have written 275 cards and innumerable letters, made many auto trips in the interest of district work. In February, I had the pleasure of entertaining in my home the officers, club presidents and chairmen of the district. At which time the advisability of having a standard to guide the clubs systematically in their work was discussed. At the executive board meeting in March your president submitted a standard of excellence which was adopted and offered a trophy to the club making the highest record according to standard during the present administration.

"Have visited 10 clubs, road construction preventing my reaching others; attended two state executive board meetings and Tallulah Falls trustees meeting; held two district executive board meetings, on March 11, with 33 present, and September 16, with 28 present, and on the former occasion the Gainesville Study Club was hostess to the district board members at a lovely luncheon.

"In order that we might be more efficient in our work may I recommend that the clubs (1) study the standard of excellence and strive to meet the requirements; (2) get your dues and your Tallulah gifts out of the way early in the year; (3) select from the club programs that phase of work most needed and best suited to your community, remembering that one thing well done is better than many things begun; (4) have a meeting of chairmen of each department with their divisional chairmen at the close of club year and make out reports, making three copies of each report, one for state chairman, one for district chairman and one for district files; (5) study the state yearbook, and read the club page in The Atlanta Constitution for club information; (6) co-operate with other agencies looking toward the development of your community; (7) keep your publicity chairman busy; it is a great stimulant to club work.

Mrs. Barnes Urges Tallulah Tag Day on Nov. 29

At the annual convention of the first district of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs held in Guyton October 30 Mrs. G. M. Barnes, of Midville, the president, urged the clubs to observe Saturday, November 29, as Tag Day for Tallulah Falls school.

Mrs. Barnes also announced November 23 to 29 as Appreciation Week, with the following dates and subjects suggested:

Sunday, November 23, "Do You Appreciate Your Religious Environment?" Monday, November 24, "Your Educational Advantages;" Tuesday, November 25, "Your Health and Home;" Wednesday, November 26, "Your Work and Friends;" Thursday, November 27, "Thanksgiving, Your Blessings;" Friday, November 28, "Your Town and Community," and Saturday, November 29, "Your State and Nation."

The idea of Appreciation Week was originated by Mrs. Nelle Womack Hines, of Milledgeville, in 1925. It was indorsed by Governor Hardman in 1927 and was observed by Baldwin county, tenth district and the city schools of Atlanta in 1928-29. Mrs. Barnes hopes that every school and club in first district will observe Appreciation Week.

Mrs. Girardeau Offers Suggestions To Art Chairman

Worthy reports, well deserving of consideration by Georgia clubwomen, result from every executive board meeting and such was the case relative to the one given by Mrs. J. H. Girardeau, of McRae, state chairman of art and civic art. She read before the board meeting held October 15 at the Atlanta Woman's Club the following excellent suggestions, stating that:

In the division of art which offers such an opportunity to mould public taste and to further the creative work of our own American artists, your chairman is endeavoring to follow as closely as possible the outline of the general federation. Art in the community is the slogan and the keynote is to bring beauty to everyday life, to assist talented children and to stress the encouragement of the American artist, because if art is to flourish in our land, it must be supported. This does not mean that we do not value the work of the old masters but that we wish to uphold and develop our own art which is worthy of a place in any gallery of Europe.

General federation division of art owns several collections which will be loaned for exhibition by payment of a small fee and in some instances just transportation one way. Atlanta federation has a traveling loan exhibit which may be obtained by paying the cost of transportation and may be kept two weeks for study.

Penny art fund sponsored by the general federation is being successfully operated in a number of states. The plan is this: A club of 17 members sends in 17 cents, a club of 50 members sends in 50 cents, one of 700 sends $7, a penny a year for each member. The state chairman receives the money and with it purchases paintings from current exhibitions for prizes to be presented at the state convention, to the clubs doing the most constructive art work.

No club is eligible for a state art prize who does not send in this amount. The purchase of the paintings encourages the artists and also promotes the appreciation of art. Various prizes are offered to the junior club presidents or art chairman whose club carries out the most constructive program for art in the community. These prizes will be announced through the club page.

To further the appreciation of art and to encourage our artists, a proper emphasis of art work in the home, school and civic life is urged and the following activities are suggested:

1. Help secure art instruction in school; 2, hold art memory contests; 3, sponsor contests in creative work in drawing, painting, crayon, posters, etc.; 4, organize art study classes stressing American art, but with a background of the masters; 5, sponsor lectures and exhibitions of best works; 6, have exhibits of local work and encourage local effort; 7, give the school and library good prints of good pictures; 8, use the lectures and exhibits of the general federation; 9, clubs may offer study classes and lectures to create further interest and knowledge in civic art which is a most important and essential factor in future city and town development. The development of beauty through architecture, landscape architecture, sculpture, planting and zoning should be of great interest and studied carefully.

Your chairman begs your careful consideration of these suggestions and hopes the reports that are to come in the future will show united effort for art in the community.

Mrs. Cate Is Only Woman Speaker Chosen

When 85 prominent highway engineers, representing 35 foreign countries, visited Brunswick and Sea Island Beach, Ga., Mrs. G. V. Cate, treasurer of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, was selected as the principal speaker at the luncheon given in honor of the distinguished visitors at the Cloister hotel. This honor was conferred upon this well-known clubwoman because she is a deep student of American and Georgia history, and in a masterful way she unraveled the history of America and Georgia in such a manner that she held the closest attention of her hearers. She traced the development of America from the landing of Columbus to the Battle of Bloody Marsh, the scene of which the visitors saw later in the afternoon. She told the foreigners that they undoubtedly were interested in this history, as most of the countries represented took part in it in some way. She then gave a brief but complete history of Georgia.

Mrs. Cate was the only woman speaker and competed in oratory with such personages as Governor Hardman, chief executive of Georgia; Major W. L. Harwell, Judge E. C. Butts and Captain J. W. Barnett.

Augusta Club Hears Mr. Lester Speak.

Augusta Woman's Club luncheon meeting was conducted under the charge of the division of legislation and law observance of which Miss Annie May O'Connell is chairman. This division is under the department of American citizenship, of which Mrs. J. P. Mulherin is chairman. Legislator-elect William E. Lester was the principal speaker of the afternoon.

The need of better state legislation, and the pressing need of individual reverance for laws and the constitution were the points stressed by Mr. Lester, who touched upon national politics and brought his facts more pertinently to defects in the Georgia state laws. He told of the existing ad valorum system of taxation which he termed inadequate in returning a fair taxation to the state, and which he stated placed an unfair burden upon real estate, which condition and effort would be made to improve at the new general assembly with the taxation of intangible assets such as bank-accounts, stocks, bonds, etc. He told of the deficit in the state treasury, and suggested that a remedy be afforded by the next legislature adopting a budget system, which would enable the public institutions of the state to function with adequate finances while at the same time not draining the state resources. He also suggested the abolition of a number of useless state offices, and Mr. Lester commended the club for the work its members have done on behalf of such institutions as the Gracewood Home for the Feeble-minded and the local Medical College. He promised the clubwomen that a bill would be introduced into the next general assembly which would prohibit the employment of women and children for night work in any factory. He ended with a plea for the greater veneration for law by every person.

Miss O'Connell told of the efforts of clubwomen to promote better law observance. Miss O'Connell was introduced by Mrs. Mulherin. Mrs. W. P. Manning, club president, asked for nomination of delegates to represent the club at the tenth district club convention which is to be held in Warrenton the last of November, and Mesdames Terrill Wiggins and Ella Ballentine were appointed, with Mesdames John Cleckley and J. S. Plaxco as alternates.

The resignation of Mrs. J. W. Byers from the club was regretfully anounced, with Mrs. E. Clifford Reed being appointed to her place on the hospitality committee. Miss Sara Eve was introduced as a new member and Mrs. R. Allen Elliott was also announced as a new member.

Previous to the luncheon, the executive board meeting took up the proposition of the clubwomen co-operating in the drive to relieve unemployment in the city by having repairs or renovating done wherever possible in their homes. Plans were also taken up for the Christmas Red Cross tuberculosis seals drive. Year books of the club were distributed to members. The president's table was a huge ball of white chrysanthemums and autumn leaves, and at the place of each guest at the luncheon were artistic diminuative pumpkins made of orange fondant, placed upon dark green ivy leaves. W. E. Moore, of Macon, rendered a group of songs, accompanied upon the piano by Miss Hattie Moran.

The luncheon was put on by Mrs. Hattie Avary, general chairman of the luncheon committee, with the assistance of Mesdames L. P. Tessier, chairman; R. E. Elliott, J. A. Lamkin, Jr., Julia Smith and Kate Colson.

McDonough Club Holds Meeting.

November meeting of McDonough Woman's Club was held Tuesday at the home of Mrs. J. B. Dickson, with Mrs. C. D. Ingram as joint hostess. After hearing reports of the various officers the club voted to give Mrs. Rix Stafford, of The Atlanta Constitution, a rising vote of thanks for the space on the club page which has been given the local organization.

Mrs. Ralph Turner presented a program based on a study of Georgia poets. Brief sketches of the lives of Paul Hamilton Hayne, Charles W. Hubner, Francis O. Tichenor, Robert F. Loveman, Richard Henry Wilde, Conrad Aiken, Ernest Hartsock, Miss Mary Brent Whiteside, Miss Lollie Belle Wylie, Mrs. Nellie Womack Hines and Ernest Neal were given by Mesdames C. D. Ingram, A. K. Brown, Ralph Turner and Misses Louise Leggitt, Marie Hightower, Frances Hatcher and Ruth Dickson. Miss Lucile Bowden read a poem by Frank L. Stanton and Miss Evelyn Powell gave two selections by Ernest Neal. The flower committee reported carrying a basket of flowers to Mrs. A. D. Whitehead, who is convalescing from a recent illness.

Mrs. Whatley Speaks To Milner Club.

Mrs. Jim Whatley, of Griffin, was speaker at the October meeting of the Milner Woman's Club, held at the clubhouse in Milner, and the president, Mrs. Jack Childers, introduced Mrs. Whatley, who spoke on "The Proper Grouping of Shrubbery." The committee reported $20.40 cleared from a recently produced play.

Mrs. G. D. Godard, chairman of the committee to revise club's constitution and by-laws, made a report, which was accepted. The nominating committee was requested to submit a name for second vice president at the next meeting, as the club voted to add this office to those already provided for in constitution. The club voted to give a "clothes shower" to the children patients at Alto, garments to be sent to Mrs. C. C. Crowder's store, ready for packing and shipping. Miss Ada Bush was welcomed as a new member, and the hostesses for the afternoon were Mesdames R. A. Martin, J. W. Martin and G. R. Brown.

Macon Woman's Clubhouse Opened in Baconsfield Park

A climax to years of work and planning on the part of the members of the club was the brilliant reception with which Macon Woman's clubhouse in Baconsfield Park was formally opened Saturday, November 1, club and society women from throughout the state joining Macon women in celebrating the achievement of this long-hoped-for home.

Guests Received.

Receiving the guests in the drawing room were Mrs. Lewis I. Waxelbaum, the president of the Macon Woman's Club, and other officers of the club: Mrs. T. G. Tarver, first vice president; Mrs. Harry Pape, second vice president; Mrs. A. F. McGhee, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Carl V. Sullivan, recording secretary; Mrs. Robert Halliburton, treasurer; Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, parliamentarian; Mrs. Thomas Lowry, Jr., historian, and Mrs. Benjamin Bashinski, auditor. Receiving the guests with the officers were Mayor Glen Toole and Mrs. W. O. Kinney, who assisted the club members in obtaining the house in Baconsfield Park.

Past presidents of the club who were invited to assist in receiving the guests included: Mrs. S. C. Moore, of South Carolina; Mrs. Horace Chase, of College Park; Mrs. Charles Akerman, Mrs. Robert L. Berner, Mrs. Randolph Jaques, Jr., Mrs. Grant Fuller, Mrs. Jewett Smith, Mrs. Church Berryman. Also assisting in receiving were Miss Fay Lockhart, president of the Pilot Club, and Miss Banks Armand, president of the Business and Professional Woman's Club.

Assisting in serving were Mesdames E. Ulman, John B. Clark, J. A. Selden, Misses Carolyn Waxelbaum, Vivian Hay, Sims Massee, Eugenia Coleman, Blythe McKay, Helen Harrold, Lelia Jones, Edith Tarver and Mrs. Edwin Tribble. The book was in charge of Misses Marian Waxelbaum, Elinor Boterweg and Gena Halliburton.

Throughout the clubhouse quantities of fall flowers in bright colors formed the decorations, effective against the neutral-toned walls, the bright draperies, the browns and tans of the upholstered couches and chairs and the slipcovers which accented the blue note in the window draperies. In the long drawing room roses, giant yellow and white chrysanthemums, French marigolds, cosmos, and a profusion of dahlias were arranged, these and other fall garden flowers decorating the smaller living room, lounge and committee room.

Musical Program.

A musical program, arranged by Mrs. Richard Cowan, assisted by Mrs. C. C. Boterweg, chairman of programs for the club, was given. Miss Florence Carleton, head of the voice department at Bessie Tift College in Forsyth, sang, accompanied by Miss Fannie Matthews. Mrs. Ayre Hatcher sang, accompanied by Miss Zillah Halstead of Wesleyan conservatory, and selections were given by the choir of the First Presbyterian church, composed of Miss Frances Owens, Mrs. Eugene Boswell, Mr. Floyd Gilbert and Mr. John McMillen, accompanied by Mrs. J. C. Rosseau. Mrs. W. W. Solomon, pianist and Miss Louise Shaw, violinist, of the Solomon School of Music, gave several lovely numbers.

The guest list included the members of the Macon Woman's Club, their friends, members of other organizations in the city and many prominent out-of-town guests. Although the clubhouse was formally opened with the reception in the evening, the house was open during the afternoon for those who wished to drop in informally. Acting as hostesses in the afternoon were Mrs. Joe Waxelbaum, Mrs. Max Lazarus, Mrs. Leonard McManus, Jr., Mrs. Bruce McDaniel, Mrs. H. W. Goodman. Musical selections were given by John Henderson, a Mercer student, who sang; John Minter, violinist, and Miss Katherine Cowan, pianist.

Arrangements for the reception were made by Mesdames Lewis Waxelbaum, T. G. Tarver, C. C. Boterweg, T. S. Lowry, C. L. Tinsley, Richard Cowan, E. Ullman, W. D. Lamar, and Randolph Jaques, Jr. Mrs. Randolph Jaques decorated the clubhouse for the occasion.

The work of rebuilding the clubhouse has been in the hands of Mrs. T. G. Tarver, clubhouse chairman; Mesdames W. D. Lamar and Harry Pape. Beautification of the interior and the entire furnishings have been chosen by Mesdames R. L. Halliburton, T. S. Lowry and Ralph Small.

The membership of this club has shown a decided increase under the leadership of Mrs. Samuel Taylor Coleman. Mrs. Ralph Small assisted with the decorating of the clubhouse and also gave an exquisite tapestry which is hung in one of the rooms.

Willacoochee Club Federated in 1922.

Willacoochee Woman's Club federated in 1922 and began the year's work with an enrollment of 34 members. The membership is divided into five departments with a chairman in charge of each. These departments are, viz.: Music, education, home economics, civics and entertainment and amusement. At the first meeting a complete program for each meeting of the year was read and adopted by the club, this program having been prepared by a program committee.

September featured the president's meeting with plans for the year's work made and other business attended to; October, "A Good Citizenship Meeting," Mrs. H. T. Corbett in charge; November, report of the district convention by delegates; December, the civic department in charge of program, Mrs. Will Lee, chairman; January, educational department to have program, Miss Miami Paulk, chairman; February, "home and garden" program, Mrs. Leola Oberry in charge; March, a social event, the department of entertainment and amusement in charge, with Mrs. O. L. Hammock, chairman; April, home economics, Mrs. Lige Corbett to have charge of program, and May, business and election of officers.

Three hostesses were appointed to serve at each meeting and have charge of the social hour, which is always an enjoyable occasion. At the first meeting a report from each department chairman was read as to plans for the year's work. Civics department reported plans to paint the fence of our public park and to whitewash all trees along our main streets and highway; observe and foster a clean-up week in our city; clean up and remove all trash and rubbish from any public place and vacant lots. The entertainment and amusement committee read the following report: Sponsor the cook's show for benefit of club; observe Thanksgiving and Prosperity Week; have a local talent play during Christmas holidays, and have a silver tea in the spring of next year. The home economics department plans to have charge of one program; will sponsor a class in instructive home economics and will serve at each public meeting when the club entertains. Music department will furnish several musical numbers for each monthly meeting of the club; will have charge of community singing, and the educational committee will have charge of one program and put on a local talent play, proceeds of which will go for a curtain in the school auditorium.

Officers are as follows: President, Mrs. E. L. Moore; vice president, Mrs. G. F. McCranie; treasurer, Mrs. L. H. Shellhouse; secretary, Mrs. H. T. Corbett; parliamentarian, Mrs. B. T. Shaw, and press reporter, Mrs. J. F. Wilcox.

Macon Woman's Club Hears Chairmen.

Macon Woman's Club held its October meeting in the Macon Gas Company club rooms for the initial meeting and Mrs. L. I. Waxelbaum, president, presided. Reports from the clubhouse chairman, Mrs. T. G. Tarver, and Mrs. Thomas Lowry, Jr., interior decorating chairman, were enthusiastically received. Mrs. Lowry congratulated the club on having Mrs. Ralph Small, Mrs. Eugene Burden and Miss Linda Lowe as consulting members of the committee. Mrs. Waxelbaum talked of Mayor Toole's co-operation and of Mrs. W. O. Kinney's help and interest in securing the Baconfield home for a clubhouse.

The club voted to organize a sewing club to meet once a week at the clubhouse to sew for the poor and needy of the city. The club will sponsor the sale of tickets for the Avon players who will present "The Merchant of Venice" and "Romeo and Juliet" on the 20th and 21st of this month. Classes will be held in the spring under the state department of home economics.

Mrs. Charles Harrold had charge of the program for the month and her subject was health. She introduced Mrs. C. C. Hinton who spoke on "The Progress of Health." M

THE CONSTITUTION'S PARENT-TEACHER PAGE

Edited by MAINER LEE TOLER

OFFICERS OF ATLANTA PARENT-TEACHERS COUNCIL—Mrs. Robert P. Cheshire, president; Mrs. J. O. Parmele, first vice president; Mrs. F. T. Bridges, second vice president; Mrs. A. A. Williams, recording secretary; Mrs. H. M. Simpson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Byron Mathews, treasurer.

Prominent Speakers and Reports Feature P.-T. A. Council Meeting

Interesting and instructive speeches, forum chairmen reports and transaction of new business featured the meeting of the Atlanta P.-T. A. council last Wednesday, over which Mrs. R. P. Cheshire, president, presided. The monthly bulletin that is being edited by Mrs. Hugo Provano, publicity chairman, was given in the first edition to the associations that have paid the fee of $2 yearly, to make the publication possible. The bulletin is planned to keep the respective associations and the council in close touch with the work of the council and the school P.-T. A.s that are featuring anything unusual. The bulletin contains no paid advertising.

Lieutenant Jack Malcolm, of the city traffic department, spoke on what the mothers of Atlanta can do to aid the traffic department. He stated that during the past summer there had been less traffic violation than there is today after the fall opening of the city schools, with mothers double parking at scools, blocking street traffic and risking the lives of their children by calling to them to cross streets at random, because, said the officer, "such mothers are too lazy to leave their cars and cross the street to get their children."

The speaker urged the council to have its P.-T. A. presidents put on safety programs, and to talk safety. Facts and figures, said Lieutenant Malcolm, showed that up to the first of the current month there have been 2,236 auto accidents in Atlanta; 910 injured, 37 dead, with 4 persons killed the past month. As "safety" is one of the objectives of the council for the year, Mrs. Cheshire gave the speaker ample time in which to gain the support of the council in bringing the traffic problem closer to the P.-T. A. of Atlanta.

Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs spoke on "The Peace Conference." Mrs. Jacobs asked if there could be any use of training children or improving the race, if a World War can again occur?

It was announced that Mrs. R. R. Ritchie, chairman of the reading forum, has received from the national congress just recognition of her work in promoting reading for the children of Atlanta's schools. An article on Mrs. Ritchie's work is featured in the last issue of Child Welfare Magazine, it was stated.

Reports of Chairmen.

Mrs. Gaston Haskins, juvenile protection chairman, stated that the need of enforcement of the law regulating the sale of papers on the streets of Atlanta by children had been stressed in a letter that was read from the council to the city council of Atlanta. Mrs. Haskins said that in case of it being necessary for a child to be an earner the parents might secure a permit from the city that would permit the child to sell papers, but even the necessity of children doing the work at all was deplored.

For the protection of youths, Mrs. Paul Wilkin made a motion that the police department provide a different way to send children and the youths of the city to the juvenile detention home rather than in the police patrol.

J. P. Barron, a Junior High principal, made a motion that a protest be made to the sheriff against sending youthful persons from the tower to the courthouse in some other manner than by chaining them to, in many cases, criminals.

Mrs. John Lloyd, motion picture chairman, announced a joint meeting to be held with the juvenile protection committee, at Rich's schoolroom, Tuesday at 10 o'clock. Mrs. Lloyd urged mothers to know what their children are seeing in motion pictures. She said that the motion picture department of the P.-T. A. of Georgia is working to get a law before the state legislature to control the attendance of children upon motion pictures.

It was reported for the health chairman, Mrs. M. T. Edgerton, Jr., that on November 19 President Hoover will give a radio talk during the national conference on child health. Locally, it was said that a survey is being made on child health conditions, with 700 visits to homes to be made.

Mrs. H. G. Parks was present at Thursday's meeting after an illness. Dates of council forum meetings for the week, said Mrs. Cheshire, will be made in the daily press, and Mrs. Parks urged that a state publicity be read for information on the new plan of having P.-T. A. record books rather than the past custom of having scrapbooks.

Magazine Chaiman Calls Meeting.

Mrs. Frank Shumate, magazine chairman for the Atlanta Council of Parents and Teachers, calls a meeting for next Wednesday at 10 o'clock in Rich's conference room. This is the last meeting of this department until the spring and a full attendance is urged.

John B. Gordon Features Health Program at Meeting

John B. Gordon P.-T. A. met Wednesday afternoon in the school auditorium. The speaker first introduced by the health chairman, Mrs. F. H. Ginn, was Mrs. M. T. Edgerton, who gave an interesting talk on health. The second speaker introduced was Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, who spoke in the interest of the Community Chest.

Mrs. Z. V. Peterson urged the mothers to take advantage of the nurse class lessons which are being taught every Friday afternoon at the school by Miss Willie Mae Brooks. It was also announced that a skin specialist would be present in the health department, city hall, for the benefit of those interested.

The grade chairmen called a meeting of their mothers immediately after the meeting adjourned to discuss grade problems. The mothers count gave the prize to Miss Asbell's class. Mrs. T. W. Hinton drew the mother's prize.

Alonzo Richardson Plans Numerous Activities for Year

Alonzo Richardson P.-T. A. met Monday afternoon in the school auditorium with the president, Mrs. Winton Thomas, presiding. After a short program featuring Kathleen Brannen in a reading and John Oliver in two book reports, Mrs. J. D. Conley introduced the speaker of the afternoon, Mrs. A. B. Brown, editor of the children's page of the Christian Index. Mrs. Brown gave a talk on "Children's Reading."

Plans for equipping the lunch room were discussed.

It was decided to have a Thanksgiving carnival November 21.

Plans are being made to hold a daddies' meeting in December. The grade prize for the most mothers present was won by Mrs. Carter's room, 7-4.

"School and Every Day Living" Subject Of Talk Given to Decatur High P.-T. A.

"The School and Everyday Living" was the subject of the address of Miss Maggie Solomon, principal of Formwalt school in Atlanta, who spoke to the Decatur Senior High School P.-T. A. at its meeting held in the school auditorium last Wednesday afternoon which was presided over by Mrs. Eliza Earthman, president. A feature of the meeting was the 15-minute period of sectional conferences. Dr. W. S. Elkin, Jr., spoke in behalf of the Community Chest campaign. Mrs. C. E. Pattillo presented the appeal of the local Red Cross chapter for clothing for the unfortunate poor of the county. Mrs. Max Flynt announced that the membership has reached 154. Mrs. E. L. Gardner outlined the budget for the year and told of plans for a benefit bridge to be given at the Woman's Club Friday, November 14, at 10:30 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. Mrs. A. D. McLennan requested recruits for the association basketball team and praised the work of the school football team. There were several other reports, including Mrs. Eliza Earthman's statement that Mrs. A. G. Barnett has been appointed chairman of delegates; Mrs. J. H. McKinley, better films; Mrs. J. H. Owens, publications, and Mrs. R. S. Sloan, scrapbook.

Members were urged to attend the study class conducted by Mrs. John Ridley at Junior High school on the Thursday before each third Wednesday at 10:30 o'clock, it being necessary for 10 per cent of the membership to participate in order to receive desired credit.

The musical program consisted of "America the Beautiful" by the audience, led by Miss Ruby Head, of the high school faculty, accompanied by Mrs. J. W. Stipe; a musical reading, "Bill," from "Showboat," by Miss Willie Boyce Hapholdt, accompanied by Lanier Bishop, and "When the Organ Played at Twilight," by Mrs. C. L. Danforth, to piano accompaniment of Mrs. R. D. Hobby.

Mrs. W. J. Thebaut read the president's message and announced that the December meeting will be held in conjunction with that of the Decatur Junior High School P.-T. A., on the evening of December 6, this to be a Fathers' Night observance.

The beautiful picture recently purchased by the P.-T. A. was awarded to Miss Minnie Barrett's room for having the largest percentage of mothers at the meeting, which picture is to be retained at the end of the year by the room having maintained the largest attendance throughout the year.

State Publicity Chairman Gives Important Information in Article

Mrs. H. G. Parks, head of the publicity department for the Georgia Congress, Parents and Teachers, writes of the work of this committee in the following article:

"Many interesting and worthwhile items are coming into the state publicity office from over the state and will in due time be given publicity. The publicity chairman appreciates this splendid co-operation and urges its continuance. Send accounts of local meetings to local papers only and for statewide publicity a copy should be sent the state publicity office, 329 Sutherland terrace, N. E., Atlanta. The publicity department of the Georgia congress is planning a surprise for the state convention in the spring and will have on file for public inspection all articles sent in during the year and many other releases which will show how the publicity committee carries on, the authenticity of every article released and the many channels from which comes the information disseminated. Only the associations following the suggestions above will be included in the exhibit.

The following information from the national publicity division is important to all associations and should be clipped and filed: Publicity scrapbooks have changed their names to "Publicity Record Books." It has been felt that the name scrapbook invited the use of material which did not pertain to the work of the publicity chairman. The local publicity chairman must place in their publicity record book only the work of the publicity committee. The following are legitimate clippings of news items obtained through the efforts of the publicity chairman; published protographs; notices of meetings sent to parents; copies of posters used to advertise meetings and made by or under the direction of the publicity chairman; radio talks with notation as to date given.

The following do not belong in a publicity record book: Lists of officers, teachers, etc., unless contained in news item given by publicity chairman; news about school grounds, graduation exercises; pictures of officers, teachers, school children or buildings, unless printed in connection with news items sent in by publicity chairman. Samples of children's work. History of the association, unless definitely a project of the publicity committee; ornate decorations.

There will be no rating of publicity record books by the national, as was formerly done with the scrapbooks. Instead the books are to be studied and classified, according to type of association and other feature, such as high school association, excellent inside publicity, examples of good writeups of committee activities. A publicity exhibit committee will replace the scrapbook rating committee in the national congress. Eight publicity record books will be allowed from each state, the state to devise their own means of selecting the required number of books.

State Notes.

Mrs. Byron H. Mathews, radio chairman for the state congress, and Mrs. George Slappy, chairmen of children's reading for the fifth district, will sponsor a joint program during "Better Book Week," when they will present Mrs. John W. Neal, of Marshallville, Ga., over WSB on the evenings of November 11, 12 and 13 at the children's hour from 4:30 to 5 o'clock. Mrs. Neal is a children's entertainer of national note, appearing every summer on programs of Chatauqua Institute, New York. Parent-Teacher members all over Georgia whose children listen in on this program are asked to send a post card to Mrs. Byron Mathews, 946 Virginia avenue, N. E., Atlanta, stating that they heard Mrs. Neal.

Kirkwood association has sent dues to the state treasurer for 1,000 members. This is the largest association on the state books to date.

Marlow Consolidated High School Association, organized recently, has sent 10 subscriptions to the Georgia Parent-Teacher, a fine start for a new association.

Ways Station Consolidated school in the first district organized a P.-T. A. the past week with Mrs. G. L. Tucker as president.

Chatham County Council in Savannah, Mrs. Lee Howard, president, sponsored a parent-teacher educational exhibit, displaying posters, literature, the Child Welfare Magazine and the Georgia Bulletin at the Georgia State fair in Savannah last week. Each affiliated association furnished its quota of representatives to be on duty certain days to answer questions and give parent-teacher information.

The seventh district Congress of Parents and Teachers will have a publicity school on November 13 in Rome, Mrs. Charles Moore, publicity chairman of the district, is making extensive plans for an all-day session. The state publicity chairman will conduct the school, assisted by Mrs. Moore and the society editor of the Rome News-Tribune.

The Atlanta Council, through its publicity manager, Mrs. H. A. Provano, is planning a publicity morning session on November 11, when the state publicity chairman will tell how to write P.-T. A. news and the P.-T. A. editors of the Atlanta papers will give the professional viewpoint. The state publicity chairman is urging every district to put on a publicity school and offers her services when desired, if a two-week notice is given.

National Notes.

The first Friday of each month at 4:45 p. m., central standard time, Mrs. Walter H. Buhlig, associate editor of Child Welfare Magazine, will broadcast stories of parent-teacher activities in local, council and state associations over station WMAQ.

Mrs. Hugh Bradford, president of the national congress, will represent the congress at the biennial conference of the National Council of Parent Education in Washington, D. C., November 15, 17 and 18. Mrs. Bradford will also represent the national congress at the White House conference on child health and protection on November 19. President Hoover's address to the White House conference on November 19 will be broadcasted at 9 p. m., eastern standard time, on that date over a nationwide hookup. Parent-Teacher meetings are arranged in many sections of the nation to hear President Hoover tell what his conference is accomplishing and hopes to accomplish for child welfare. This will be the first opportunity the entire membership of the organization of parents and teachers may join in service to the conference, and the national congress is asking that communities organize to listen in and then report to them what was done in each respective community.

Motion Picture Group To Meet.

The motion picture committee of the Atlanta Council of Parents and Teachers meet Tuesday, November 11, at 10 o'clock in Rich's school room.

Jerome Jones Holds Meeting For Fathers

Jerome Jones, P.-T. A.'s first daddies' meeting was held last Tuesday evening with the president, Mrs. M. P. Estes, presiding. Every grade was well represented. The president announced a class in parental education to begin at 1:30 o'clock on the day of the P.-T. A. meeting, which is the first Tuesday in December. She urged the mothers to be present. A report was sent by Mrs. J. A. Harper, finance chairman, in regard to the womanless wedding sponsored by the P.-T. A. with Mrs. Harper, chairman; Mrs. Sears and Mrs. DeLoach, co-chairmen. The characters in the wedding were daddies and gentlemen interested in Jerome Jones school. The profit from this entertainment was $60. A motion was made to buy shrubbery for the school with the money. The entertainment for the evening was a play given by the fifth grade and several selections by "the Lay brothers' quartet, assisted at the piano by their mother, Mrs. Lay. Dr. McIntosh Burns gave an interesting talk. Refreshments were served in the assembly room by the mothers of the P. T. A. Mrs. Lou Ellen Shackelford, fifth grade, won the attendance prize.

Tenth Street Chairmen Make Splendid Reports

Tenth Street School P.-T. A. met Tuesday with the president, Mrs. J. A. Beall, presiding. Mrs. Homer Turner, magazine chairman, gave an interesting talk on "Child Welfare," the official publication of the National Parent-Teacher Association. She related incidents to show that this magazine is of real practical value in the training of children and spoke so convincingly that at the close of the meeting 34 mothers subscribed for the magazine. Mrs. Sidney Greene, membership chairman, gave an encouraging report. Two rooms are already 100 per cent and several others have nearly reached the 100 mark. Mrs. R. W. Nelson, moving picture chairman, stated that the manager of the Tenth Street theater will co-operate with the committee by putting on pictures suitable for children on Saturdays. Mrs. J. A. Beall introduced the following new chairmen: Mrs. H. G. Smith, general grade, and Mrs. Horace Rhorer, citizenship.

Announcement was made that the food books had been purchased for every grade in the school and distributed. Tenth Street is one of the first schools to attain this goal. Mrs. J. A. Beall introduced Dr. Ralph E. Wager, of Emory University, who gave an interesting and instructive address on "Parental Education." He stressed the fact that a child grows physically, intellectually, socially and emotionally, and that we should so adjust the affairs of the home and school to the life of the child, that the child may have an opportunity to develop naturally and normally in every way.

Observance of Education Week Urged by State President

Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, president of the Georgia Congress, Parents and Teachers:

American Education Week, November 10-16, is just around the corner. The Congress of Parents and Teachers is vitally interested in this observance, because it is an attempt to interpret and evaluate the program of education. Local associations are requested, in co-operation with the school administrators, to hold this celebration. To leave this to the schools alone is unfair and unwise. Educators are recognizing more fully every day that education is not only of the schools, but of all of life, and that the interested parents supporting the educational program represent new force in education. To participate fully with them in the next weeks is wise observance.

Concentration on dental examination of school children is the immediate program and project of Dr. M. L. Duggan, state school superintendent; Dr. Harry Johnson, director for the State Dental Society; Dr. J. P. Bowdoin, of the state board of health, and Mrs. H. S. Alden, first vice president of the P.-T. A. This is Georgia's opportunity to do an outstanding piece of health work and to set an example for the nation.

Dues Requested.

Associations are again urged to send in dues at once to the treasurer and so become a part of the November honor roll.

A daddies' meeting at Hartwell Friday night revealed a fine co-operation of parents and teachers in that section of the state. The program of the Hart and Franklin county council and the unusual number of women who came by school bus from the various schools bespoke a high degree of development in Parent-Teacher activities. "We are proud of the intelligent and excellent service being rendered by the Parent-Teacher groups of our county," said Superintendent G. G. Manghon in reference to the organization.

Thrift Project.

The thrift project, liquidation of the Food Book obligation, continues in progress, and associations are urged to make reports at the earliest possible date.

The honor roll for October includes the following associations: Atlanta: Davis Street, Inman Park, Jerome Jones, J. L. Key Pre-school, Kirkwood; Alston, Pridgen, Bellville, Augusta Lambdin, Sonoraville, Montgomery, Beallwood, Nankipooh, Cornelia, Davisboro, Oakhurst, Oakhurst Pre-school, Demorest, Smith High, Dudley, Fulton High, Harris Street, Humphries, Lakewood, Longino, Marion Smith, Morgan, North Avenue, Russell High, Farmington, Graves; Griffin: Vineyard, Guyton, Hollywood, Eagle Grove, Leslie, Unity, Morris Station, Church Street High, Monroe, McDonough, Morgan, Ocilla, Pineview; Rome: East, South, West; Savannah: 49th Street, Senior High, Waters Avenue, White Bluff, Sale City, Smyrna, Swainsboro, The Rock, Valdosta, Washington; Waycross: Crawford Street, Junior High, Morton Avenue, Waynesboro, Woodbine, West Point, and Unadilla.

Spring St. President Tells of Budget System Adopted by Organization

"If you wish peace of mind and if you wish to get 100 cents out of every dollar, run your P.-T. A. on a budget basis," stated Mrs. E. F. Yancey, president of the Spring Street Association. When asked how she had budgeted the income of the P.-T. A. for the school year before less than half had paid their dues of $1 a year, the president replied with all the assurance of a businessman: "We anticipated the amount that we would have to budget." This was easily done, she explained, as the experience of ten years or more had given the directors of the association a clear idea of how much would be paid in on membership; on the sale of old papers and magazines; on milk sold to the pupils; also the income from the yearly May festival.

Illustrating her point, Mrs. Yancey stated that the sum of $50 has been spent this year for books on parental education that now grace a shelf in the school library. "Following the budget," she said, "the money had been spent for books by the chairman of parental education, Mrs. Frank Allcorn, assisted by Mrs. I. C. Humphries, preschool chairman, and Mrs. Frank J. Henry. Those women knew that $50 was their limit," said Mrs. Yancey, "and they did not go over the amount." The fact that only so much money had been budgeted for the school yard chairman, Mrs. D. R. Peteet, and so much and no more to be spent on teachers' luncheons by Mrs. Arthur Flowers, chairman, seemed somewhat out of the ordinary running of organizations, when it is well known that most money is spent in P.-T. A.'s according to the good judgment of the directors rather than to the cold and unbreakable rules of a well-planned budget.

A telling point made by Mrs. Yancey was that any member of the Spring Street P.-T. A. may ask her at any time what the sum may be for a certain work of the association and the information will be given accurately and in that tone of finality that real budgets have.

It may be said that in serving her first year as president, Mrs. Yancey is giving to her office her experience gained as a grade chairman, milk chairman, paper sales chairman and at all times on the directorate. She feels that offices in any P.-T. A. should be progressive. First minor chairmanships and then on up to major responsibilities until when the time comes that a true and tried worker is called to the presidency, she knows the work because she has done it.

"With trained leaders and with well balanced budgets," any school P.-T. A. will move along with all the joy and smoothness of any well organized home," concluded the Spring Street president.

Citizenship Group Meets Thursday.

Citizenship chairmen of the Atlanta P.-T. A. council meet in Rich's schoolroom Thursday, November 13, at 10 o'clock. Mrs. R. L. Turman, fifth district P.-T. A. chairman of citizenship, will discuss "Steps in Voting." All citizenship chairmen of the fifth district are invited and all Atlanta P.-T. A.'s are requested to have a representative at this meeting.

E. Rivers Daddies' Meeting Announced.

E. Rivers P.-T. A. holds its daddies' meeting Friday night, November 14. A special program has been planned to be followed by a social hour. Dr. N. R. High Moor will speak on "The Formation of Habits." Every parent in the community is invited.

E. Rivers P.-T. A. has completed two months of intensive work. Reports from the library committee, Mrs. Joseph Winship, chairman, show over 1,200 volumes received in the book drive, besides donations of money. Supplementary readers have been given to the lower grades; also a set of "Bookhouse" placed in the general library; 150 school books have been given to the athletic committee, Mrs. George Sciples, chairman, purchased balls costing $77.33 for use on the playground. Fine arts committee, Mrs. M. T. LaHatte, sponsored an art exhibit, the proceeds being spent for pictures for the school.

The family welfare committee, Mrs. A. G. Maxwell, chairman, has visited needy families in the community and clothes and food have been given where needed. Hot lunches have been given to 25 children each school day.

Mrs. Elton Chapman, chairman of parental education, has an interesting course of study planned and a large group of mothers will attend this meeting on the fourth Tuesday morning at 10:15 o'clock.

Bolton Chairmen Make Reports.

Bolton P.-T. A. met recently in the primary rooms. Mrs. W. T. Whitaker presided. Splendid reports from all chairmen were given. The P.-T. A. has taken the lunch room for every Monday and will serve lunches to children the entire school term on that day. The safety chairman reported a safety council at school, well organized and doing good work. Grade mothers were thanked for first aid kits and teachers reported kits already in use. The fifth and sixth grades gave a playlet on safety. The next meeting will be a "daddies' night" to be held the second Friday night in November. The fifth grade won both dollars.

Pryor Street Reports Meeting.

Pryor Street School P.-T. A. met Tuesday with Mrs. E. N. Jones, presiding. R. L. Ramsey spoke on citizenship. Mrs. L. Croaker spoke on the value of the parental education, urging the mothers to attend the classes at the school. Miss Dorothy Orr spoke on the improvement made in the school this year, thanking the P.-T. A. for its co-operation. Much needy work is being done for the children including providing clothes and taking them to the dentist, etc. Various committees reported splendid results. Mrs. June C. Dennard, program chairman, sponsored a program with the children of the school taking part.

Luckie P.-T. A. Hears Mr. Coleman.

M. E. Coleman talked on parental education at the Luckie Street School P.-T. A. meeting Tuesday and Miss Mildred Manson spoke on health. The talks of both speakers were interesting and instructive. Mrs. Thomas, principal, introduced Mrs. Laird, new low-3 teacher, who was welcomed to the association. The mothers were urged to take more interest in the parental group for child study and to attend the meetings each month. The count of mothers gave the upper grade prize to Miss Cockrell and the lower to Mrs. Green.

Professor F. A. Moss, a former faculty member of the Georgia State Woman's College, has published a book entitled, "Application of Psychology."

Miss Elizabeth McRee, of the physical education department of G. S. W. C., in chapel Wednesday made the first of a series of talks on Europe, which will be given by faculty members who spent the summer abroad.

The annual firelighting ceremony was held at G. S. W. C. Sunday evening in the rotunda of Ashley Hall. The ceremony was sponsored by the Y. W. C. A. and was held to usher in the winter season. The invitation was extended to Miss Annie P. Hopper, dean of women. The fires were significant of fellowship and were lighted by the student government association president, Miss Margaret Sumner, of Pelham. Each organization on the campus contributed representative qualities to the fires.

Thursday night vesper service was held in the rotunda of Ashley Hall. Miss Kathryn Wall, of Americus, led the devotional, and a talk, "The Peaceful Life," was made by Miss Nancy Rowland, of Wrightsville.

The first games of the volley ball and American ball series, between the Phi Lambda and Phi Kappa athletic associations, were played on the college athletic field Friday afternoon. The volley ball game was won by the Kappas, with a score of 51 to 7. The girls playing on the Lambda team were Misses Helen Brasington, captain, of Waycross; Lucius Bedell, Woodbine; Ila Poppell, Homerville; Margaret Littlefield, Folkston; Blanche Parker, Sylvania; Louise Jackson, Valdosta; Jewel Wurst, Ochlocknee; Sara Nicholson, Amsterdam; Margaret Kennedy, Dawson; Elizabeth Thompson, Ochlocknee, and Martha Horton, Rome. The girls who played on the Kappa volley ball team were: Carolyn Readdick, captain, Folkston; Joyce Roberson, Jesup; LaVerne Adams, Coolidge; Beatrice Willis, Quitman; Elsie Quarterman, Valdosta; Virginia Clarke, Tampa, Fla.; Mildred Morris, Brinson; Sara McEachin, Lakeland; Lillian Hopper, Lucedale, Miss., and Modesta Dukes, Coolidge.

The American ball game was won by the Phi Kappa team, the girls on the team were Misses Grace Chastain, captain, of Thomasville; Ernestine Baker, Pavo; Margaret Brabham, Moultrie; Ruth Dozier, Morven; Ruby McSwain, Vidalia; Winona Patterson, Alamo; Carolyn Smith, Albany; Katherine Stovall, Bainbridge; Gussie O'Quinn, Jesup. Those playing on the Lambda American ball team were: Misses Louise Manley, captain, Barwick; Helen Bishop, Unadilla; Margaret Bullock, Adel; Willene Roberts, Valdosta; Sara Emily Ward, Rome; Florence Powell, Griffin; Marguerite Powell, Griffin; Cleo Griffin, Ochlocknee; Sara Wadley, Waycross, and Myrtle Varner, Sasser.

Philharmonic Club met in the rotunda, Monday evening with Miss Carolyn Bullard, of Nashville, in charge. "Crescendo," per Lessen, was played by Lillian Henderson, of Manor, and David Dick Slater's "Nocturne" was played by Dorothy Crocker, of Valdosta.

tiveness of the production by their work on these scenes.

Ticket Chairman.

Miss Carolyn Nicolson is the chairman of the ticket sale. The tickets will be 50 cents each, all over the theater, and are on sale at Rich's, the Cable Piano Company, Mrs. Sanders' Specialty shop and the Buckhead theater on Thursday and Friday, and at the Buckhead theater on Saturday morning. The entire proceeds will go to the support of the Junior League ward in the Egleston Memorial hospital.

The performances of the Junior League marionettes are eagerly anticipated by youthful Atlanta and by the parents of youthful Atlanta. A number of parties are being arranged for this delightful and amusing production.

Screen Possibilities Of "Secret Fathers."

While Mildred Seydell's new novel, "Secret Fathers," is creating a furore in literary circles, the watchdogs of filmdom are not unmindful of its possibilities for screen purposes. Already the brilliant young author has been approached on the subject and though no contract has been signed, it is highly probable that there is one in the offing, and that the text is being carefully revised for its screen version.

Though some critics rank the feminine characters of "Secret Fathers" far above the masculine types in strength of characterization, Mrs. Seydell must find consolation in the fact that her publisher would not accept the novel until its male characters were somewhat sublimated in order to create greater contrast in portrayal of the person around whom the action revolves. In the critical and experienced mind of her advisor, Voria and Felicia appeared rather negative in comparison to Alex and Jean in their first setting. And while he was most enthusiastic over the plot and its dramatic situations, he returned the script to Mrs. Seydell with the instruction that it would be ready for publication when she had depleted to some extent the vigorous delineation of her male characters, since the story belongs essentially to its women characters.

Mr. and Mrs. Healey Sail for America.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Healey today are on the high seas, aboard the palatial S. S. Bremen, having sailed this past week from Le Havre, France, and will dock Tuesday morning, November 11, in New York city. Mrs. Healey before her marriage September 24 was Miss Cornelia Orme, and following their brilliant marriage Mr. and Mrs. Healey left for a six-week trip to Europe. The trip was the same as taken by Mr. and Mrs. William Healey, Jr., sister and brother of the bride and groom, when they married in June, 1929, Mrs. Healey having been the former Miss Callie Orme.

Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Healey will make their home at the present with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Orme, at their home on Valley road, until they take possession of their apartment on Peachtree road. After their return they will be entertained at a number of social affairs, as they were preceding their marriage.

Miss Paullin To Make Debut At Driving Club.

It is on Friday evening, November 14, at the Piedmont Driving Club that Dr. and Mrs. James Edgar Paullin entertain at a dance to introduce their only daughter, Miss Carolnie Paullin, to society. She is one of the most striking and distingue of this year's coterie of debutantes, her popularity being founded upon lasting qualities of sincerity as well as those of good looks. Miss Paullin inherits many of the uncommonly clever traits of her mother, the former Miss Edna Frederick, possessing the same keen sense of humor and that powerfully potent element of success—charm.

Adding another angle of interest to this debut dance is the fact that Miss Mary Vereen, of Moultrie, who toured Europe for five months last spring with Miss Paullin, and Miss Louise Dickinson, of New York city, schoolmates of next Friday's debutante at Mount Vernon Seminary, in Washington, D. C., will receive with her upon that auspicious evening when she makes her deep curtsy to society in the Driving Club ballroom. Invitation was extended Miss Sue Johnson, of Lynchburg, Va., to receive with Miss Paullin, but this erstwhile Atlantan is attending college and educational obligations prevented her acceptance thereof.

"Four Horsemen" Send Orchids.

Countless bouquets and baskets of flowers sent to Miss Laura Hoke upon the occasion of her debut party last Tuesday were testimonials of the popularity of this charming, gracious-mannered young girl. She elected to carry a gorgeous bouquet of orchids, the gift of a quartet of masculine admirers who style themselves "Laura Hoke's Four Horsemen," but the identity of "War," "Pestilence," "Famine" and "Death" is being kept a profound secret.

A pair of exquisite old-fashioned gold bracelets encircled her fair wrists, gifts of her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Z. D. Harrison, for whom Miss Hoke is named. This adoring grandmother was denied the privilege of participating in the joys and pleasures attendant upon the debut party because the strain would have proven too great a tax upon her strength, which has been none too robust in the past year. The bracelets were worn by Mrs. Harrison in her girlhood days, when, as Miss Laura Hendree, she reigned as a belle and beauty. She presented the bracelets upon November 4, the date which marked twin events in the life of her debutante granddaughter, her twenty-first birthday and her presentation to society by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Michael Hoke, at their Peachtree circle residence. Had she lent her gracious presence to the party there would have been three generations of "Lauras" to compete with the "Four Horsemen," the identity of the former being revealed in Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Hoke and Miss Hoke.

For generations the Hendrees, Harrisons and Hokes have given to society a stamp which is that of years of culture and position. Leaders in all that such inheritances impose of social consciousness and social graces, they have handed down a tradition of hospitality which was felt by every guest at the party. Pouring tea from an exquisitely appointed table in the dining room were Mesdames Russell Porter and Stephen Barnett, and assisting in entertaining were a galaxy of intimate friends of the debutante, Misses Hannah Sterne, Julia Meador, Elizabeth Spalding, Pauline Dallis, Augusta Porter, Caroline Paullin and Rachael Neeley.

Gen. MacArthur Given Spectacular Send-Off.

Came last week a letter from Mrs. William F. Pearson, posted from Fort Mills, on the island of Corregidor, termed by the United States army as the Gibraltar of the Pacific, because it guards Manila bay from the approach of the enemy. She related an incident in her epistle relative to the departure a month or more ago of General Arthur MacArthur, the handsome new chief of staff.

When he embarked at nightfall on the steamer, General Jackson, to sail for America, the ship followed the channel which carried it close enough for a salute to be fired from Fort Mills. One of the small steamers took its station out in the bay, and, as the steamer drew near, the band serenaded General MacArthur, and the powerful searchlights on the shore spotlighted the General Jackson around the coast, into the China sea. Another strong spotlight was trained upon Old Glory, illuminating the beloved flag in a most spectacular manner, making it visible for miles out at sea.

General MacArthur once lived in Atlanta and was exceedingly popular in civilian and military circles here. His mother, Mrs. Arthur MacArthur, a grande dame of the older generaton, will be the chatelaine for his residence in the national capital. His sister, Mrs. Arthur MacArthur, married her cousin with the same name as her brother, and lives in Kaloroma Heights, in Washington, D. C., in the old home which the first General MacArthur bought when he was stationed in Washington, a quarter of a century ago.

Mrs. Campbell Wore Her Hair Braided.

The visit of the internationally known author, Mrs. James E. Campbell, of London, England, to her sister, Mrs. Hinton Hopkins, at her Druid Hills residence, recalls the time when she acted as bridesmaid at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins, October 3, 1900, at a 6 o'clock ceremony in the Second Baptist church. She was dressed in pink organdy, carried a bouquet of pink carnations, and her blond hair was becomingly braided. Henry Porter, one of Atlanta's leading attorneys, was best man for Mr. Hopkins, and the bride, the former Miss Mary Ormond, was given in marriage by her uncle, Walter Root, of Kansas City, Kan. The lovely bride was gowned in white liberty satin and a white tulle veil, showed to perfection her rich coloring and golden hair. A court train, proverbial rose point lace, orange blossoms adjusting the filmy veil to her tresses, and a bouquet of valley lilies completed the bridal array. Miss Louise Hopkins was maid of honor and wore an accordion pleated pink chiffon gown and carried pink carnations.

Airplane Guests Arrive for Visit.

Guests have a habit nowadays of arriving by land, sea or air and it was this latter mode of travel selected by Mrs. Byron Stewert, of Aurora, Ill., who arrives this week to be the guest of Lieutenant Walter Scott Winn and Mrs. Winn at their quarters at Fort McPherson. Her companions on this trip as she flies swiftly southward will be William Saltzman, owner and pilot of the plane, and Emmett Lyons, of Lacrosse, Wis., who will also be the guests of Lieutenant Winn and Mrs. Winn for a brief visit before going to Florida for the winter months. Mrs. Stewert will remain for some time as a guest at the garrison and will be feted at a number of social affairs. The day of her arrival is not definitely known, for it is all involved with intricate things like weather conditions and low ceiling and such, but one day this week "June" and "Walter" Winn will be out at Candler field searching the skies for their anticipated guests.

Superintendent's Message

November 9, 1930.

My Dear Boys and Girls:

Next week we begin the drive for the Atlanta Community Chest. This organization raises the money to support the poor of our city and to develop the character building institutions for our boys and girls. A large part of this fund goes to care for those who are in distress, to see that every little child is provided with food and clothes and shelter and that every boy and girl whose parents are sick and out of work may be cared for and sent to school in comfortable clothes. A part of this fund is used to develop the Boy Scouts, the Camp Fire, the Girl Scouts and other organizations of this kind. Your mothers and fathers will be called upon to help and I sincerely trust that every boy and girl will make an honest effort to see if he and she cannot in some way influence gifts for the Community Chest.

At no period in Atlanta's history has this fund been more needed. If you can make a contribution of your own it would be deeply appreciated. Of course these contributions will not be made through the schools but others may call upon you and you can at least understand what the Community Chest is, what it is trying to do and in every way possible assist in these efforts.

Always your friend,

WILLIS A. SUTTON.

GORDON STUDENTS SEE OLD POTTERY OF BROWN FAMILY

High-6 children are now studying Argentina. We have finished our study of Brazil, which we enjoyed very much.

Low-5 is making colonial furniture and dressing dolls. We have joined the Nature Guardian Club and are going to do all we can to help our friends, the birds, trees, plants and animals.

High-4 has planted tulips on the yard. Some of the children have planted tulips at home and will have some for the flower show next spring. We have finished our Viking poster about King Harold.

Children of low 2-I are enjoying the "Early Cave Men," and making animals for their sand table. Quillian Mathers has been sick for several days and the children miss him so much. They will be glad to have him back in school again.

Low 1-II is making a farm like the one they visited on Boulder Crest drive. They made horses, sheep, pigs, cows, farmer's house, barn, chicken house silo, fence, wagon and wheelbarrow.

High kindergarten visited Brown,s Pottery on Pace's Ferry road. The potter's wheel and even where bowls are glazed were great sources of interest. The history of the Brown family shows that this is the fifth generation following the old art at the potter's wheel.

PUPILS OF TENTH EXHIBIT COPIES OF ART PICTURES

Every grade made Halloween tricks of every shape and kind, all in spooky yellow and black, for our friends in Alto. We mailed quite a large box to them, including the plates and napkins, for a luncheon.

We had our closing event of the art exhibit when our reproductions were displayed at the P.-T. A. meeting last Tuesday. We made a fine show for our young and ambitious artists.

Low 5-II has made a living picture of "The Water Carrier," which was presented in the auditorium. It was posed by Dorothy Cohoran and explained by Annie Laurie Kurtz.

Kathleen Huck, of low 5-I, won third prize in the chrysanthemum show. The class is very proud of her.

Low 4-I children went on an imaginary trip to Egypt, which they enjoyed very much.

Low 2 made Halloween favors. They have built and painted a library stand for their room.

High-1 had a Halloween party which many spooks and goblins attended.

Low and high kindergarten had a big Halloween party at school. Many children came in costumes.

ROGERS TOY.

GOLDSMITH PUPILS HAVE COOK BOOKS TO LEND MOTHERS

The children of Goldsmith school have been making money to buy our mothers of the P.-T. A. a cook-book. They sold tires, papers, and each grade had a time to sell candy and cake. Each grade bought a cook-book and some mothers made a bag to take it home in to keep it clean. Different children drew numbers and wrote their names by the number they drew. When time comes they take the cook-book home and the mother cooks something from one of the recipes in the book. Then she sends a sample of it to the grade and the children taste it.

The sixth grade enjoyed Miss Graves' visit very much. They had their athletic work in full swing.

Miss Graves complimented the 4th grade on its athletics and health work. Their room has a nice sand table.

Low-2 pupils have had good times in their garden. They have planted iris to bloom next spring.

The first grade dressed lollypops as Halloween dolls. They made an orange dress and hat. They sent Halloween booklets to the sick at the Grady hospital.

Kindergarten pupils have been dressing their room up. Each girl and boy helped.

KEY SCHOOL CLASS CONSTRUCTS MODEL OF BOONESBOROUGH

Low 6-I has the attendance banner and are proud of it. They have a tulip club chart which is very attractive. As soon as each child brings a note from his mother saying he has planted tulips, his name is put on the chart.

High 5 is building Boonesborough. The boys are making the cabins and forts; the girls are dressing the people.

A. W. Swann, of High 4, has made a Viking boat. The girls are making Viking dolls to go in the boat. Albion Golden is drawing a Viking border to go on the blackboard.

Low 4-II has organized a speakers' club. The officers are Sidney Norman, president; Mac Bishop, vice president, and Myrtle Veasey, secretary.

High 2 are making spelling books which they will decorate with original designs.

The children of Low 2-II are working hard on spelling and are improving in their classwork. They are proud of their class paper and are very grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Allen for writing it.

Low 1 had lots of fun at the Halloween carnival. They made $5.40 from their own attraction.

The ungraded class had a Halloween party Friday. They enjoyed it very much.

The kindergarten had a tooth brush party. Every child with perfect teeth was given a new tooth brush and shown the correct way to use it.

CALHOUN SCHOOL CLASS EXAMINES SAMPLES OF SILK

The first grade children are getting much pleasure out of cutting out pictures and pasting them in books they have made. They are going to send these books to the sick children in the hospitals.

The second grade pupils are interested in their garden. They are getting ready to plant some narcissus bulbs.

The low-4 pupils are doing some fine work in music. They are delighted to be able to read the notes of their songs. A visitor to this room would see many evidences that this class is studying Egypt. They have a big pyramid made of boxes, and on the board they have some Egyptian writing.

The high-4 children are preparing an imaginary radio program on health.

The bulb which the low 5 put out are growing fast. They hope to have some in bloom by Thanksgiving. This class enjoyed a visit to the Carnegie library on Monday. Miss Cox gave them a very instructive lesson.

The high-5 pupils are writing a play about Daniel Boone, which they are going to present to the upper grades in the assembly room. They are glad to have Otis Taylor back with them.

The low-6 pupils are very much interested in the study of silk. Emma Louise Keese brought some pretty samples of silk to school for them to study. They are also enjoying the study of knighthood. They are dramatizing some of the "knighthood ceremonies.

The high-6 is still working on bookmaking. They are writing to different publishers to get all the possible information on this subject.

ENGLISH AVENUE STUDENTS WRITE N. E. A. DELEGATES

English Avenue school was delighted to have as guests Miss Slocumb and Miss Pollard. We are always glad to have them visit us.

Our first class newspapers were published today. We are wondering who will have the best one.

Our classes have been having an interesting correspondence with people whom they have invited to attend the next meeting of the N. E. A. in California. Not only have they been sending letters but they have sent cotton.

Low 6-I are sending to Michigan a little hamper basket made by ungraded C. filled with cotton and bolls, pressed and mounted flowers, booklets and papers on cotton that the class secured from our state capitol.

High 5-II has written letters and sent cotton bloom and boll and Sutton dinner program to the superintendent of Detroit schools.

Low 2-II has an owl visiting them. They are planning to learn many interesting things about this wise bird.

High 3-I gave an interesting assembly program on Wednesday. The subject of the program was, "Summer Reading."

High 4-I is looking forward to their Mother Nature treasure box. They are collecting different kinds of seeds.

High 5-I gave a very interesting program on Daniel Boone Monday.

High 6-I is enjoying writing their class newspaper. Our editors have been appointed and the reporters are working hard.

High 6-2 is enjoying making a food chart.

Ungraded B are enjoying their aquarium and the new gold fish seem to be enjoying their new home.

LIZZIE YANCEY.

CLASS OF LUCKIE VISITS PET SHOP FOR STUDY BASIS

Luckie Street school is having an art exhibit this week from the Colonial Art Company. We are sure that the children will enjoy it very much.

In connection with their social science, High 1 went on a visit to Mr. Yancy's pet shop on Peachtree street. The children enjoyed seeing the pets. They came back and used the trip as a basis for their language work.

High 5 is building a stage coach out of beaver board.

High 4 took some flowers out of the yard and brought them into their room to try to keep them living through the winter.

High 6 pupils have made a food chart.

Low 5 is working hard to get 100 per cent in teeth. They have only one child who has not perfect teeth.

Low 2 has some very attractive health books. There is a picture of Bobby Jones on the cover and the golf idea is applied to all the health rules, with pictures drawn by the children, illustrating each habit.

HUBERT KNIGHT.

SMILLIE PUPILS HEAR POLICEMAN AT SAFETY RALLY

Smillie school held a safety rally Tuesday with the help of the P.-T. A. Lieutenant Malcolm spoke to the children on the subject of "Safety on the Streets."

The low first grade is learning a new song about the farmer.

The low second grade had a good time making Halloween hats and drawing witches. They learned a dance to one of their new songs.

The low fifth grade had a visit from Miss Dugas, who gave a most instructive talk about her western tour. She illustrated her talk with many beautiful pictures, which made all of us feel that we had been on a wonderful journey. The fifth grade narcissus bulbs are growing rapidly.

Hazel Hirsch entertained the low sixth grade with a Halloween party Friday afternoon and every one had a lovely time. The sixth grade pupils are striving to have a garden in each home.

GIRLS' HIGH HAS BALL TOURNAMENT

Basketball practice began during the week of November 3-7, in preparation for the tournament to be held next week. The seniors and sophomores practiced Monday and Wednesday afternoons, and the freshmen and juniors Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. The tournament will include three games—the senior-sophomore game, the freshman-junior game, and the final game to decide between the winners of the preceding games. The girls are working up much enthusiasm and a large crowd is expected to see the tournament. The practices this week have revealed much good playing, and the race will be a close one.

Margaret Ansley and Louise Feldman have been selected from the members of the debating club to represent Girls' High in the Girls' High-North Avenue Presbyterian school debate on November 14. The subject for debate is: "Resolved, that the immigration laws of the United States should be amended so as to restrict further the number of immigrants." This is the first debate Girls' High has had with North Avenue, and Girls' High students are looking forward to it with interest.

The Red Cross drive opened Monday, November 3, and Girls' High expects to go 100 per cent as is her custom.

This past week was the last in the first quarter, and a week of anxiety to many. Report cards must be taken home Monday to evoke praise or a scolding from expectant parents. It has been a busy week with girls making up work, or doing anything to gain credit with which to balance low marks. There are a few girls, however, who are sure of the fruits of labor, and only smile at the others' discomfort.

JOURNALIST SPEAKS TO CENTRAL CLASS

Journalists of Central Night school, L. P. Wilson's class, were given a very interesting talk at their class November 5 by Clenn Ramsey, prominent Atlanta newspaperman now connected with the Associated Press. "Bugs," as he is known to his many friends, is one of the best newspaper writers in the south.

Mr. Ramsey is the second newspaperman to tell his experiences to the class, and was highly received by the students. It is hoped that arrangements will be made to have other prominent newspapermen visit the school. At the present time there are some 20 to 30 students attending the period.

Rehearsals for the 1930 edition of the annual minstrel to be shown November 20 in the school auditorium are in full swing and ticket sale begins Monday.

The oral English play, "Safety First," will be produced December 2 at the school. Parts for this farce have been distributed, and rehearsals are now in progress.

The senior class has organized and elected Lewis Mozely president.

STANTON PUPIL RECEIVES AWARD AT FLOWER SHOW

Situated as we are on the highest point in Mozley park, from every window in our school these autumn days, we get a wonderful view. The sweetgum has every shade of yellow, red, orange and brown. The oaks and maples are almost as beautiful, while in between is the evergreen of the pine.

The whole school is very proud of Ivey Strickland of Low 6 grade who won the "runner-up" sweepstakes ribbon in the chrysanthemum show held at Lee Street school. Ivey entered one basket of large yellow and white flowers and one basket of beautiful bronze flowers.

Last week, Virginia Gabriel's letter in the Sunday American won the prize.

Forrestine Clecker brought the fifth grade a beautiful bowl and several bulbs to plant.

Fifth grade made candy pumpkin boxes for the soldiers for Halloween.

The High 1 pupils planted a dozen and a half narcissus bulbs in bowls and they have all sprouted.

The kindergarten has just received some new blocks and dolls.

VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

PEEPLES SCHOOL STUDENTS BUILD EGYPTIAN FRIEZE

Peeples Street school children had a hobgoblin racket parade Friday and every one had a good time.

Low 1-I had a trip to a farm and to the orphans' home.

Low 1-II has made quite an interesting farm. They have made a house and barn and many different kinds of animals for it.

High 1 has made a fruit stand. They made fruit for it Monday.

Low 2-I pupils are enjoying the book, "The Cave Twins."

Low 2-II children are interested in the study of cave men.

Low 3 won first prize in the candy pulling.

High 3 has made a Dutch mantle. They are trying to get their underweight children up to normal.

Low 4 children are making an Egyptian frieze.

High 4 pupils are interested in their book for "good book week."

Low 5 are making a frieze for "good book week."

High 5 children are 100 per cent in teeth. They are making a food chart.

MARGRET BRYAN,

SIXTH STUDENTS STUDY ASTRONOMY AT CAPITOL VIEW

Capital View School P.-T. A. had a candy pulling and party Halloween night. All sorts of witches, goblins and other Halloween characters were there.

"Tap," the terrapin, in High 1 lives now in a black pen.

Low 4 gave a play about the Indians and early Americans.

Low 5 has planted narcissus bulbs.

Low 6 has begun star study, and has been interested in the big and little dippers, and the Pole star. They have enjoyed especially the legends of some of the things that have happened in the sky.

Vikings Battle

Only Scrap Wood Is Needed To Make Useful Book Ends

(This is the first of a series of articles prepared by the national committee on wood utilization in its effort to bring about the utilization of second-hand wooden containers, such as boxes, crates and barrels, now thrown away or burned. More than 4,000,000,000 feet of lumber is used annually in making these containers. If suitable for construction purposes this lumber would build more than 400,000 average-size frame dwellings.)

Grocery, hardware, department stores and many other commercial establishments have a constant supply of second-hand wooden containers which they are usually glad to dispose of at little or no cost. Also, in many lumber yards one may secure odd pieces of lumber at lower cost than regular yard items.

Since the lumber needed to make the articles which will be described is all less than eight feet in length, no difficulty will be found in transporting it. In some cases it may be feasible for several boys to cart away the containers by wagonloads, as storekeepers frequently do not care to be bothered with handing out one or two containers at a time. In other instances the material may be carried in the car or on the running board.

Tools Needed.

If one desires a fairly complete outfit of tools, the following list will serve as a guide:

One claw hammer, 13-ounce; 1 screwdriver, 4-inch; 1 2-foot folding rule, 1 crosscut saw, 22-inch; 1 try and miter square, 6-inch; 2 chisels, 1-4 and 3-4-inch; 1 marking gage, 1 jack plane, 11½-inch; 1 ratchet brace, 8-inch sweep, 2 sugar bits, 3-8 and 3-4-inch; 1 oilstone, 1 jackknife.

Adjustable Book Ends.

To make these book ends secure:

Two pieces 9-16 by 5 by 5 1-4 inches for ends (A). One piece 9-16 by 5 1-4 by 18 inches for bottom (B) and (C).

Shape ends (A) as shown. Cut the other pieces to form (B) and (C) as shown. Then nail ends (A) to the wide ends of (B) and (C).

A 49-page booklet, with illustrations, entitled "You Can Make It for Camp and Cottage" can be obtained at 504 Postoffice building for 10 cents a copy.

FAITH STUDENTS REVIVE SPIRITS OF SEA PEOPLE

Low and high kindergarten enjoyed the living pictures and the art exhibit very much. We wish we could have the pleasure of seeing "The Children of the Shell" and "Where the Sun Goes" every day, as we liked those best of all.

Low 3 had a most unusual lesson on Friday, October 31. When the victrola played the weird music of "Danse Ma Cabre," the spirits of the early sea people came up out of their graves and held a reunion around the campfire. They told stories of their lives while on earth and ended by telling how they could improve their way of living if they could remain on earth.

Wednesday High 3 gave an interesting program on thrift. Everyone in the class took an interesting part.

High 4 is enjoying making up viking dances, songs and plays.

High 6 pupils have just returned from their "treasure hunt" in South America. They are planning a South American dinner party for Friday.

GREEN NOMINEES CARRY ELECTION AT O'KEEFE HIGH

A very exciting and enjoyable day was November 4 at O'Keefe. We held our annual presidential election. Ray Malone, on the Green ticket, was elected president and Cleve Boling, vice president, against Albert Jones for president and Albert Maynard for vice president on the White ticket.

Thursday night the Avon Players presented a play, "The Merchant of Venice," to O'Keefe's student body. We enjoyed this very much and hope they will come back soon to give us another one. Most of O'Keefe came to the performance.

The library is sponsoring O'Keefe's annual Book Week November 16-22. We hope this will be as big a success as it usually is.

O'Keefe's Panthers are leading the league. It looks like all of O'Keefe's football team is determined to win the championship. We are all back of them and hope they will win.

MADDOX STUDENTS ELECT OFFICERS FOR SCHOOL YEAR

The first election for president and vice president of the student body was held at Maddox Tuesday, November 4. The contest was between the Garnet and gold parties, the gold winning. The candidates for the garnet party were Cecil Wood for president and Mildred Pace for vice president. The candidates for the gold party were Wayne Whitten for president and Myrtice Martin for vice president.

We are very proud that our school has gone over the top on our "junk" sale. We have enough money in each class to buy a P.-T. A. cook book.

Tuesday afternoon Miss Mann, our home economics teacher in charge of the cafeteria, had a picnic for the girls who work at the lunch stand. Everybody had a good time eating and playing games.

SARAH BROWN.

KIRKWOOD SCHOOL STUDENTS BUILD INDIAN POTTERY

Halloween is over, but all classes enjoyed the little parties they had and now we are working hard for good reports.

High 1-1 planted some bulbs for Christmas.

High 2-2 have been studying the Puritans. They made some health booklets.

High 2-1 have made some Indian pottery and are ready to paint it.

High 3 made some health booklets in the shape of apples. They are studying the Dutch people.

Low 4-2 are having a spelling contest and the prize will be a party given by the side that loses.

High 4-2 have made a border of the "Land of the Midnight Sun."

High 4-3 are glad to have Laurette West back to their room again. She has been in the hospital on account of an operation.

The school is proud of Everett Brooks because he won third prize in the flower show.

High 5 are interested in the study of trees.

PUPILS OF FAIR FIX ROCK GARDEN IN SCHOOL YARD

The kindergarten and first grades enjoyed their Halloween parties.

High 2 won the attendance prize last week by having everybody present every day.

High 3 had seven class leaders last week. They were trying very hard to have all their work satisfactory.

Low 4 is studying Arabia. They are making an Arabian scene on their sand tables.

High 4 has a balanced aquarium. Charles Borocoff and Robert Erwin made an interesting talk on it at the assembly Friday.

Monteen Evans and Margaret Isrel were the High 5 class leaders last week and Ethel Bailey led Low 5.

Sixth grade pupils beginning work on a rock garden in the school yard. They are deciding on what plant life will thrive among rocks, and are studying the plants of a rock garden.

The children of Low 2 have planted numerous narcissus bulbs. They are watching every day to see how much they have grown.

GEORGIA AVENUE SCHOOL STUDENTS MAKE CORN CHART

Georgia Avenue school hopes that all its pupils will live up to Mr. Sutton's plea for good work this first quarter. We hope we are going to like the report cards we get so soon.

Low 6 is enjoying hearing "Master Skylark" read. It is written by a living author, John Bennett, of Charleston, and we are going to write him a letter about it.

High 5 is going to make poppy boxes for Armistice Day.

Low 5 is studying about corn and will make a chart on products of corn.

High 3 made penmanship books. They are working on a play by the name of "Kit and Kat Going Fishing."

High 2 is going to make a picture show about a story in their book.

Low 1 is sorry Miss Retsch is sick and hope she will be able to come back soon.

TECH HIGH ELECTS SCHOOL OFFICERS

Mike Welch was elected president and Buster Allen vice president of the student body on the independent ticket when Tech High school held its annual election last Monday. It was originally planned to have just two parties, the Purple and the Gold, but at the last minute an independent party was formed with Welch for president and Allen for vice president. They won by a majority of over 200 votes. This election was held in accordance with the rules of the national election, so as to give the students an idea how the president of the country is elected.

Ranking officers for the Smithy F. O. T. C. unit were recently appointed by the military department. Among those appointed were C. H. Freeman, cadet colonel; B. McGee, lieutenant colonel; J. Quinn, major first battalion; H. H. Daniels, captain personnel; S. Hamilton, captain Company A; L. A. Chambers, captain Company B; R. M. Bates, captain Company C; F. Lemming, captain Company D; O. M. Handage, captain Company E; J. Henderson, captain Company F, and W. C. Wooten, captain of Company G.

FULTON HIGH ACTORS GIVE WEEKLY PLAYS

The Fulton High Dramatic Club has been divided into four groups with the following members as group leaders: Pierce McDonald, Martha Carmichael, Blanch Reeves and Mary Smith. These groups, in turn, will present one-act plays every Friday at the regular meeting of the club.

The P.-T. A. will hold a daddies' meeting on Thursday evening, November 13. A large number are expected to be present and a very interesting program has been planned. This will be an opportunity for all the parents and teachers to meet.

The Writers' Club spent the time, during a recent meeting, examining some interesting old books and newspapers. They gained valuable information from the old writers which will help them in their work.

The Latin Club had as a speaker recently Mrs. J. T. Stillwell. She had as her subject, "The Use of Latin in English Spelling." She also held a Latin contest.

FORMWALT CLASS MAKES COLONIAL COVERED WAGONS

Low 6-1 hasn't had a tardy since school started.

Low 6-2 won the P.-T. A. prize for having more mothers at the P.-T. A. than any other class.

The boys of High 6 are making covered wagons like those that were used in colonial days. The girls are making pioneer dolls of wire and cotton and are dressing them.

High 2-1 has three new charts, a good work chart, and a P.-T. A. chart. They are certainly working hard to get their names on these charts.

High kindergarten boys and girls have a "Sutton Book." Each week they paste in it Mr. Sutton's letter, found on the school page in Sunday's paper.

Low kindergarten children were very happy to win a prize for having so many mothers at the P.-T. A.

ATTENDANCE PRIZE IS THEATER PARTY AT NORTH FULTON

In order to stimulate interest in attendance at North Fulton, the manager of the Buckhead theater gives a theater party to the class having the best record in attendance. Mr. Hutchinson's class has been the lucky class for the past two weeks.

The girls are delighted that Mrs. Goodpasture is now ready to help them with various athletic games. The boys' football team is making a splendid record under the direction of Mr. Hammack. They have played three games, won two and tied one.

Beautiful shrubs, winter grass and tulips are being planted by members of our P.-T. A. We enjoy and appreciate our beautiful campus.

The girls of the Home Economics Club served as pages at the benefit bridge given Friday at Rich's tea room by the Georgia Home Economics Association. The money received is to go into a scholarship loan fund.

PUPIL OF SPRING TAKES MINIATURE GARDEN TO CLASS

Low 6-1 is starting a very interesting book for good book week called "A Boy's Life of Abraham Lincoln."

Low 6-2 has enjoyed making a cathedral and rose window.

High 5 is building a plantation for the sand table.

Low 5 has a miniature garden which was brought by Charlotte Matthews. It is very pretty.

Low 4 has enjoyed scenes about desert life.

Low and High 3 had a lovely Halloween party in their room. They enjoyed making decorations and favors for the party.

HARRIS STUDENTS CHOOSE SUBJECTS FOR CLASS TALKS

The low-first children have just finished their health books. They are made in the shape of canoes.

Miss Walker brought the ungraded class a check for $20 because a boy in this class won a prize on a rug at the fair.

The high-fifth children have been reading a book called "Skip-Come-a-Lou." They are also starting their trip out west.

The low-sixth children have been enjoying the oral talks by the members of the class. They chose ther own subjects and each talk was very interesting. Most of the information for the talks came through interviews with their fathers.

OUR LEADERS ARE RIGHT.

The pledge issued to the country by responsible democratic leaders that the party action in the next congress, however the control may eventuate, will not be one of obstruction is wise and well-timed. The pledge accords fully with the policy that has been already strongly suggested by The Constitution.

As that great Georgia patriot, Ben Hill, so eloquently said: "He serves his party best who serves his country best." The democratic party has always held itself out as the party of the people and with its first devotion to the general welfare.

These democratic leaders, known to the people of the nation as eminent and responsible spokesmen of their party nationally, know that the democrats in the next congress, as in this one existing, can commend themselves to the confidence and support of the people in no better way than to staunchly advocate and co-operate with all measures that promise the actual recovery of the people's prosperities.

It is evident now that in the work of that recovery the republicans cannot play a solitaire game; they must have democratic co-operation, stripped of juggling alliances with insurgent republicans who never play fair with either republican or democratic allies. By supporting what is right and redeeming, no matter if proposed by President Hoover or his party leaders, the democrats will show both patriotism and statesmanship—qualities which always command the praise and favor of the rank and file of Americans. So we are sure the country will hail with approval this opportune democratic declaration.

How sanely it sounds can be realized by the threat of Senator Brookhart, bull insurgent, that he will vote with the democrats for control of the next senate—"provided they will adopt policies that he will approve!" That, of itself, should warn the true and faithful democrats to refuse any alliance or political trade with those western insurrectos. Since they are faithless to their own party they are as sure to be truce-breakers with the democrats. They were such in the last session; they would be such again.

The times call for something higher in principle than partisan expediency and the democrats are now pledged to patriotism rather than "political truck and trades." That is a great gain for the party and the people.

HEAD OFF THE LYNCHERS.

The appeal to the governors of 13 states of the south and near-south by the women of the commission on interracial co-operation, printed in the Wednesday issue of The Constitution, should draw the hearty co-operation of all those state executives.

The constitutions and laws of their states, which they are under solemn oaths to uphold and execute, pre-ordain just such action as these law-abiding, humane and representative women of the states most menaced by mob actions are asking.

Mob rule for an hour in any civilized community is absolutely indefensible. Lynchings for any cause in a government of laws, and not of men's passions, are plain and unpardonable murders. The chief magistrate of an American state can view them as no less and he is not fit to be a governor who does not adjure his people to decry lynching and to punish uncompromisingly the prepetrators of a public crime so dastardly and anarchistic.

No governor with a backbone stronger than an eel's and a heart with more courage than a rabbit's should let his constituents believe for a minute that he will allow lynchers to escape detection and prosecution to the last limit of a sovereign state's power.

There is scant doubt that a stern proclamation to that effect by the governor of a state would put the fear of God and the state into the craven hearts of most would-be mobbers.

It is the idea that their acts will be condoned by authorities that inspires such blood-thirsty spirits. A civilized public should back this latest and strong demand from a commendable source that lynching be made the most dangerous form of law-breaking.

PREPARE FOR PROSPERITY.

Harvey S. Firestone in the leading article in today's Constitution Magazine paints a picture of an era of abounding prosperity just round the corner which should be an inspiration to every businessman of the nation. Especially should it enhearten the commercial and financial leaders of this section.

Mr. Firestone's declaration is not in the nature of a prophecy. Based on incontrovertible facts, it is more of an inspired picture of inevitable future conditions.

Such a message from so pre-eminent a leader in the business and financial world carries conviction. As one of the unique and closely associated trio of creative and commercial geniuses composed of Edison, Ford and Firestone he has risen to his exalted position in the business world through inherent policies of soundness and conservatism.

In his article today he minces no words when he declares:

I do not know on what date national prosperity will return. I cannot even name the month in which there will be such a substantial upturn in business throughout the country that there will be national recognition of the return of "good times."

But this I do know: That we shall have in America, and beginning reasonably soon, an era of prosperity for the masses of our people eclipsing anything of the kind we have had before.

Is this mere hope, or conjecture, or baseless optimism?

Not at all!

It is simply sound reasoning based on experience; on knowledge of what has gone before during all the decades since our government came into being.

Therefore, continues Mr. Firestone, it behooves not only every business man, every industrialist and every wage earner and agriculturalist to begin pointing now for the inevitable era of "good times." By the rapidity with which they do will be governed the arrival of the predicted period of unprecedented prosperity for all classes of our citizens.

With American business trimmed of all unnecessary expenses and superfluous man-power, Mr. Firestone believes that the time is now ripe for the upward drive.

In epitomizing the facts upon which he bases his belief in the certainty of the early approach of the nation's greatest period of prosperity, this great American business leader says:

We are on the eve of a great period of prosperity, a higher standard of living throughout America, because the mental attitude of the people has changed. It is now one of confidence and determination. It is one of confidence because it is founded on the theory that hard work and sound thinking are the basis of prosperity.

Nevertheless, the fact is that the people of America could not possibly avoid prosperity very long, even if they made no attempt to capture it. The country possesses all the natural elements that actually insure prosperity. We have ample supplies of coal, of oil, of steel, of other useful minerals; of tillable, fertile soil sufficient to feed a much greater population. We have a climate which favors those who want to work; and we have a racial heritage rich in energy, initiative, enterprise, invention and determination to succeed.

The whole atmosphere of the business world has been changed and clarified. Throughout the nation men and women are putting into their work the energy and thought that built this country up from its rude beginning to its present foremost place among civilized nations.

The job of business men is to produce cheaper and better goods—and create new wants among the mass of people. But business men neglected that job during a considerable period before the 1929 market crash. Now the leaders of industry are back at their real job, with coats off, sleeves rolled up—and golf sticks and stock ticker pitched in a corner, gathering dust.

The south, having suffered less from the depression than any other section of the country, can be expected to react first to the era foreseen by Mr. Firestone. Being in the vanguard, it can be expected to reap more fully of its benefits.

Emphasizing this is the undeniable prospect that agriculture in this section is on the steady upturn. Pre-eminently an agricultural section, with its general prosperity largely dependent upon the wealth of its farming class, this certain forward surge of the south's agricultural interests gives further reason for belief that in the period of good times to come this section will lead the nation.

In Georgia the prosperity of our agriculturalists is all but assured by the recent discoveries that through the use of so-called "dry ice" perishable fruits and vegetables can be indefinitely preserved in their pristine condition of flavor and texture.

In no state east of the Rockies can these perishables be raised as advantageously as in Georgia—a guarantee of year-round profits to our fruit growers and truck gardeners if they take advantage of the opportunity presented. That their success will cause the growers of other agricultural products to keep pace cannot be doubted.

Atlanta as the hub of the south will be the focal point for the benefits which will derive from this record-breaking southern development and prosperity.

With such a prospect no sane or sensible man can deny that the only logical course open to our leaders of business and finance is to begin NOW to prepare for the days of rich opportunity which are just ahead.

THEIR USEFULNESS ENDED.

The Winder News in a recent editorial, which is reproduced elsewhere in this issue of The Constitution, questions whether the results being accomplished by the various district A. & M. schools justify the appropriations which are being given to them.

When these schools were first established it was hoped that they would result in a marked improvement in the methods of agriculture in every county in the state.

Instead, with few exceptions, they have become little more than high schools for the counties in which they are located. As stated by the Winder News they are rendering little or no service that could not easily be given by any high school in the state in connection with the various county and home demonstration agents.

As it is approximately 150 counties are being taxed for the support of what are tantamount to local schools in the counties where the A. & M. schools were located.

In the recent report of the state auditor it is shown that one of these schools, with an enrollment of only 106 students, is receiving $35,000 a year from the state treasury—an expense to the state of $330 for the tuition of each of its students.

The five A. & M. schools still operating and the so-called colleges into which the others have been converted are receiving in excess of $500,000 from the state. This means that every county is being taxed $3,000 for schools which are, except in a few instances, nothing more nor less than county high schools for the counties in which they are located.

This $500,000 instead of being spread out among institutions which have become almost purely local in character, should be given to the real statewide institutions of higher education who are entitled to it.

The Winder News rightfully asks: "Are these schools worth $3,000 to Barrow county or any other county in the state?"

Undoubtedly they are not and it is to be hoped that the new legislature when it meets next summer will turn them over to the counties for conversion into the local high schools for which they are admirably adapted.

Then the money from the state treasury which has been going to their support should be appropriated to the relief of the several branches of the university system which are really doing statewide work.

THE LURE OF BARGAINS.

It is very seldom that shorn lambs get a warming wind from Wall Street, but the wolves who range and ravage there go short of prey sometimes. They know why better than others and are shrewd to set lures for a fresh and fleecy flock.

Their shrewdness is that of men who know public psychology. They study human nature. They have experience with appetite and avarice, two of the strongest motors of average men.

The "Wall Street Journal," chief organ of the traders and speculators in the street, comments upon the "buy now" slogan sounded through the country and in an article on "The Retail Dollar" cogently says:

The irresistible force that will start this much desired buying movement is the bargain allurement. When prices of things the public uses or would like to have are at a level where purchases present no embarrassment the desire of possession may be relied upon to overcome economy tendencies and people will begin to forget there is a depression. The tide of buying will then need no spur or encouragement.

That is counsel that the sellers of the necessaries of daily consumption should ponder and adopt. The savings banks reports show plainly that the people generally have been restraining their desires and impounding their money until it will have its best value in the retail markets.

Broker Wollman, of the New York Stock Exchange, calls upon the United States Chamber of Commerce and other business organizations to show the merchants of the nation the necessity to themselves of demanding only a "reasonable profit between wholesale and retail prices." The merchant who seeks to recoup for slow trade by asking a larger than equitable profit is only making matters worse for himself and trade in general. The people will refuse to be gouged.

This Wollman wise man sums up his counsel to the mercantile world as follows:

The only way to cure unemployment is work. The only way to create work is to increase consumption. The only way to increase consumption is to reduce prices on all things to a fair and equitable basis, bringing up the purchasing power of the dollar and bringing prices down to a level sufficiently attractive to consumers to impel purchases on their part.

That is just the sort of talk that is heard among the great mass of consumers of the country. It voices the feelings that are keeping them so largely out of the stores, except on real "bargain days." It promises that every day from now on would be a "bargain day" if enterprising merchants would tell the people that they will get a fair, square deal at their counters—and that is just what the live merchants of Atlanta are telling the readers of The Constitution through these columns.

THE CIVITANS' CRUSADE.

The Civitan clubs of the state are offering a service of paramount value to the people of Georgia by entering upon a crusade to educate them to the necessity for a revised and progress-permitting constitution.

There can no longer be sane debate about the grossness and ineffectiveness of the constitution of 1877, however crudely and ineptly patched by 112 amendments, stuck on at intervals to accommodate local and special interests.

Political science, physical science, the arts of agriculture, industry and education, humane agencies and social defenses, have so far advanced in 50 years as to have outrun the imaginations of the men of the 1877 convention.

Thomas Jefferson was as wise as any of the heptasophs of Greece when he told the American people that their state constitutions should be revised every 20 years to keep pace with the advances of science and political experience. The great states of New York and Ohio act upon that counsel and have greatly profited thereby.

The Maryland constitution is such as to enable that state to be known over the nation as the "Free State," and that is the proud boast of its people. The Civitans do well to appeal to the people of this great commonwealth to also make this a "Free State" by unshackling themselves from a ball and chain constitution.

A JUST HONOR AWARDED.

A just and honorable thing has been done by the college of electors of the Hall of Fame, established many years ago at Columbia University. They have just now elected four more historic persons whose busts will be placed in the famous colonnade, adding to the forty-nine already there. The total of 150 to be elected will be reached in the year 2000, or 70 years hence.

The just thing to which we here refer is the election of Matthew Fontaine Maury, famous naval officer of the United States and of the Confederate states, the great hydrographer and meteorologist, of whom Humboldt said that his work on "The Physical Geography of the Sea" was the foundation of a new and invaluable science. He was first to describe the course and characteristics of the Gulf stream and first to show the feasibility of an Atlantic cable. He served in the cabinet of Emperor Maximilian in Mexico and then gave world-wide distinction to the chair of physics in the famous Virginia Miltary Institute.

The Daughters of the Confederacy are now completing a fund to place his portrait in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. They, as well as the people at large, will rejoice that the eminent electors of "Great Americans" have found Maury entitled to rank with Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Hamilton, Agassiz and Henry. No more deserved tribute has been before awarded.

The Hall of Fame is only three more than a third full. That leaves room for a lot of Americans not yet dead and puffed to fame by their biographers.

Franklin Roosevelt shines in the democratic firmament like a star of good destiny.

The nation didn't elect a single communist. Big Bill Borah should be warned by that fact.

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL

Poppy Day on Tuesday Will Test Our Gratitude to World War Veterans.

During the World War the whole country was placarded with the heavy, spiked and spurred boot of a Hun cavalryman, with the legend: "Shall this trample down our nation?"

Every loyal American heart said back: "In God's name, no!" So we heartened our splendid American men and boys to volunteer, or not to murmur against being drawn in the selective draft, but to go bravely and cheerfully to uphold the honor of our country and put down the bloody-souled kaiser who had said to us: "It will be your turn next!"

Four million Americans stood to the colors, 2,000,000 of them went overseas to fight for inalienable rights of mankind, and from their smashing courage the kaiser fled to exile.

* * * *

A Senseless and Inhuman War.

That was the most senseless and inhuman war that was ever made in the history of the world since Christianity dawned upon it. The kaiser and his German people, with their Austrian allies, are guilty before God and honest mankind of the most brutal and monumental crime of the ages. From the human viewpoint they are absolutely and forever unpardonable.

Their leaders are pleading and denying that Germany caused that war, but they know they are lying. No other people wanted it and no other people caused it.

The world at large, with cool and true judgment holds the Germans guilty and that the exile of Kaiser Wilhelm and the penalties from which his former people are suffering are deserved and just—even merciful.

No one should be deceived by the slobbering complaints of a people who showed no mercy in the bloody orgy in which they revelled for four years.

* * * *

Poppy Day Brings These Thoughts.

Tuesday, the eleventh, will be the twelfth anniversary of the "Great Armistice" that marked the surrender of the world's enemies and the sending of the glad tidings that the awful war was closed.

This writer happened that November day to be in a mining town in Pennsylvania to deliver a patriotic address. Suddenly pandemonium seemed to have broken loose in the community. A telegraphic flash to the newspaper had brought news of the armistice!

The town was largely inhabited by miners, many with their families, who were natives of the European countries involved in the war. Nearly all of them had relatives—some killed in war, some fighting in it, or suffering its woes in their homes.

These American resident workers flocked into the highways—men, women and children by the thousands—delirious with joy over the news. Never have I witnessed such a rapturous demonstration of embraces, parades and songs of thanksgiving. It was intensely pathetic.

* * * *

Equally Joyful News To Us.

The news was equally joyful to us in the United States. It meant that our sons on the battlefronts would be called from the frightful trenches, and gun-nests, and charges, and soon be sent back to us in triumph. It meant that two million yet preparing over here for war over there would be released and returned to the vocations of peace. It meant lifting apprehensions from millions of hearts and homes all over the land.

No wonder our joy was jubilant and expressed in parades, bonfires and celebrations.

Back of it all were 50,000 American homes where grief sat beside vacant chairs and 200,000 hearts mourned for loved ones sleeping in their silent bivouac under the bleeding poppies in Flanders fields, and after the crashes at Chateau Thierry, the miseries of San Mihiel and the agonies of the Argonne Forest.

And yet there was a sad relief in the thought that they had kept the faith, fought a good fight, and earned a world's honors and gratitude.

* * * *

Now That Gratitude Is Due.

Tuesday here in Atlanta, as elsewhere over America, and in many of the nations with which we associated in the huge struggle, will be "Poppy Day."

That means that the people will be asked to materialize the gratitude so often expressed for the sacrifices and sufferings of our service men in the World War. Money is needed, and in liberal sums, with which the American Legion and its wonderful women's auxiliaries may continue their care of the disabled veterans and their dependents—yet unprovided for after 12 years by the government.

There are thousands of such, who far various and unavoidable causes, have not been able to so far assemble their proofs as to comply with necessary government requisitions. It is not the fault of the government. It is the misfortune of those who have lost their necessary papers and proofs, must be helped to secure them, and be sustained until that can be done.

* * * *

A Day That Honors Georgia.

"Poppy Day" honors Georgia in a most signal way. It was Miss Moina Michael, of Athens, one of the most devoted daughters of the state, whose sweetly sympathetic heart, while yet overseas in service, conceived the thought of making the poppy the emblem of service men relief.

She presented the plan. The American Legion adopted it. The English, at the instance of Field Marshal Haig, adopted it. France and others of the associated countries adopted it. And now all over America, in much of Europe, in South Africa, Australia and New Zealand this "Poppy Day," inspired by Moina Michael, known worldwide as "The Poppy Lady," will be honored by generous gifts to the needy service men of the World War.

Every poppy sold here has been made by a service man in need and every cent will go to actually ascertained necessity. And the gifts for poppies, to be creditable to the givers, should be in dollars, halves and quarters more than in dimes and pennies. Let's go!

TEXT AND PRETEXT

BY M. ASHBY JONES

Provincial Piety.

We are all learning today that nothing is quite so sensitive as business. Despite our talk of the materialism of industry, a new idea may make or break a commercial enterprise. I am thinking of Paul, the Jewish preacher, who came into the busy metropolis of Ephesus, with the one idea of preaching his new religion, and in doing so came very near ruining the most lucrative business in Ephesus. As Demetrius, the silversmith told his fellow craftsmen, Paul's gospel of a spiritual God did away with the demand for idols, and put out of business the making and selling of images of Diana.

So they spread this news through the city and a great crowd came together in the theater. "One shouted one thing and one another," because, as the record states, most of them did not know why they were there. This is characteristic of a mob. A mob is an unorganized multitude. It is a medley of motives, and for this reason it is difficult to deal with it. Any orderly meeting begins by "stating the object of the meeting." Those who manipulated this mob were true demagogues, and knew that they must have a shibboleth which would include many motives, and appeal to many prejudices.

So these leaders began to shout, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Immediately every voice is vibrant with this familiar phrase, which happily combined piety, patriotism and prosperity. It must be put down to the credit of human nature that nearly all of the devilry which has been done by motley crowds has been done in the name of some virtue. Demagogues know that they cannot lead the multitudes to accomplish their purposes unless they disguise their objectives in the clothing of patriotism, or chivalry, or religion. The most brutal lynchings have claimed as their justification the defense of womanhood, and the crowd that crucified Jesus did it in defense of the religion of their temple. So this mob would have lynched Paul in the name of the goddess Diana.

Localizing God.

There is an instinct in human nature to localize one's God. It is a true instinct. We can only know God in terms of our own life and surroundings. So we build Him altars and churches. We translate Him into our language, and customs, and ideals. The reason is God can only find expression of Himself in human experience. God is the God of our community in some peculiar way in which He does not express Himself to the rest of the world. So we trace His footsteps in our history, and mark sacred places associated with His providence in the past.

While this is a true instinct of human life it has its deadly dangers. Diana is apt to become "Diana of the Ephesians," a divinity for Ephesus alone. The whole tendency is to limit God to one community, or to one nation. All outside of these narrow limits are "gentiles," "barbarians," or "aliens." Thus God is limited to the history, customs and ideals of a province. He becomes a very small God.

Nothing is so narrowing as a narrow religion. It builds barriers to men's sympathies, it places limits to men's activities and shut and bars the windows of men's spirits. The reason is, a man's life can never be larger than his idea of God. His sympathies and sense of obligation are limited by the sympathies and obligations of his God. If he be only the God of the Jews, or Germans, or Americans, all beyond these racial lines are without the pale of service and sacrifice.

Defending the Faith.

Yet we can not keep from having some pity and even sympathy for that impulse which drew the crowd together to the theater at Ephesus. They were told that Diana was endangered, and with some sort of chivalric devotion, they came together in her defense. The primary motive was good, but the method was profoundly pathetic. A God who needs defense is no God. The faith which fears for the life of its God, is after all, only a timid superstition. So much of our fierce protest against attacks upon our religion, conceals an unexpressed doubt. Whenever the church becomes hostile to the criticisms of philosophy or science, it is an evidence of its own lack of confidence, and a fear that religion is not strong enough to withstand the light of truth.

In this experience at Ephesus the method of the defense of religion was even more pitiful. When Alexander, a Jewish citizen, attempted to pacify them, there arose a maddening and confused cry of: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." God cannot be made great by the simple assertion of men, no matter if they shout in unison "for two hours at a time." The effort to drown out all other voices save your own, whether it be in the teaching of your children or in the preaching of your gospel, is a confession of weakness. Paul preached his gospel in Ephesus, planting his truths like seeds in the minds and hearts of the people, and passed out of the city amid the roar of the mob, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." In time the temple crumbled. Diana became only a memory of mythology, but the letter to the church at Ephesus is a living light in the pathway of civilization, and the Christ whom Paul preached, the most potent influence in the life of the world today.

Hail to Silver Dollar, Writes This Georgian, In Praising Editorial

Editor Constitution: As one who reads all your editorials and finds them of the best, let me pay special tribute to that one on the "Silver Dollar."

It is the greatest of dollars. A devotional dollar with its "In God We Trust." A durable dollar, resisting rust rottage and robbers. A musical dollar, only surpassed by the 20-dollar gold piece, which is seldom near enough to hear it ring. A good dollar to travel with, too weighty to carry enough to make a holdup expensive, and in a sock makes a weapon as deadly as a black-jack.

A patriotic dollar, the aeric of the eagle, our national bird. Lastly, it's an educational dollar—it teaches economy, if one merely makes the eagle squawk twice before bidding it goodbye or better still au revoir. All hail the silver dollar, the dollar with the eagle! Hail all the silver dollars, we never yet had too many.

Again thanks for the editorial.

The Foundation of Philosophy

BY JOSEPH DEVLIN.

No. 2—Anaximander, 610 to 546 B. C.

ANAXIMANDER.

Anaximander is often referred to as "a pupil of Thales," but he was not a pupil in the modern sense, for Thales kept no school—he was a rich merchant and a leading man of Miletus who freely expressed his views and opinions. Among those who eagerly listened to him were many young fellows of the city, among whom was Anaximander, son of a well-known and respected citizen named Praxiades, who was a close friend of Thales. When the latter returned from his travels and began to talk publicly on various matters he was a man of about 50, while Anaximander was but a boy of 20.

Anaximander looked up to Thales as a very wise and very learned man and wondered "how one small head could carry all he knew."

Thales had sought the cosmic matter, the first principle, in the empirically known, in other words, in what came under his observation, in the things or forms he saw and experienced, and he thought he had found it in water, because he considered water the most mutable or capable of change. When he made his theory known Anaximander was deeply impressed; in fact, he believed that the grand old man had discovered the secret of nature, so he applied himself to earnest study and investigation for the purpose of confirming the Thalian idea. He soon, however, became convinced that the water theory "would not hold water;" that is, could not account for all the countless and varied forms in the cosmos. Nor, he reasoned, could the beginning of things be attributed to any of the other so-called elements, for, as it seemed to him, all the elements were limited; consequently, any one of them would exhaust itself in producing. The limited cannot be taken as the basis of the limitless. Water was but one element, and limited, therefore, it could not be the underlying principle of all things, could not be the ultimate analysis of all matter. There must be something—something limitless and inexhaustible, he contended, to be all-sufficient to give origin to the multiplicity of individual things in nature, without exhausting itself.

Following up this reasoning, Anaximander at length conceived the primary principle as the Infinite. By the Infinite he did not mean what is now generally understood by the term. His conception was rather that of a boundless thing or substance, hence it is known as Boundless.

There has always been some dispute as to the significance of Anaximander's Boundless. Some regard it as purely metaphysical, a departure from the concrete to the abstract, a referring of the things of experience to what was beyond experience. Certainly it was metaphysical in the sense of being beyond experience, of being imperceivable, indefinite, indeterminate, wholly unknown—it was not identified with any of the elements, or with any known body or form, yet Anaximander must have thought of it as corporeal, as bodily substance, otherwise he would not have posited it as the beginning of all forms of matter.†

* * * *

It can be accepted that Anaximander conceived the Boundless as a substance—an eternal, ageless, indestructible substance, encompassing all worlds, possessing an ever-producing energy that generates all things, determines all being, and is the sole cause of all development, and of all change. It is the source from which everything arises and into which everything passes back—an inexhaustible mass which supplies all and is continually making up for the wastage of nature.

The Boundless is in perpetual motion and this motion "separates out" the opposites or contraries in nature, of which the world is made up, sifts them out, as it were, and it is the interaction of these that evolves particular or individual things. The opposites are the hot and the cold, the dry and the moist. Anaximander reduced these to two, the hot and the cold—fire representing the former, while cold includes the rest. He refers everything to the hot and the cold.

It appears from this doctrine of opposites that Anaximander regarded existing things as in strife with one another and all in a kind of rebellion against the Boundless. Warm fire is opposed to cold air, and dry land to moist sea. These opposites wage war on each other and he considered it a case of "injustice" and "unjust" encroachment when one has to give way to another, hence he speaks of things "suffering punishment." "Injustice" is committed by 'the hot' in summer, and by 'the cold' in winter. The drying up of water by fire is a good illustration of what Anaximander regarded as "injustice."

One opposite must make reparation to another for "injustice," for if one went unchecked, in the end, it would overcome and totally rout the others, leaving nothing but itself in existence. This seems to knock out Thales' theory of water, for if Thales had been right nothing but water could have existed.

If any one of the opposites had been boundless, it would have exhausted or annihilated the others, but they still continue in opposition, which shows that the Boundless, whence they come, is something other than the elements which constitute the opposites. To redress or adjust the balance, the opposites will return to their source—the Boundless, and the world will cease to be. But another will take its place, or rather come into being, for the Boundless is continually producing. Anaximander believed there were "innumerable worlds in the Boundless," not coexistent, however, that is, not existing simultaneously, but succeeding one another in time in an infinite series, a new one coming into being when its predecessor had vanished into its source.

* * * *

The process of world formation from the Boundless is stated thus:

In the beginning something capable of generating hot and cold was separated from the eternal principle. From this arose a sphere of flame which grew round the air encircling the earth, as the bark grows round a tree. When this was torn off and enclosed in certain rings, the sun, moon and stars came into existence.

From this it may be inferred that Anaximander reasoned somewhat like this: The something that separated from the Boundless differentiated itself into hot and cold, the one opposed to the other; the hot took the form of a sphere of fire and surrounded the cold; the cold was moist (fluid); from it arose the earth and air through the action of the hot (fire); a portion of the moist remained as the sea; the air expanding, finally broke up the sphere of fire into circular fragments or rings, differing in size—these rings are the sun, moon and stars.

That Anaximander believed the heavenly bodies originated as rings of fire is attested by the early writers. Thus:

Anaximander said the stars were hoop-like compressions of air, full of fire, breathing out flames from orifices.

Anaximander said when the breathing holes are stopped eclipses occur.

Anaximander said the sun was equal to the earth, but that the ring by which it is carried around was twenty-seven times as large as the earth.

Anaximander said the moon was a ring eighteen times the size of the earth.

Also:

Anaximander said that thunder and lightning were caused by fire breaking through storm clouds—the bursting of the clouds makes the noise, and the rift, in contrast with the surrounding darkness, gives the appearance of a flash.

Anaximander said the world swings free, held in its place by nothing; it remains where it is because of its equal distance from everything; its shape is convex and round, like a stone pillar.

As earth, and air, and sea (water) came from the moist, all life must have originated in the same, according to the Anaximandrian doctrine. The first living things were generated in the moist (sea). When the hot evaporated a portion of the moist, many living creatures were stranded on dry land. Some of these perished, but a large number survived and developed a capacity of air breathing. These latter were the progenitors of the later land animals, including man. From this, we see that Anaximander believed man descended (maybe ascended is more appropriate) from the moist life—from sea life—in short, from the fishes. He contended that if man, in the beginning, had been as helpless at birth as he is now, and had required such a long time to mature, he could not have survived. Thus, Anaximander was a precursor of Darwin—was almost 2,500 years ahead of the man whose theory of organic evolution by natural selection gave origin to the term.

†Anaximander meant simple or known bodies: elements were not thought of before Empedocles. Plato was the first to use the term.

A Man Who Shunned Society Yet Taught School in Public

A. aximander, like Thales, was a Milesian, but unlike Thales he was not popular in his native city; he did not mix in society, in fact, he shunned it, yet he was the first philosopher to teach in what may be called a public school. He addressed those who took an interest in his doctrine in a court or enclosure where the leading men of the city met to discuss civic affairs. He had not many followers or disciples. It is said that Anaximenes, who afterward claimed that everything came from air, was one of his pupils.

As a youth Anaximander heard Thales talk on various subjects. He became much interested in geometry, which Thales introduced into Ionia on his return from Egypt. Anaximander developed the science and finally wrote a book on it. He was also interested in geography; he constructed a map outlining the boundaries of the then known countries and seas, and arranged a set of geographical tables which proved serviceable to the seagoing Ionians and Phoenicians.

Anaximander is credited with several inventions, among them the gnomon or sun dial, but it is likely this contrivance was known to the Babylonians long before his time.

Georgia's A. & M. Schools

(From the Winder News.)

Many of Georgia's district A. & M. schools are very costly propositions. There are 12 of them in the state, and it seems to us that the work they do does not justify the sums of money appropriated to them annually by the legislature.

The state auditor recently made a report on one of these schools. This school gets $35,000 each year from the state treasury. The attendance, according to the auditor's report, published in the daily press, for the past year was 106 students. Each student cost the state $330. Students are supposed to pay their own board in money or work. Certainly the product of the pupil's work is of sufficient money value to pay his board. If not, the state is paying his board, at least in part. If the state proposes to pay the board of these A. & M. students, the same treatment should be accorded all public school pupils and students of the state university.

Assuming that each student pays his or her own board either in money or work of equal cash value, the tuition of each pupil in this school was $330 for the past year. Some of this money may have been spent in the upkeep of the school, but it costs the state this amount for each pupil at this school.

This amount will pay both the tuition and board of a pupil at the high schools in our smaller towns. At least it will allow them $1.80 per day for the 180 days in the year, which will come very nearly paying both tuition and board.

The work that these schools do can be done by our county high schools and the vocational agricultural teachers that can be secured by the high schools.

The work done in Winder High school in connection with the vocational agricultural teacher is just as good and just as helpful to the boys and girls of this county as they would get at any of these A. & M. schools. It is better; for the work of these vocational teachers reaches the fathers and mothers as well as the boys and girls.

If all of these schools get the same amount from the state, they are drawing out of the taxes of the people of Georgia $420,000 per year, which means about $2,500 for each county in the state. Are these schools worth that much to Barrow county or any other county in the state?

The Background Of Foreign Affairs

BY HENRY KITTRIDGE NORTON.

The Battle Over Disarmament; The Challenge to the Status Quo; An American Envoy-at-Large.

As the date for the meeting of the preparatory commission on disarmament approaches the nations are girding themselves for an enduring struggle. Without committing ourselves to a cheap cynicism, it has to be confessed that it looks like a struggle for armament rather than disarmament. Fortunately it is for the present merely a diplomatic struggle; but military power is still the chief sanction of diplomacy. Therein lies the danger to the peace of the world.

France is in the thick of the fight because she is the dominant power on the continent and because she is interested in all three forms of armament—land, sea and air. France's reiterated pronouncement is that she cannot disarm further until she has achieved "security." She insists that the other nations shall find a way to guarantee her this, and then she will disarm.

Italy focuses her emphasis on the question of naval parity with France. Both are Mediterranean powers, and Italy contends their naval forces should be equal, so that neither shall constitute a menace to the other in that sea. Italy professes not to care a paper lira whether her tonnage is high or low, so long as the two countries have an equal allotment.

Germany's plea is that she was disarmed under the peace treaties as a preliminary to a general European disarmament. Despite her helplessness at the time, she takes the attitude now that she never would have consented to remain disarmed in an armed Europe. If the Allies—and she looks full at France—are going to remain armed to the teeth, then it follows as the night the day that Germany must be armed. It also follows that Germany is legally released from her treaty obligations in this regard.

A footnote to the disarmament discussion is that Denmark is the only country in Europe that has really disarmed, and that by doing so she has inspired severe criticism on the ground that she has lost the power to defend herself and thus shifted to her neighbors the necessity of defending her in case of attack.

Behind all the disarmament argument, as behind every other issue in present-day Europe, lurks the supreme issue that divides the continent into two suspicious and watchful camps. This is the preservation of the status quo. France and her allies, Belgium, Poland and the three states of the Little Entente, are all resolved to maintain the status quo at all costs. For them the peace treaties are sacred because those treaties give to these nations all and more than they could hope to attain under any other dispensation. When France speaks of "security" and her satellites echo her plea, she is thinking of a security which will make her secure in her present domination of the continent.

For Germany, Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria and Italy, this security 'a la Francaise" is nothing less than a menace to their own safety. For them "security" consists in getting rid of this French hegemony. Therefore Italy demands disarmament as a step to security in opposition to the French thesis of "security" as a step to disarmament. Therefore Germany demands the right to re-establish her national armaments unless France and her allies evince a willingness to disarm.

Take this sort of psychology and these national attitudes into the conference room and it is easy to understand why the league has no "committee on disarmament," but merely a "preparatory committee" which is still trying to make preparations 12 years after the war ended.

Lest the matter still seem too simple, we must add Russia—for she, too, will attend the committee meetings. The soviets are, of course, fundamentally opposed to the peace treaty dispensation. They may therefore be expected to support the German-Italian position at Geneva. But the Russians are supreme opportunists and their destination may hardly be predicted from their course.

Thus no small amount of the work for progress in this department matter will be thrown upon the British and American delegations. The British by their very proximity and the multiplicity of their continental interests cannot get far away from their traditional role of remaining detached from both continental groups, so that they may ultimately use their strength against either one which appears to be acquiring definite superiority.

The United States, because of its detachment from continental politics and its generally appreciated disinterestedness in the delicacies of European politics, can take a more directly constructive line. Thus Hugh S. Gibson, ambassador to Belgium and envoy-at-large to Europe, can visit M. Tardieu in Paris and talk over with him the "procedure" of the coming conference. If in doing so he suggests or receives an intimation of what France might be willing to concede to Italy, that is entirely incidental. Then he can go to Rome and discuss "procedure" again with the Signore Mussolini and Grandi. If in so doing he suggests a way in which Italy might approach France to reopen the negotiations on the naval issue, that again is entirely incidental.

For of course it would be quite untraditional for the United States to take any part in European affairs. More than that, our intrusion would be resented in many quarters. Nevertheless, our friendly relations with all concerned enables Mr. Gibson, who knows his tons and his guns, his treaties and his diplomatic susceptibilities as well as any man in Europe, to talk in a perfectly amicable and uninterfering way with both of the principal parties to the dispute.

Out of these talks there appears to be emerging a willingness to try once more to solve the problem of Franco-Italian parity. One suggestion is that France shall announce her tonnage needs on an absolute basis—that is, without reference to what any other country does—and then say she will announce her intention not to build more than this amount "unless the situation changes." Italy will then announce her tonnage needs, the same figures as France. Thus she will achieve "parity." She, too, will add a safeguard clause about the situation changing. But when it comes to building, the idea is that Italy shall not actually construct ships up to her announced total. Then Italy will have her parity, and France will have her margin. Very simple. Too simple?

Bradberry Case Made Basis Of Plea for Truth Freedom

University of Georgia Should Be Free of All Shackles, Asserts Judge Carlisle Cobb, of Athens

CARLISLE COBB.

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Sterilization of the "idiotic and criminal insane" as a means of preventing repetitions of the Bradberry case, closed this week with commutation of the two youths' death sentences to life imprisonment, was recommended in a statement here today by Judge Carlisle Cobb, one of the attorneys for the two boys.

The Bradberry brothers, after being convicted of the murder of the two negroes, and having lost an appeal for a new trial, finally escaped electrocution when the prison commission recommended commutation of sentence upon the testimony of Dr. A. S. Edwards, psychologist at the University of Georgia, who declared that heredity and environment were responsible for their anti-social actions.

Judge Cobb, a grandson of General Howell Cobb, who was one of Georgia's greatest lawyers and statesmen, and a son of the late Judge Howell Cobb, for years presiding judge of the superior court of this circuit, not only advocates sterilization for the mentally unfit, but recommends that the state take advantage of the opportunities for social progress offered it by various departments of social science in the University of Georgia.

Science and Public Good.

The Athens lawyer, who by appointment of the court, with Attorneys Fred A. Gillen and R. M. Nicholson, represented the Bradberry brothers, Wayman and Harvey, in their efforts to escape the electric chair for the murders of two Oconee county negroes, declared that his connection with this case has brought him face to face with the problem of the socially unfit and that he is convinced that it is now time to question the methods which have hitherto been followed in Georgia in dealing with crime and other social questions.

"To call upon courts frantically to stop 'crime waves' is foolish," Judge Cobb asserts. "The courts can but administer laws as they are. To insist upon more 'chain gang' sentences is short-sighted. That but fills the chain gangs to overflowing with the youth of the land, condemning many an ignorant boy to a veritable education in the worst kinds of crime.

"Then what is society to do?

"One thing it can do is to make certain that science is used for the public good, and not for the public's corruption.

Cites Bradberry Case.

"The details of the Bradberry cases are now a matter of record—a record that is complete and full. Yet I venture to say that the various opinions that one may hear expressed about these cases will be based upon inexact and careless knowledge of the facts of the crime itself, and with slight knowledge of, or hastily formed conclusions as to the causes of the crime. In spite of this people will universally and readily agree that the causes of crime are what should be most looked to. How else is it possible to make good laws, or to administer good laws justly, or to deal rightly with convicted felons? All this must be done with regard to the causes of crime. These two boys were not the causes of this great crime.

"'Penology,' as it is called, though it be reduced to a fine science, can only deal with a product. It cannot stop original causes of crime and with original causes existing and increasing in virulency, 'penology,' though a good idea, must face ultimate failure. The execution, even, of a few criminals, is not the cure-all it is estimated by some; rather it acts as an opiate on the public, causing it to think all is finished and to sink back into apathetic slumber while the causes of crime go on unheeded.

"Then, what are the causes of crime? It is a great question. Surely none of us can now think we have discovered them all nor yet dealt with them intelligently. Is it not possible that legislators have been too intent upon the business affairs of government and the development of material science, without due regard to intellectual and spiritual growth. Surely material growth without both intellectual and spiritual progress can but lead to an anti-climax of degradation. My own thought is that neglect of the latter two for the exclusive benefit of material progress is the wilderness wherein are hidden the fundamental causes of crime. There are men of the highest order of intelligence and character devoting their lives to this sort of study in a truly scientific manner, though they receive but little encouragement. Their desire is only for the discovery of truth and their motive only the welfare of humanity. Some of truth they have discovered and will discover more and it seems to me mere ignorance and bigotry to longer disregard the things they know.

Methods of "Practical" Men.

"The 'practical men' have us by the collar. Economic pressure is now forcing all of us to specialize to exist. Along with this crime is increasing. Crimes of horror seem to me to not only alarm but actually to entertain too many of us as a sort of thrilling amusement. There is lack of sense somewhere. Is it not time to question the methods of these 'practical men' and examine intelligently the laws they enact, to remodel remedies, to strike at causes of crime, and to promote human intelligence as connected with good character? One way of aiding in the accomplishment of this, I am convinced, is sterilization of the idiotic and criminal insane. The irresponsible and increasing reproduction of this type of mind is building up an undergrowth as impenetrable as that of a jungle, as full of poisonous ideas for society as ever a jungle was of poisonous insects and snakes. From hence come the ready-made mental tool for the use of unscrupulous men.

"I am a lawyer, and lawyers from the very nature of their work are advocates and not philosophers. Therefore I would point to men like Dr. A. S. Edwards, of the chair of psychology, of the University of Georgia, and urge that these men of science whose characters are above suspicion of mercenary motives be consulted upon those subjects that they, better than other men, are familiar with. They have made their studies their life work.

"In the Bradberry cases lawyers were appointed by the court, because of the dire poverty of the defendants and the desire of the court that no men should be condemned without investigation of their side of the case. Acting under this appointment, without compensation, the lawyers—F. A. Gillen, Robert Nicholson and myself—brought all law points involved before the courts. But there was more to do to throw full light on the cases and Dr. Edwards was requested to examine into the mentality of these defendants, which he consented to do. When his report was made it was presented along with other evidence to the prison commission and the governor. With that the work of the lawyers came to an end. The prison commission and the governor did what was right after obtaining full knowledge. Criticism of them without full knowledge of this crime and of the criminals themselves would be a great injustice.

Plea for Truth.

"The work of men like Dr. Edwards should never end, and I hope that this may be the beginning point of a better understanding of what the University of Georgia should mean to the people of Georgia—of what Oglethorpe came here for—of what Jefferson stood for—of what Abraham Baldwin strove for—intellectual freedom and progress.

"The university should and can become not only an institution of teaching for the young, but also a great depository of scientific truth ascertained by continued research and study by men giving their lives to their subjects, accessible to the executive department, to the legislature, to the courts, and to the people, above suspicion of partisan politics and chicanery, with absolute freedom to express truth, undominated by ignorant stupidity or sectarian narrowness. All this is possible if the people want it and insist upon it and support it. Then indeed could the university become worthy of its name and Georgia the intellectual empire state, for there are other men in its faculty in the various branches of study capable of rendering their departments of inestimable value to the people in an advisory capacity, as true servants and not masters of the people."

"With encouragement, and firm to what they should be and can be, helping to reach what is best for the greatest number—how best to distribute the burdens of taxation, how best to nurture honest intelligence, how best to make wealth subservient to the people's welfare, how best to control industrial enterprise and prevent such things from controlling and corrupting us, how to make use of science intelligently for the public good and prevent the use of good science in ways detrimental to the people's intellect and toward spiritual destruction—all this is possible if the people really want it.

"Maybe this sounds like a dream but I believe it possible if the people interest themselves in time to prevent the great commercial organizations from taking over the university. It seems to me the last and best chance to peacefully prevent ultimate industrial slavery in the cities and peasantry on the farms. But the people must support the university without stint from the public funds for to allow it to fall under obligations for its life to private interests is certain to kill all that is best in it now and forever.

"Sociology, if I understand the term, is a subject for the profoundest thought and study, and is inextricably bound up with all human knowledge, every human motive and action, and with Christianity itself. There is now no group of men independent of the restrictive influences of politics or business who can be depended on to think or speak freely for the common good. In the university, if the people really want it, such a group can be developed."

Says People Hold Answer To Railroad Situation

Editor Constitution: One of your recent correspondents claims that railroad passenger and freight rates are at present exorbitant and quotes an increase in fare for passengers between Atlanta and Cartersville from 95 cents to $1.72. Nothing is high nor low except by comparison. Of course if present passenger and freight rates are compared with the rates of 20 or 30 years ago and the purchasing power of the dollar is not considered the present rates appear high.

When the decreased purchasing power of the dollar is considered in connection with the increased passenger and freight rates, the present rates are at least substantially equal to the former rates. When one considers present-day conditions on the farm and the fact that farm lands have been offered for sale in certain sections recently without attracting bidders then of course from the farmers' standpoint and in comparison with the farmer's present earnings freight and passenger rates are high. In so far, however, as the most of us are concerned whose earnings have increased somewhat in inverse proportion to the decrease in purchasing power of the dollar, present passenger and freight rates are, in the writer's opinion, just and reasonable.

Both passenger and freight rates are controlled by the public service commission elected by the people and it is the people through their chosen representatives who fix the rates. It is the people, too, who not only must pay the rates whether high or low, but must as well accept responsibility for the rates prevailing at any time. The power to make the rates as low as is consistent with safe and efficient service is also vested in the people themselves by increased patronage and regulation, rather than with the railroad executives. Patronizing buses and making cross-country trips in private automobiles does not tend either to decrease the railroad passenger fares nor to improve the service. In regard to the latter it is the privilege of every citizen to do as he pleases regardless of the fact that such a course tends to increase the cost of trips by rail for others. In regard to the farmer, not until the buses are required to either own and maintain their own private right of way after the same manner that the railroads own and maintain their right-of-way or pay the equivalent in taxes into the public treasury in addition to ad valorem, franchise or other legitimate taxes imposed should the bus competition be countenanced and tolerated. Even then it is well enough for the people to understand that buses and railroads together will be more expensive in the end than railroads only.

It is for the people themselves to deside as to whether they want an efficient railroad passenger service at a low cost or both railroad and bus service at greater expense.

Copy of Civil War Book Wanted by New York Man

Editor Constitution: My great-aunt was the author of a book entitled "Major Hall's Wife," which enjoyed a large sale in the south following the Civil War. It contained accounts of her actual experiences in following her husband, a Confederate major, almost into battle throughout the war. The last copy of the book that we can find is in the family of my relatives in Danville, Va., daughters of the late Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, of that city.

I am unable to secure a copy of this book and would appreciate your help if you ever hear of one.

Final Week Is Reached In Health Garden Contest

BY J. C. MORCOCK, JR.

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—The Georgia health garden contest is nearing the end. There is but one more week to go, as it closes November 15. The leaders interested should make a special effort this week to place their schools as high as possible.

If these fall gardens do not contain four different kinds of vegetables, plant them now. Of course this should have been done earlier in the fall, but in some instances it was not done. Purple-top Globe and seven-top turnips, spinach, rape, kale, parsley, carrots, beefs, lettuce, onions and English peas can be planted in the southern half of the state. The farther up you go, the more apt they are to be killed.

A simple type of cold frame can be made by laying four logs in a square on the southern slope of a hill. Bank the dirt up so the wind cannot go under. Make a cover by sewing sacks together to form a large sheet that is nailed to the log on the north or western side, and the other end fastened to a scantling long enough to reach across the bed. The cover is rolled up in good weather, but when severe cold comes it can be rolled into place to cover the plants. Of course the cover must not touch the tops of the plants, so to prevent this see that the top of the logs is two feet above the bottom of the bed. Stretch baling wire across the bed every three feet to help support the cover.

Planks, slabs, or some kind of boarding can be used for the sides in place of logs if you wish. Put plenty of rotten manure or leaf mold in the bottom, and be sure that water will not stand in the bed. Such a place is ideal for the growing of winter lettuce, carrots, beets and onions, even in the mountains of the state.

If a blizzard comes, and you lose most of your vegetables, replant as soon as the ground thaws. Seed are cheap, and that may be the only severe cold of the year. Determine to have vegetables all winter. You can if you try.

For your school to be scored this fall, certain information must be sent in to the Vegetable Gardening Specialist at the Georgia State College of Agriculture in Athens as soon as the contest closes.

For schools in group one (one, two and three-teacher schools) send the names of all pupils over nine years old who have gardens at least 400 square feet in size and in which at least four different kinds of vegetables are growing; send the number of pupils on your class roll who are over nine years old; and all records that have been kept. In all other schools send the names of the boys and girls in the fifth, sixth and seventh grades who have gardens as specified above; the number of pupils on the class rolls of these three grades; and all records that have been kept.

Which of the 149 schools enrolled in the contest will win the 14 excellent prizes offered?

REAL GARDENS IN GREENE.

GREENSBORO, Ga., Nov. 9.—The boys and girls who are members of the Woodville School Health Garden Club, which is sponsored by Miss Evelyn Hale, fifth and sixth grade teacher, and Miss Victoria Whatley, home demonstration agent of Greene county, go in for real substantial gardens, not being content with the more modest ones of five vegetables each, which are required in the rules of the Georgia health garden contest. The best gardens are growing from 11 to 18 varieties of vegetables at this time. Julia Lowe and John Durham head the list, each getting 18 vegetables from their health gardens this fall.

When a whole community helps, it is remarkable what worthwhile work children will do. The Woman's Club of Woodville is backing this health garden movement at their school. Miss Annie Davison, president of the Woman's Club has canned 39 kinds of products from her orchard and garden which she exhibited at the Greene county fair this week, showing a well filled pantry in connection with a year-around garden.

MANY PRIZES OFFERED.

The prizes in the Georgia health garden contest, which is being sponsored through the news columns of The Constitution and the Southern Cultivator, will be all donated by leading Atlanta business concerns. They are as follows:

Group 1 (One and Two-Teacher Schools).

First Prize—$75 cash, Atlanta Gas Light Company.

Second Prize—$50 cash, International Agricultural Corporation.

Third Prize—$35 globe atlas, Sterchi Furniture & Carpet Company.

Fourth Prize—$25 merchandise, Sears-Roebuck Company.

Fifth Prize—$25 cash, Atlanta Gas Light Company.

Sixth Prize—$25 desk, Sterchi Furniture & Carpet Company.

Group 2 (Three, Four and Five-Teacher Schools).

First Prize—$100 cash, H. G. Hastings Company.

Second Prize—$75 merchandise, Sears-Roebuck Company.

Third Prize—$50, library, Southern Cultivator.

Fourth Prize—$25 library, Ginn & Company.

Group 3 (Six and More Teacher Schools).

First Prize—$125 radio, Atwater Kent Company.

Second Prize—$50 library, Atlanta Constitution.

Third Prize—$50 film rentals, Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Fourth Prize—28 basketballs, A. G. Spalding Company.

Group 4 (Vocational Teachers' School).

First Prize—$125 radio, Atwater Kent Company.

Second Prize—$75 in film rentals, Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Third Prize—$50 library, Milton Bradley Company.

Fourth Prize—$25 in film rentals, Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Fall-Wind

BY GEORGE RAYNOR GARRETT

Make me one with the Fall-Wind!
Out of the smoky town;
Skimming the stubbled furrows,
Driving the beech-leaves down;
Swaying the giant hemlocks
To let red moonlight through—
For you are one with the Fall-Wind,
And I would be one with you!

New Wealth for Georgia Land Owners As Result of Forestry Research Work

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—Developments which have resulted from practical and chemical research in the division of forestry at the Georgia State College of Agriculture promise to revolutionize the state from the standpoint of tree production and have opened a vast new source of potential wealth to Georgia land owners.

Dr. Andrew M. Soule, president of the Georgia State College of Agriculture, in speaking of the importance of forestry and the new developments along with that line at the Georgia State College of Agriculture says: "Trees and timber are essential concomitants of our civilization and the way to restore our forest program to a normal basis, I believe, is to make out of the farm forest areas of our state a productive asset.

"The researches as conducted by our institution promise to reveal some things of outstanding service to society and materially extend the market by increasing the demand," says Dr. Soule.

Outstanding research has been done here in co-operation with a well-known company in regard to the uses of pine by-products. Research along this line has resulted in the improving of cleaning methods on certain materials better than ever before, the cheaper control of injurious pests and also in the cure of some diseases. This research work has been carried far enough that a report of the findings is being prepared and will be ready for distribution at an early date.

Widespread Results.

Dr. Soule further says: "The consummation of these researches along the lines indicated will advance every citizen who owns an interest in forest lands now or in the future."

Dr. Soule in pointing out the possibilities of the forest industry in our state says: "In spite of the periodic slumps that have taken place in the value of lumber, it is difficult to see how this essential material can do anything but advance in value. Now suppose that the return per acre be only $3 per year above the cost of interest on the investment. On the ten millions of acres of land suited best to forest production in the state this would represent $30,000,000 annually. This sum could be cut in half and would represent nearly twice the total income of the state from all other sources, and there is no reason why, under judicious management, the profit per acre cannot be made to represent five, seven or even ten dollars per acre.

"There is not a farmer in the state who would not add to the value of his holdings at least $100 per year through the planting of trees around his homestead and through the conservation of his farm wood lot.

"The slash pine which now offers a vast new source of potential wealth to Georgia has been moved approximately 200 miles out of its natural habitat and proven to be a profitable enterprise in the northern part of the state by the forestry experts of the Georgia State College of Agriculture. Professor Dupree Barrett, head of the division of forestry at the college, states that the slash pine through artificial seeding grows very well as far north as Hart county, whereas the original northern boundary of the slash pine under natural conditions was approximately on the line between Waynesboro and Cordele. The extension of this territory adds approximately 5,000,000 acres of worn and abandoned land to the possible production area of slash pine."

Practical research along the line of reforestation with slash pine has been carried on by the forestry division for the past 17 years and at the present time experimental demonstrations in reforestation are being conducted in Hart, Clarke, Spalding and Butts counties. These demonstrations have proven beyond a doubt that the slash pine makes a rapid and profitable growth at all these points.

Seventeen years ago slash pines were planted in Athens. At the present time these trees are approximately 9 inches in diameter and 35 feet tall; this being large enough for resin production as well as for use by naval stores.

75 Demonstrations.

Under the direct supervision of the forestry expert of the College of Agriculture approximately 75 private demonstrations relative to slash pine production are being carried on in the state at the present time, and through the advice of the forestry officials considerable areas have been reforested. Professor Barrett states that, we are striving in every possible way to demonstrate to the landowners of the state how they may profitably utilize their worn and eroded tracts of land in an economical and profitable way.

In connection with the forestry division of the College of Agriculture a nursery for the production of tree seedlings is being operated for the farmers of the state who wish to secure seedlings at cost. For distribution in 1931 this nursery has 850,000 slash pine seedlings. In 1930, 360,000 were distributed. This work of distributing seedlings has been carried on for the past four years and it is estimated that approximately 2,500 acres of worn land have been reforested from this stock.

Economic Necessity.

"The time has come when the planting of trees is an economic necessity," Dr. Soule says. "They cover and protect the bosom of the earth from man's desecration and destruction, they minimize erosion which is civilization's worst enemy. We should reforest about 5,500,000 acres of denuded land in the state and reap the rewards of profit.

"It was in view of the fact that Georgia needed reforestation that the forest nursery was started and it is our purpose to send out millions of these wonderful treasure producing plants into the state to grace, beautify and improve the farmers' wood lots and in the course of years to add materially to the value of the forest holdings of our Georgia farmers.

"The forestry division has not limited itself to the Athens nursery alone but has supervised several other nurseries of individuals in the state, and under this supervision in nursery stock production and reforestation one man of the state has reforested 1,500 acres of his idle land.

"Slash pines have been found to be one of the fastest growing and profitable products for practically all of the state. However, reforestation should be carried on with artificially grown seedlings. This fact was pointed out by the forestry division after experiments in natural reseeding had been carried in the Piedmont plateau.

"The oldest forestry school in the south is located here at the Georgia State College of Agriculture and it has now been functioning sufficiently long enough to have developed a satisfactory clientele and has sent out into the various fields of this industry a group of capably trained and efficient workers who are making substantial contributions to all our welfare activities as they relate to forestry. Many of the graduates now hold positions of honor and trust in the United States forest service and with private corporations.

"Through the aid of our forestry graduates and the force and power of the institution as a whole, a new consciousness with reference to the preservation and utilization of trees is gradually being developed throughout the state. This institution as a pioneer in the field of forestry development in the south has helped blaze out many new but definite, essential and permanent trails to follow along the lines of timber cruising, reforestation, nursery practices and pest control.

"Instruction in forestry was started in Georgia in April of 1906. It was begun as a result of a gift of $2,500 a year for three years by the Hon. George Foster Peabody. After years of continued growth and progress in this field it is the hope and ambition of the Georgia State College of Agriculture to continue to render substantial service to the forest interest of the state.

"This will naturally entitle this forestry division to receive the large and continuous financial support necessary to its development and progress along that great variety of lines which will enable it to serve its constituency much more efficiently in the future than has been possible in the past."

Boom in United States Pulpwood Industry Is Seen by Bonnell Stone As Result of Discovery of Dr. Herty

Editor Constitution: Someone asked me recently if I, as author of the forestry act of 1925, had expected to see so much interest in forestry within five years from the passage of this act by the general assembly of Georgia. My answer was that I have been astounded by the rapid increase in interest. All realize that forestry is involved with a marketing problem. I am sure that the recent discovery made by Dr. Charles H. Herty—that newsprint and white paper can be made from slash pine grown in south Georgia—will do more for reforestation and proper forest management in the entire Coastal Plains section than anything that could possibly have happened.

This recent Herty discovery in chemistry will surely bring the paper mill into this great natural source of pulpwood supply. By this discovery, Dr. Herty will accomplish more for the pulpwood industry in the United States, in my opinion, than he has accomplished in the past for the naval stores industry through the famous "Herty Cup" system of turpentining.

It is seldom given to one man to accomplish so much, but this splendid Georgian was not content with his invention which wiped out the old destructive method of "boxing" pine trees. He has now opened up a new field of industrial development for the south which will add glory to his record for forest utilization. We may expect unprecedented results in forestry and timber culture now, for the forest crop idea could not be as attractive in terms of saw log crop rotations as it will be in terms of pulpwood and saw log together.

Dr. Herty is very enthusiastic about the progress being made in forest protection under the "Georgia Plan" whereby federal financial aid is given to private owners of timber lands who are properly organized with minimum units of 10,000 acres for each timber protective organization. Some 2,000,000 acres in Georgia now receive adequate protection under this distinctive state plan which originated in Georgia, and these pioneer organizations will soon be greatly in need of ready markets for their thinings and new forest crops.

More Research Necessary.

It is recognized that additional research Dr. Herty advocates, is most essential. Brown paper is being made from pulp of many tree species grown in Georgia, but today the manufacture of paper from Georgia woods is being carried on in other states. Georgia needs paper mills in the northern as well as in the southern sections of the state. The vast areas of the fast growing loblolly pine in middle Georgia, and the increasing areas of shortleaf and black pine in north Georgia offer great promise for a paper industry; and as none of these species have as much rosin as slash pine has, they may be found suitable for newsprint and white paper as well as brown paper in the future.

Throughout north Georgia we now find pine pulpwood, yellow poplar and other hardwood pulp material, corded at the railroad shipping points ready for transport into other states where paper mills are located to enrich industries outside of this state. We need local Georgia markets for all forest products. Forestry is coming to the front as a big factor in farm relief and a solution of our idle land problem, as well as an independent industry. Forests are essential for the protection of water powers and the prevention of floods.

Need for information on the rate of growth and other tree factors is being met in the mountain region of Georgia by a research party now in the field. The Appalachian Forest Experiment Station is co-operating with the Georgia state forest service and the Georgia Experiment Station in this survey of mountain forest conditions and will soon publish an interesting report. The remarkable growth and reproduction of yellow poplar will be fully covered in this report and other tree species, including some of the oaks, have been found recently to show surprising rates of growth on the best sites.

Experimental Forest.

A research forest of approximately 200 acres, now under the management of the Georgia Experiment Station, is being developed in Union county as the working center for the mountain region of Georgia, and on one of the near-by national forests is found the best stand of yellow poplar in the United States. This poplar stand is 53 years old and has reached a height growth of 140 feet, and a growth in diameter of 18 1-2 inches at breast-high measurement above the ground.

The most promising sign for the future in some of our mountain counties is the fact that so little fire damage has occurred in the past 15 years, and the rapid growing young timber on old abandoned farm lands and cut-over forest land is in striking contrast with the status that has been attained by virgin hardwood forests in this section. As soon as the old timber is cut we find that fast-growing young hardwoods and pines are giving better values than the old in both quantity and quality, if fire prevention is continued.

Every section of Georgia is blessed with a long growing season and rapidly growing tree species that offer us the industrial supremacy that Dr. Herty predicts, and the wise suggestions of Dr. Herty for local capital would hasten this era if Georgia business men will take action along this linge.

Georgia Pictorial Charts

A set of Georgia pictorial charts have been published by the Georgia Pictorial Chart Company of Atlanta. One shows the official seals of the state from the first used by the board of trustees of the Georgia Colony, 1732 to 1752, to the forged or substitute seal used by the carpetbag government in 1868.

The companion chart to this is a printed copy of the charter which was granted to the trustees for the founding, establishing and maintaining of the colony of Georgia in 1732.

The other two charts give a striking likeness of James Edward Oglethorpe and a reproduction of a painting of Tomochichi and his grandnephew, Toonahowi.

The charts were originated and compiled by William Stafford Irvine, of Atlanta. W. Wailie Thomas, of Atlanta, co-operated in the compilation and publication.

Suggests Bond Issues For Loans to Unemployed

Editor Constitution: I have read with interest the many plans submitted to your newspaper, as well as to other publications, for improving the unemployment situation and general business stagnation. A number of these plans are indeed excellent, but the relief is for the future rather than the pressing need of the present.

Help must come soon. Looking to the state or government for aid may be considered a good plan, but these tre slow-moving bodies with much red tape and political impediments to be untangled before action is actually taken, and empty stomachs cannot wait for the benefits they offer for the future.

The plan I now submit is as follows: That the Chambers of Commerce in each community sponsor a bond issue of an amount that will procure as a loan for every man and woman of good character in need of financial assistance $200 to $500, this amount to be based on the responsibility and earning capacity of the applicant; each loan to be indorsed by an equally responsible person; these loans to be paid in 24 equal monthly payments with a reasonable interest and handling charge added. Such bonds, secured by a first lien on the salaries or other incomes of applicants, are as good collateral as any offered to the public. This country has granted huge loans to foreign countries on less collateral value than this plan provides.

There are at least 50,000 people in the state of Georgia alone who would be eligible to receive financial aid, and would avail themselves of such an opportunity to pay debts and replenish their needs. This would put in motion all the wheels of industry and secure work for the unemployed.

Such a plan would release and put in circulation $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 for useful and profitable purposes in this state. With other states falling in line and resorting to this or a similar plan, prosperity would soon be restored.

Georgia Woman Pays Tribute to Young J. Allen

Editor Constitution: I enjoyed reading the article in The Constitution by Bishop Candler, eulogizing the life and works of Young J. Allen.

I knew him well and greatly admired him. He was a dear friend of my father and grandfather. On his numerous visits to Georgia from China he always spent part of his time in his old home town, Lone Oak, near Grantville.

I have seen him dressed in Chinese costume and heard him tell of the customs, habits, etc., of the Chinese.

My grandfather, Judge W. B. Smith, of Atlanta, was guardian for the Houston girls, one of whom Young Allen married. I have a letter written by him when he was attending college at Emory (Oxford), where he graduated. The letter was written to my grandfather.

He was a grand and wonderful man. The world has had but few like him.

Civil War Designation Suggested by Decatur Man

Editor Constitution: I have read with interest your editorial "Civil War or What?"

Would it not be well to always hold that it was a civil war, caused by one section of the country trying to impose a certain unconstitutional condition on another section, and that section resisting, and when the condition was enforced by bayonets, defending themselves?

EVERYDAY QUESTIONS

BY DR. S. PARKES CADMAN.

Questions from Constitution readers are answered daily by the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, radio minister of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Cadman seeks to answer inquiries that appear to be representative of the trends of thought in the many letters which he receives.

Oklahoma City, Okla.

I have tried to live a Christian life since childhood. Am now 51 year old and assailed by doubts and fears. What does it mean for me, a woman of average intelligence, of no special talents or influence to "seek first the Kingdom of God?"

Life's middle period brings its peculiar temptations and infirmities. The heydey and rapture have slipped behind one. Youth's certainties have been daunted by the realization that some things one had hoped for can never be. The pot of gold is still ahead, if anywhere, but the rainbow retreats as one advances. Meanwhile the sun has swung beyond the meridian and slopes toward the west.

Many of the best of men and women have confessed such feelings as depress you. That excellent saint, Jacob Boehme, called this experience "going under the cloud." Yet he could console himself, and so can you, with the reflection of discipleship's joys in the past. At any rate, they were as rich as they are undeniable. Samuel Rutherford, another resplendent star of goodness, who still shines for many of us, declared the cloud would pass and the light shine out again. St. Francis, the beatific figure of medieval Christianity, rejoiced in the shadow as in the radiance. His lamp always burned brightly.

As for your more specific inquiry, I can only say that any person seeking first God's kingdom is confident that everything else subserves that search. It is its own reward. The rule and realm of the Eternal Father are accomplished in you when you can say: "He is my Lord, and whatever He vouchsafes me is for my lasting good." Do not count your gifts. Dedicate them. Put all your selfhood into this supreme pursuit, and doubts and fears will vanish like the morning's mists before the rising dawn.

What are the things of the world in which a Christian may indulge?

Everything in the world and in yourself which you can offer to God's service and that of your fellow men. The late Professor James Denney, in a sermon on "The Cup of the Lord," said in effect that there are some things a Christian ought not to do, some books he ought not to read, some places he ought not to frequent. But he did not particularize as to details because he felt these should be left to the conscience of the individual Christian.

St. Paul laid down the general rule: "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons." Your spiritual intelligence should enable you to distinguish and keep separate those two chalices. Specific prohibitions may prevail against flagrant sins, but the balance of your life is at your own discretion. Direct it by abstention from whatever deadens your soul's susceptibilities to the pure and true. Expand it by refraining from practices which may be harmless for you personally, but are deadly for another. In this connection read the fourteenth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

Above all, do not cramp your goodness or make your religion about as agreeable as an ingrowing toenail. The marvels of God's great universe and man's solid achievements are all yours to enter upon and possess in the name of the Master, remembering that their glory and beauty are yours by right of inheritance.

Do you think that M. Briand's plea for a new and united Europe will be effective?

It is a brave attempt at reconstruction which may prove the beginning of a transformation in that continent which has led the march of civilization since the collapse of the Persian Empire. Even now Europe's supremacy is seconded rather than challenged by America, while at the present time Asia is in revolt against not a few prevailing ideals both of Europe and America.

For the last 16 years the best brains we can muster have tried to place internationalism on a safe foundation. Have they succeeded? The answer is yea and no. We confront the astounding fact that nations are rearming for a prospective conflict which nobody wants save a small group of moral morons. Fear still solicits force and threatens the future. The hope of a peaceful solution of pressing problems still endeavors to banish fear. It is a mixed result.

M. Briand knows the situation as few man can. He is keenly aware of the utter futility of war and equally anxious for the extermination of its social and economic causes. The United States of Europe may be a step in the right direction. But who can predict that it will be taken? And if it were, what would be the outcome unless the devils of greed and glory are cast out of the world's heart?

The Privilege Divine

(A HYMN TO GEORGIA)

I know I shall be leaving you some day—
Dear Georgia, that has been my home so long;
I think though I'll be looking back this way
And listening for the mocking bird's spring song.

My soul shall find your wondrous mountain lands,
Where waterfalls are rushing swiftly by,
And where some spirit Indian maiden stands
As bioth to leave your beauties, dear, as I.

I'll see the cotton growing in your clay,
And peach trees blooming in the valleys, too;
For though I shall be leaving you some day,
I think that God will let me look at you.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

"STRANGE INTERLUDE" PLAYS AT ERLANGER THIS WEEK

Curtain To Rise Each Night At 5:30; Dinner Intermission

The play which is generally considered the very peak in achievement of America's foremost playwright, "Strange Interlude," by Eugene O'Neill, will be presented at the Erlanger theater on Monday, November 10, for a limited engagement of one week by the Theater Guild, Inc., of New York, which produced it in the eastern metropolis early in 1928, where it ran for 73 capacity weeks and was awarded the Pulitzer prize as "the best play of the year."

"Strange Interlude" is undoubtedly the greatest novelty the theater has had in years. It is quite the longest play current, consisting of nine acts, though of course not the first drama of extensive length. It does not depend upon the regular lines of dialogue to tell its complete story, but trusts more to the "asides." By these the hidden thoughts of each character are expressed. Oddly enough there is no apparent interruption of the dialogue, although the action remains static while one character or another is indulging himself in a chat with himself.

The play may be termed an epic of a woman's soul. Nina Leeds is a real creature, swayed by impulse and passion, constantly striving for the happiness which always seems just ahead. Depressed and changed in nature by the shattered romance of her youth, she is buffeted as a pawn of fate in the years that follow, marrying one man, loving another, and facing the sunset of life with a third.

The art of O'Neill is apparent everywhere throughout the nine long acts, during which he presents no superficial, matter-of-fact exposition, but a vibrant, serious, if also curious drama that strips bare the very souls of his men and women.

A carefully chosen cast is promised by the Theatre Guild, Inc., of its own metropolitan players, including Elisabeth Risdon, Leonard Madie, Blaine Cordner, Richard Barbee, Maud Durand, Maurice McRae, Ethel Westley, John J. Burns, Jack Grattan.

Playgoers should bear in mind that the performance begins precisely at 5:30 in the afternoon, with a dinner intermission from 7:40 to 9 o'clock, and the final curtail descends at 11 o'clock.

Grand Offers "Rain or Shine" First 3 Days

"Rain or Shine," one of the merriest movies of the year and "Men of the North," a first-run picture, will be the attractions at Loew's Grand theater this week.

The incomparable comedian, Joe Cook, of vaudeville and circus fame, is the chief feature of the first production. Advance reports from every port claim that the cinema is by far one of the most amusing and unique presentations to come from the studios in many months. As in the legitimate production, the acrobatic Cook takes the part of a circus man, who endeavors to make his buisncs pay, which is recognized as one of hardest accomplishments possible.

For the first time Atlanta will have a chance to see "Men of the North," which features, among others, Gilbert Roland, in the screen adaptation of Williard Mack's sensational play. The picture has been directed by Hal Roach, famous as the man who made the "Our Gang" comedies. Director Roach deserted the field of comedy in order to realize one of his life-long ambitions—to make a movie which has for its keynote exciting melodramatic action.

"Men of the North" is a tale of passion and hate in the great northwest. The narrative is built around the pursuit of a fugitive from justice by the colorful mounted police. The picture was filmed in the Sierras and abounds in striking scenery of the north country.

What Local Screens Offer You This Week

Good Pictures On Cameo Bill During Week

"Let's Go Native," the mad and merry melange of fun, frivolity and music which shows at the Cameo Monday and Tuesday, presents an imposing aggregation of good comedy and music. Jeanette MacDonald and James Hall play the romantic leads. Jack Oakie and Skeets Gallagher provide much of the fun as a wayward taxi driver and a tropical island king, respectively. Kay Francis is the assisting artist. David Newell provides whatever menace one can find in such a bland and uproarious story as "Let's Go Native." Then there are William Austin, Eugene Pallette and Charles Sellon.

Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook appear together in another fascinating talkie—one which ontains an ever greater amount of dramatic and romantic punch than the two earlier successes of these capable favorites. The picture is "Anybody's Woman." It is the feature showing Wednesday and Thursday at the Cameo.

Hoot Gibson, western favorite, gallops onto the Cameo screen Friday and Saturday in his newest shit, "Roaring Ranch." The story deals with the adventurous west at the height of its sizzling speed.

Billie Dove Film Is Palace Feature

The Palace theater presents as its feature attraction for Monday Billie Dove and Clive Brook in "Sweethearts and Wives."

Tuesday Charles Ruggles and Frank Morgan will be seen in "Queen High." Ruggles and Morgan are partners in a garter-producing business who know how to support ladies' garments with their wares but cannot support each others opinions to any degree of pacificism.

The feature attraction for Wednesday, is one of the most absorbing human dramas ever shown on the screen, "The Case of Sergeant Grischa." With the powerful sweep of dramatic action the audience is carried to the war-torn years of 1917-18. It is not a war picture in the customary sense of the term, although its setting is military and its characters live under the dread shadow of war. The cast includes Betty Compson, Chester Morris and Jean Hersholt.

"Safety in Numbers," with Charles "Buddy" Rogers, is the feature attraction for Thursday and Friday. Saturday brings Ronald Colman and Ann Harding in "Condemned."

Still Shes "Not Damaged."

FOUR SUPER FEATURES BILLED AT PARAMOUNT

Doc Wadkins, manager of the Paramount theater, made one of the most interesting announcements that have greeted talking picture fans for many moons, when he gave out his list of feature attractions for the next four weeks. Manager Wadkins received a confirmatory telegram from the New York office, the result of some strenuous effort for special bookings for his house and the result reads like big times ahead for talkie fans in Atlanta. Look at the list:

Beginning Saturday, comes Harold Lloyd's latest and best and funniest picture, "Feet First." This is said to outdo "Safety Last," and shows the popular spectacled comedian in a typical Lloyd role, with some new ideas in laugh situations thrown in. The supporting cast includes the lovely Barbara Kent, Lillian Leighton, Robert McWade, Alex Francis, etc.

Following this will come "Fast and Loose," a talking screen production that the studio staff is, literally, raving over. They assert that it is far and away the greatest thing of its kind yet released. It is a laughable romantic drama, driving home the lesson that, while the younger generation may be mad, they're not quite as mad as some of the older ones insist. Four of the cleverest young players yet brought to the screen play the four leading parts. They are Miriam Hopkins (well known to the Broadway stage, but a newcomer to the screen); Charles Starrett, an ideal type of leading man; Henry Wadsworth, the brother of the play, and Carole Lombard, who enacts a chorus girl with whom Henry falls in love.

Next on the list of super-attractions is none other than Marilyn Miller in her new starring vehicle, "Sunny," made from the tremendous stage success of the same name, but made especially for screen purposes and not merely a copy of the stage show.

The fourth of the great quartet of pictures is "Only Saps Work," another tremendously successful comedy, with a cast that includes Leon Errol, Stewart Erwin, Richard Arlen and Mary Brian. To see Leon Errol and his uncontrollable legs in the movies will alone be worth the price of admission several times over.

S. R. O.

by Ralph T. Jones

Most important event on the local horizon for the week is, of course, the engagement of the Theater Guild production of "Strange Interlude" at the Erlanger.

There isn't a theatergoer in Atlanta who doesn't know that the statement a play is to be given by Theater Guild players is ample assurance that the performance will be artistic, delightful and as near perfect as humanly and theatrically possible.

Add to this the fact that "Strange Interlude" is the best thing America's greatest dramatist, Eugene O'Neill, has yet done and the interest is doubled.

Then, for novelty's sake, remember this is the play where the curtain rises at 5:30, where the audience is allowed an hour and a half or so for a dinner intermission, and you have an added, though artificial, tweak to your sense of curiosity.

Should say there will be no doubt about large crowds for each of the six performances. Logically, with that 5:30 opening hour and the length of the play, there will be no matinees.

There has been so much said about the new "Realife" screen and projection at the Fox, there is little comment left for this column. However, I am delighted to see it. Regardless of anything wrong there may be, in minor detail, it is indubitably an improvement and every improvement in the theater, whether it be legitimate or picture theater, is something to be hailed with congratulation and something for which the protagonists—in this case Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—are to be commended.

* * * *

Reports from the Capitol speak highly of the work of Edward G. Robinson, in "East is West." Mr. Robinson is one of the outstanding character actors of the day. He has not been so fortunate in his roles in the past as might have been wished, but he was splendid in "A Lady to Love," with Vilma Banky, and as the head gangster in "Night Ride." His misfortune in both those pictures was that the pictures as a whole weren't as good as his own work.

In "East Is West" he plays the famous role of Charlie Young, the San Francisco Chinaman and, while I haven't seen the picture yet, my agents report he is great.

* * * *

Rebuilding of the entrance to the Rialto should make the downtown house more attractive from the outside, at least. Of course, material surroundings haven't much to do with the quality of the screen entertainment, but anyone who thinks the Rialto doesn't provide good value for the price of admission is woefully misinformed.

Some of the most entertaining pictures of past months have been shown at this theater and the fact that their programs don't take as long as some of the other theaters—they haven't any extras to take up time—the very fact that you can slip in, enjoy a good picture, and be out in not over 90 minutes, is recommendation to many people whose time is of value.

* * * *

The announcement by Manager Doc Wadkins of the coming attractions for his theater, the Paramount, indicate the beginning of better times on local screens. Actually, the talking picture offerings of the past two or three months haven't been anything like as good as they were a year ago. Even the ones we have classed as best have only seemed great by comparison with the contemporary productions.

Such a list as Manager Wadkins has for the next four weeks, however, should presage a general improvement all along the line.

* * * *

Whether you have been an admirer of Billie Dove or not, in the past, it is well worth your time to pay a visit this week to the Georgia. In "One Night at Susie's" Miss Dove demonstrates, perhaps for the first time, that she has the making of a first-rate actress as well as being a beautiful woman. Maybe she is "coming out" of her lesser shell into better things, just as Nancy Carroll did when the Hollywooden powers that be provided better vehicles.

And the picture also presents an individual performance by Helen Ware that is one of the outstanding character creations of the season. Also, it is a picture that has dared to be true to life, regardless of the susceptibilities it may rub. All of which is all to the good.

Hoisting Two Jolly Rogers.

"Buddy" Rogers assumes increased dignity with his advertised name changed to Charles.

But who would recognize William Rogers, the chewing gum exploiteer, as star of "So This Is London"?

In terms of film titles "Dames Ahoy!" "Make Way for a Sailor" indicate "The Fleet's In."

"The Battle of the Ladies" will, presumably, be waged with puffs, and face powder and will start from scratch.

Rialto To Show "Common Clay" For First Half

In making of "Common Clay," the Fox movietone dramatic sensation coming to the Rialto theater tomorrow, a considerable number of prominent film people "made their debut" with the Fox organization, after establishing their reputations at other studios.

Constance Bennett, who plays a leading role; Lew Ayres, in the chief masculine part; Beryl Mercer, Matty Kamp, Charles McNaughton, Purnell B. Pratt and Genevieve Blinn, as well as Director Victor Fleming and Scenarist Jules Furthman, are among those who make their initial Fox venture in this production.

The vogue for "westerns" has definitely taken hold of movie producers. A novel one opens at the Rialto theater Thursday. It is "Call of the West," a Columbia all-talking production with Dorothy Revier and Matt Moore in the leading roles. Romance abounds and the refreshing outdoor sequences are pleasantly interspersed with gay glimpses of Broadway night life.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

"Renegades," on Screen at Fox, Is Story of Foreign Legion

Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy Star in Thrilling Feature.—Stage Show Is Fanchon and Marco's "Box O'Candy."

"Renegades," Fox movietone feature, with Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, is the feature attraction on the big talking screen at the Fox theater this week. It is a story of the French Foreign Legion and is said to be the first production of this type which is equal, on the talking screen, to "Beau Geste" in the days of silent movies.

Warner Baxter is said to have a finer role, as "Deucalion," the French army officer who makes such a gallant fight against unkind fate, than anything he has done. His versatility makes him equally attractive in this type of role as he was in "Such Men Are Dangerous" and as the western bandit in his "Arizona Kid" pictures.

Myrna Loy is beyond question the most alluring actress for adventuress and villainess roles on the screen today. In this picture she plays the part of a woman spy who has lured many men to disgrace and whose irresistible charms are responsible for a number of disgraced men who are hiding their identities in the Foreign Legion.

On the Fox stage the Fanchon and Marco "idea" for the week is "Box o' Candy." It is replete with sweet samples of feminine loveliness and carries out the "idea" behind its name with a score or more of "candy babies" of exquisite beauty and grace. One of the remarkable features is a "Cane" tap dance, in which the Sunkist Beauties use big candy sticks around which to build their clever and fascinating routine.

Featured performers in the stage production include Jones and Hull, a team of star comedians; Frank Hamilton, a comedy singer whose numbers are marked by their originality of idea; Reeves and Lew, who do the greatest bit of eccentric doll dancing the vaudeville stage has yet evoked, and Marie, Lucy and Irene, a delicious trio of song and dance artists. The stage settings are, as usual with Fanchon and Marco productions, modern, sensational and picturesque.

Mel Ruick and his Musicians have another group of new orchestra numbers, while Al Evans continues his popular work at the console of the big organ. And the short added attractions on the screen include a splendid comedy and a carefully edited edition of Fox Movietone News.

The story of "Renegades" is about four members of the Legion, a Frenchman, an American, a German and a Russian. The Frenchman has been tricked and disgraced by the woman spy and it is his efforts for revenge which lead him into adventures of gripping suspense and which cause him to be branded by his comrades as a renegade. At the end of the picture there is a battle between the Legionnaires and a horde of wild Arab tribesmen that is one of the most realistic things of its kind ever shown and heard on the screen.

Included in the supporting cast are Noah Beery, Gregory Gaye, George Cooper, C. Henry Gordon, Colin Chase and Bela Lugosi.

"Common Clay" Opens Week at Empire

Bringing one of the most noted of stage dramas to the speaking screen with Constance Bennett and Lew Ayres in the leading roles, "Common Clay," Fox movietone, will be Monday and Tuesday's screen feature at the Empire theater, corner of Georgia avenue and Crew street.

Jack Holt and Ralph Graves star in "Hell's Island," which is scheduled on Wednesday. Billie Dove, the popular star, comes to the Empire Thursday in her latest picture, "The Painted Angel," a story of the cabarets along the Great White Way.

Picture fans who like Richard Dix in the red-blooded roles which brought him screen fame again will see their favorite in this type of characterization on Friday when "Shooting Straight" will be shown for one day only. "Amateur Nite" will be an added feature Friday at 8 o'clock. A ripsnorting western is billed for Saturday, with Ken Maynard in his latest all-talkie, "Sons of the Saddle."

RKO Capitol Now Showing 'East Is West'

Lupe Velez, Lew Ayers and Edward Robinson in Principal Roles of Great Play.

That never-to-be-forgotten drama of the little Chinese girl, destined for slavery on the one of those infamous Chinese "love-boats," and the young American boy who saves her from her fate, "East is West," is the current attraction at the Capitol theater this week.

The play, which ran for three years on Broadway with Fay Bainter in the starring role, has been made into an equally delightful talking picture by Universal, with Lupe Velez playing the part of Ming Toy; Lew Ayres, who leaped to fame in "All Quiet," as the American boy and Edward S. Robinson, the famous character actor, as the Chinese villain, Charlie Young.

It is a picture of peculiar appeal to all lovers of romance and to all admirers of bravery in the face of stupendous danger. The manner in which the boy and girl sweethearts overcome every obstacle, from the owner of the "love boat," on which little Ming is a slave girl, to the objections of the boy's wealthy American family, creates a plot of interest so intense that the audience literally lives the story with the characters.

Directed by Monta Bell, the story is told with remarkable realism while the settings, both in that portion of the story laid in Shanghai and old China, and the part which takes place in San Francisco's Chinatown and in American homes of wealth, are ideal.

In addition to splendid performances by the three principals, Lupe Velez, Lew Ayres and Edward G. Robinson, there are other actors who help make the picture the outstanding success it has been wherever shown. These include E. Allyn (Fred) Warren, whose portrayal of a Chinese of the old school is so realistic it is hard to believe it is not a real Oriental in the role. Mary Forbes, as the boy's mother; Henry Kolker, as Mr. Benson, and Edgar Norton, as the butler, likewise give splendid performances.

In addition to the feature, the Capitol program includes several screen shorts of more than customary interest, including an exceptionally clever comedy and some absorbing shots in the latest release of Universal Sound News.

West End Offers Excellent Program

Monday brings Billie Dove in "Sweethearts and Wives." Billie is the industrious "femme de chambre" at a lonely inn. Sidney Blackmer and Leila Hyams are the lovers and Clive Brook plays the part of Reginald De Brett, a divorce detective. An excellent plot is woven into this story.

"Queen High" with Charles Ruggles and Frank Morgan, two Broadway veterans of fun-making, are offered Tuesday. Stanley Smith and Ginger Rogers are the romantic leads. "Hit the Deck," with Jack Oakie, Polly Walker and one thousand others, will be the feature attraction Wednesday.

Thursday and Friday "Buddy" Rogers will be starred in "Safety in Numbers," assisted by Kathryn Crawford, Josephine Dunn and Carol Lombard. Buddy is the rich young man for whom all the girls fall and he believes there is "safety in numbers." Saturday brings William Powell in "For the Defense." Kay Francis again plays the feminine lead opposite Powell.

"Strange Interlude" Players

YAARAB TO GET FOX RECEIPTS THURSDAY

Some people may think the 13th day of the month is unlucky, but Noble William A. Fuller, potentate of Yaarab temple, is not on that list; in fact, he is inclined to think it is one of the best days of the month, as he has chosen it for one of the big fall events of Yaarab temple.

Under the provisions of the lease of the Shrine auditorium to the Fox Theater Corporation, Yaarab temple reserved the right to use the auditorium six days in every year, and, by special arrangement with the management, one of those days in 1930 will be Thursday, November 13. Instead of the temple using it for Shrine purposes, the regular Fox performances will be given and Yaarab temple will receive all money taken in for admission, minus a small overhead charge.

There will be no change in prices nor in the hours of each performance, but as Yaarab temple will reap a rich financial harvest if the auditorium is packed to the roof for every performance, the Nobles of the oasis of Atlanta and surrounding territory not only plan to attend the Fox theater on Thursday with their families, but are making it their business to see that none of their friends fail to see the splendid shows at the Fox that day.

Manager Carter Barron and the entire staff of the Fox theater are cooperating with the officers of Yaarab temple in every way to make the day a big success and highly profitable to the temple.

Shearer Feature At Alamo No. 2

The so-called divorce problem has had many expositions at the hands of dramatists and scenarists, but perhaps never before from the amazing viewpoint of "The Divorcee," Norma Shearer's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer talking vehicle, which appears Monday only at Alamo No. 2 theater.

Remaining distinctly human, with no tinge of the academic, the picture casts a new light on modern divorce, and, incidentally, affords Miss Shearer one of the most startling, as well as the most charming roles of her career.

Chester Morris plays opposite Miss Shearer and gives an intensely human characterization as the husband. Robert Montgomery and Conrad Nagel, as the divorcee's lovers, play their roles with deft artistry. The intelligent direction of Robert Z. Leonard is apparent in every scene.

"Common Clay" Heads Buckhead Program

Beautiful Constance Bennett and Lew Ayres are co-starred in "Common Clay," which comes to the Buckhead theater Monday and Tuesday. The story has to do with a girl of "common clay" who makes a misstep, tries to go straight, wages a hopeless fight until her courage brings undreamed of happiness. A distinguished cast is headed by Tully Marshall, Beryl Mercer and Matty Kemp.

"The Locked Door," United Artists' romantic drama, will be shown Wednesday. The picture's boast of an all-star cast is well justified in the performances of Rod LaRocque, Barbara Stanwyck, Betty Bronson and William Boyd.

Thursday and Friday brings to the screen the celebrated international Cyril Maude in "Grumpy," his world-famous comedy success. Frances Dade, blond and beautiful, has the feminine lead. The picture for Saturday is "Inside the Lines," featuring Betty Compson and Ralph Forbes. Another episode of the interesting serial, "The Green Archer," will be shown. An amateur contest on the stage at 8 o'clock Saturday evening completes a week of unusual entertainment.

Jack Oakie Film Offered at DeKalb

"The Sap From Syracuse," Jack Oakie's latest laugh riot, opens the holiday week's entertainment at the DeKalb theater in Decatur Monday. Snappier than ever, and ten times funnier, Oakie produces laughs aplenty in this comedy riot.

Tuesday, Armistice Day, will offer a double feature program. First Richard Dix will be featured in "Shootin' Straight" and second Rin-Tin-Tin in "Rough Waters." Robert Montgomery, Leila Hyams and Elliot Nugent will be seen in "Sins of the Children" Wednesday.

Thursday and Friday, "Manslaughter," featuring Claudette Colbert and Fredrick March, will be offered. This picture is a new revelation in emotion-stirring melodrama and one that will be remembered for quite a while.

Saturday Warner Baxter will be the featured star in "The Arizona Kid." Starring in his greatest role as a quick-shooting but quicker love-making bad man, Warner Baxter registers to the heights of his screen career.

Harold Lloyd In 'Feet First' At Paramount

Spectacled Comedian Has Funniest Story Yet in Romance of Shoe Clerk.

You all remember Harold Lloyd's breath-taking and hilarious stunts as a human fly in "Safety Last?" In his newest picture, "Feet First," which is showing this week at the Paramount theater, the spectacled comedian elaborates on this theme with improvements and gags that outdo the earlier one by miles of laughs.

The story of "Feet First" is about a young clerk in a chain shoe store at Honolulu. Ambitious, his absent-minded wool-gathering gets him into all sorts of trouble and he is in danger of losing his job when the owner of the chain, Robert McWade, comes to the islands for a visit. He is accompanied by his wife, Lillian Leighton, and her social secretary, Barbara Kent. Harold sees Barbara and promptly falls in love, to the further disturbance of his efficiency as a clerk.

Harold thinks that Barbara is a wealthy heiress and he proceeds to pose before her as an idle man of wealth himself, much to her disgust, because she had hoped he was as poor as she is herself.

The complications that ensue are typical of a Harold Lloyd story, with laugh after laugh, with a touch of pathos and romance typical of an all good picture. But the situation reaches its climax when Harold, after stowing away on the liner in which Barbara and her employers are returning to the states, finds himself in position to save his sweetheart from losing her job. To do this he must reach San Francisco a day ahead of the steamer. He jumps into a mail bag which is among the mail to be rushed ashore by plane. When he struggles out of the bag he finds himself caught on a narrow painter's platform hanging high up outside a tall building. And everyone can imagine the complications that ensue, to the danger of the audiences' ribs and to the successful climax of a splendid picture.

In addition to Harold himself, Barbara Kent, Lillian Leighton and Robert McWade, the notable performances in the cast include those of Alex Francis and Noah Young, as an old shoe clerk and a ship's officer, respectively.

The added attractions on the week's program at the Paramount include a clever short comedy feature, a cartoon comic, Paramount Sound News, another Knute Rockne football special and a "popular favorites" program at the organ, by Adolph Goebel, that will not only surprise but delight a lot of well-known Atlantans.

McCormick Feature Open Tenth Street

"Song o' My Heart" is the opening attraction at the Tenth Street theater Monday. This picture features the world-famous singer, John McCormick. Maurine O'Sullivan is the leading lady.

Tuesday brings "Dynamite," featuring Charles Bickford, Kay Johnson, Conrad Nagle and Julia Faye. Wednesday's picture is "Vengeance," featuring Jack Holt and the beautiful Dorothy Revier. This is a powerful love story silhouetted against the colorful background of the Congo.

The feature attraction for Thursday and Friday is "Manslaughter," starring Claudette Colbert and Frederic March. Saturday offers the loveable Billie Dove in her sensational drama, "Sweethearts and Wives."

"One Night at Susie's" Dramatic Production on Georgia Screen

Billie Dove Stars in Powerful Play of Crookdom — Harry Carroll's "Revuette" Is Chief Attraction on Stage Program.

The Georgia theater this week is offering a talking screen feature that is remarkable, both by reason of its thrill-packed dramatic power, and for the astonishing emotional acting of Billie Dove, the star. Miss Dove, whose claims to stardom have hitherto been chiefly based upon her ranking as the most beautiful woman on the screen, proves in this picture, "One Night at Susie's," that she is also to be counted among the half dozen most gifted actresses of the day.

The story of the feature is one of the struggle between a mother and a sweetheart for the boy they both love. It is played before a background of crooks and the underworld and is as enthralling as a picture as it was when it was the sensation of the year as a popular magazine serial.

In addition to the feature, the Georgia this week has a stage show of special importance. It is the latest vaudeville production by Harry Carroll, whose fame as a producer in this field is as great as that of Flo Ziegfeld in his. It is called a "Revuette," and is a complete show, sparkling with color and light, with gorgeous stage settings and performers chosen for their cleverness and footlight popularity.

Among the featured performers in the "Revuette" are Eddie Bruce, a young comedian who is hailed as the "find" of the season on the vaudeville stage; Harry Carroll himself and Maxine Lewis in a cycle of sparkling new songs composed by Mr. Carroll; Harry Foster Welch, the famous "one-man band," and Gaynor and Byron, in a picturesque novelty skating act.

In addition there are a dozen girls, each a specialty performer of high standards of excellence, and most of them quite capable of carrying off first prize in any beauty contest.

The added attractions of the program include a colorful overture by the Georgia grand orchestra, a novelty program at the wonder organ, Paramount Sound News, a screen song, "On a Sunday Afternoon," and other short subjects.

The story of the feature, "One Night at Susie's," is about a woman fence, the confidante of many crooks, who is determined to bring up her boy as an honest man and respected citizen. He falls in love with a chorus girl and it is the mother's struggle to prevent this, to her, undesirable marriage, that results in sending him to the "big house," and in forcing the girl into a situation few playwrights have dared to introduce into their stories. The climax is frank and bold, yet logical, and the plot comes to its startling conclusion through a maze of situations that hold every audience enthralled and thrilled.

Doug Fairbanks, Jr., plays the role of the boy, while Helen Ware contributes one of the finest pieces of acting of the year as "Susie." Others in the cast are Tully Marshall, James Crane, John Loder and Claude Fleming.

An extra added attraction of great interest locally, is a picture showing Bobby Jones in his greatest matches. He shows how he makes the strokes that have brought him so much golfing fame and demonstrates the secret of that precision which is miraculous to the average golfer. The picture is aptly enough, called "Par and Double Par."

Blonde Rivals Brunette in Stage Allure

Here's a chance to determine your preferences in feminine charms. The blonde, at the left above, is one of the "Box o' Candy" girls at the Fox this week. They are better than ever Sunkist Beauties of the Fanchon and Marco type. At the right is Peggy White, one of a dozen reasons why connoisseurs of pulchritude will not overlook Harry Carroll's "Revuette" on the Georgia stage program.

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

BY JESSE O. THOMAS.

As an emblem or symbol of favorable response to the appeal of the Community Ches., as a means of distinguishing those who contribute from those who have not given, the campaign committee of the Community Chest has agreed upon the policy of giving every subscriber a red feather to put in his hat. This red feather will be so significant as an indicator of social vision on the part of the wearer, the cause under consideration and the worthiness of the member agencies, the red feather group will show such a line of demarcation between those who care and those who seem not to c re that it is expected every person in Atlanta, white and colored, who is in a position to give will contribute so as to be counted among those who are "loving their neighbors as themselves" including their unfortunate neighbors. So enthusiastic and determined is J. W. Dobbs, the general chairman, and so hopeful is he of the universal response that he said at the last general meeting, "We shall make it a disgrace and humiliation for any person to be seen who does not wear a red feather between November 12 and 25."

Rev. J. W. Word, one of the leading presiding elders of the C. M. E. church, provoked prolonged and sustained applause when he stated, "I not only want a red feather in my hat, I want a $25 red feather," which means that Brother Word is going to subscribe $25 toward the support of the Chest. How is that for the pupit? How many other members of the "cloth aristoc cy" will join their fellow comrade with a red feather of equal valuation? There will be many who can give only $1 and that $1 will represent as great a sacrifice on their part as the Reverend Word's $25. There will be a red feather in their hats, however. The main thing is that everybody must have a red feather. There are some who can pay more than the Reverend Word and many who will have to pay less, but most of us can pay enough to entitle us to a red feather.

The house-to-house campaign committee has as its slogan, "A Dollar from Every House Canvassed!" The enthusiasm of the campaign is becoming contagious. Dr. Butler, head of the organization committee, has already begun to collect some cash, believe it or not! This grand master of 30 years is a grand manager. The big gifts committee has begun to organize and select its personnel. Follow the lead of the Reverend Word and wear a red feather between November 12 and 27!

The committee with H. S. Barnwell as chairman, who has charge of the schedule of ways and means of entertaining the Interracial Seminar which will be in the Gate City November 14 and 15, has announced the following program for these days: When the party arrives at the Peachtree Station at 9:30 Friday morning, they will be met and conducted on a sight-seeing trip over Atlanta, taking in the points of interest, but paying particular attention to the negro colleges, public schools, parks, business section and residential section, emphasis being placed upon the bad as well as the good points. This trip is under the direction of Rev. W. J. Faulker. Lunch will be served at Morehouse College, after which discussions led by the following persons will take place at a meeting: "Background Negro Life in Atlanta," Dr. John Hope; "Local Interracial Committee," W. A. Bell; "Negro Public Schools," A. T. Walden; "Negro Social Welfare Problems," F. B. Washington; "Negro In the Courts," T. W. Holmes; "Labor Situation," C. W. Washington. It happens that each of these men is a leader in the particular field about which he will talk. Dinner will be served at Clark University in the evening, after which a discussion of negro womanhood will be led by Mesdames Kemper Harreld, C. M. Pitts, Tobie Grant, George Washburn and Miss Dobbs.

On Saturday morning at 8 o'clock, breakfast will be served at Spelman College. A meeting will be held at the Y. M. C. A. at 10 o'clock, at which time the discussion will center around "Religion As It Relates to the Negro Church," with the following leaders: B. E. Mays, Dr. D. D. Crawford, President M. S. Davage, President W. A. Fountain, Rev. A. B. McCoy, Dr. Howard Thurman and Dr. C. B. Hubert. After lunch the visitors will depart to other climes.

The week of November 9 to 15 has been selected as National Negro Achievement Week by the Omega Psi Phi fraternity which is an annual week observed by this organization in order to acquaint all groups, creeds, classes and colors of the American public with concrete examples of the negro's contributions to civilization in general as well as particular fields. During the week the local chapters will send speakers to the various schools and other public meeting places to give information relative to some of the most important achievements of our group in various fields. As a grand finale to all the features of the week, the Atlanta chapters will present "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," a cantata by Coleridge Taylor, the great colored English composer, at the First Congregational church Sunday evening, November 16, at 8 o'clock. This musical feast will be rendered by a chorus of picked voices and an orchestra under the direction of Professor Kemper Herreld, a member of the Omega fraternity and of the faculty of Morehouse College. Anyone who has witnessed one of these treats under the baton of this accomplished musician will not have to be urged to attend "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast." The admission is free and the public is most cordially invited to come out and show its appreciation of the accomplishments of the group.

In extending a personal invitation to the members of the Congregational convention of Georgia and South Carolina to be present at the fortieth annual convention to be held in the Gate City on November 19 through the 23, Rev. W. J. Faulkner said in part: "Everything is being done for your comfort, your enjoyment, and inspiration. You will miss a wonderful experience if you fail to come and we will be greatly disappointed. . . . Elaborate plans have been perfected for you to see historic points of interest about this wonderful city Saturday afternoon. Then on the Sabbath, we will all "worship and bow down and kneel before the Lord our Maker" and enjoy a spiritual feast at morning and evening services. On Sunday afternoon Secretary George N. White, who witnessed the jubilee celebration in Angola during the year, has been invited to deliver the principal address and is expected to have a challenging message.

The public is cordially invited to both daily and evening sessions.

'King and Queen' To Be Selected By Fulton High

Fulton High school's king and queen are to be crowned Friday night at a festival to be given in the school auditorium, participated in by students, members of the faculty and the Parent-Teachers' Association of the school.

The festival, plans for which were announced Saturday by Principal R. L. Ramsey, is to be given to obtain funds for the installation of a modern library in the school, which is to be named after Joe Brown, on the site of whose property the school now stands.

The king and queen are to be voted this week, each vote costing one cent, the funds to be derived going into the school's general library fund.

"For some time the students have felt the lack of an adequate library and there are no funds available from which we might acquire one," Mr. Ramsey said. "The pupils are working enthusiastically with members of the faculty and the P.-T. A. and we feel sure that after Friday night's carnival we will have enough to start on our library."

WIFE OF WASHINGTON PUBLISHER PASSES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Mrs. Jeanne Whelan, wife of Nicholas J. Whelan, publisher of the Washington Times and Herald, died today after an illness of several months.

Physicians said she had gradually lost strength since the death of her only son, Nicholas, Jr., a year ago. Mr. Whelan and a daughter, Rose, survive.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday from her former home in Holland, Mich.

MOTHER, 3 CHILDREN ARE FATALLY BURNED

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A mother and her three children were burned to death today in a fire which destroyed their Dare county home.

Neighbors said Mrs. Barnett came to their home at 4 a. m., carrying her baby and called to them for aid.

She returned to the fire immediately and, still carrying the baby, rushed into the house to save the two older children. She never returned.

RUNAWAY TROLLEY KILLS 2, INJURES 4

CINCINNATI, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Two boys were killed today and three other children and a policeman were injured seriously by a runaway street car which got beyond control of a motorman. The trolley crashed into a motionless automobile and hurled the machine into the group of children, who were being led across a street by the officer.

Merchant Shot.

WEBB, Miss., Nov. 8.—(AP)—J. D. Thompson, 55, merchant, was shot to death here today. Authorities here and at Clarksdale, Miss., said he killed himself because his daughter, Ollie Thompson, 19, had been arrested in connection with a North Carolina Mann act case.

Miss Lynch Returns.

Miss Kathryn Lynch and her guest, Miss Clara Jackson, of Albertville, Ala., return today to Wesleyan College, in Macon. After spending the week-end in Atlanta.

MANY RETAIL GROCERS TO REMODEL STORES

Many retail grocers of Atlanta, in addition to several out-of-town, expect to remodel and re-equip their stores as a result of the showing of the Atlanta model store which was opened at 72 Broad street, N. W., by the Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' Association.

The store will remain open until next Saturday. The store was planned as an educational exhibit to show the small retailer how a store should be arranged and the stock displayed so as to increase the volume of business and reduce overhead expense.

Visitors from all over the state have seen the store and many said they would remodel. Nearly 100 exhibitors, including manufacturers, jobbers and food brokers, displayed their products.

The Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' Association will hold its November meeting Tuesday night at the Chamber of Commerce, and will adjourn to the model store.

HANAN & SON ADDS STYLIST TO FORCE

Miss Sara Howard has been appointed manager of the hosiery and bag department of Hanan & Son, 170 Peachtree street, it was announced Saturday. Miss Howard has had extensive training and experience as a stylist, and the management of the shop in acquiring her services believes it is materially improving its facilities. Recently Miss Howard returned from New York, where she purchased her new fall lines and specialties for the holiday trade.

MISS HOWARD.

WORK OF GERMAN ARTISTS IS SHOWN

A notable exhibition of the work of two distinguished modern German artists, Fritz Paul Zimmer and Karl Wagner, will be held in the library at Oglethorpe University Wednesday and Thursday from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the afternoon, open to the public, it was announced Saturday.

A director of the art department at Oglethorpe, Mr. Zimmer, will exhibit a number of bronzes, including portrait busts of several well-known Atlantans, and ag roup of historical and Biblical subjects. Mr. Wagner's exhibition will include a wide range of subjects in oil, pastel and crayon.

87-YEAR-OLD GENERAL WOULD WED SECRETARY

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Brigadier-General Charles H. King, 87, veteran of five wars, today revealed his hopes for an early marriage to Miss Lucille Rhodes, his former secretary. The latter declined to be interviewed.

The general described Miss Rhodes in glowing terms, testifying to her self-sacrifice in aiding her family and others, but said "there is no definite engagement—you'll have to speak to the lady about that—I have only hopes for an early marriage."

LAW OFFICE
JAS. L. KEY
508 ATLANTA NATIONAL BANK BLDG.
ATLANTA, GA.

November 6, 1930.

Mr. A. R. Dorsen,
General Manager J. M. High Company,
Atlanta, Ga.

My dear Mr. Dorsen:

I was attracted by the timely message of J. M. High Company in last Sunday's Constitution presenting your progress and confidence idea.

As Mayor-Elect, I have had occasion to give this subject deep thought in the interest of the public welfare, and I have found that the general lack of confidence and the foreboding fears of the people is largely responsible for the present conditions.

The fact that you have determined upon a plan of keeping all of your employees displays in actual experience that business courage and confidence that it is necessary to have everywhere in order that normal conditions may be rapidly reestablished. Constant efforts among all lines of business in the particular line of action which you have taken is a sure cure for the economic conditions for which we now suffer, and I was delighted to see your company take a definite lead in this matter.

When the business of this country puts to work at profitable employment everybody who can and will work, the trouble will be over.

JLK:EC

Yours very truly,

Jas L Key

Miss Bradshaw and Mr. Rahr Wed in Athens in February

Miss Julia Bradshaw, daughter of Mrs. William Francis Bradshaw, of Athens, whose engagement is announced today to Frederick Hill Rahr, of Rutherford, N. J., the wedding to take place in February, date announced later. She studied at Bryn Mawr College and at Miss Medeira school, Washington, and is a belle and beauty, socially prominent. Mr. Rahr is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Emil Rahr, of Brookline, Mass. He is a member of the Flint Kote Corporation, of Boston, Mass. Both are from wealthy, distinguished families.

Theater Guild Lecturer Speaks At High Museum

The Drama Workshop, of which Miss Nan Stephens is director, will present Mrs. Samuel Scott, foremost American lecturer on current drama, this evening at 8 o'clock in the High Museum of Art on Peachtree street. Mrs. Scott represents the Theater Guild of New York, under whose direction the play "Strange Interlude" will be given each night of this week at the Erlanger theater. Since her arrival in Atlanta a few days ago, Mrs. Scott has spoken to the students of Washington Seminary, Oglethorpe University and Emory College where she was received with much enthusiasm.

Mrs. Scott spoke yesterday at the University of Georgia and tomorrow she will go to Brenau College where she will address the student body there.

In the large American cities where Mrs. Scott has spoken she has received unanimous praise by her hearers and flattering comment by the press critics.

Mrs. Scott is not only a sincere speaker but has the rare ability to enthuse her hearers with the desire to see plays. Her fund of information has been gleaned from personal experience in attending the theater and meeting the significant people in the drama world, and with her clear, critical sense she interprets these experiences with wit and interest.

In a recent visit to Europe Mrs. Scott enjoyed the distinction of being one of America's first women who have interviewed George Bernard Shaw. In her lecture this evening she will tell her audience of meeting the great Shaw and also of her impressions gained at the opening performance of "The Apple Cart" in Malvern, England.

During her few days' stay in Atlanta this prominent American reader and speaker has been entertained by a number of leading Atlantans whose friendship she made two years ago when she spoke here in the interest of the Theater Guild to the Drama League and Writers' Club. An invitation is extended by members of the Drama Workship to those interested in drama to attend the lecture this evening which is free of any charge.

U. D. C. Delegates Journey To Asheville for Convention

BY MRS ADA RAMP WALDEN, Of Augusta, Editor.

Only one more week and from more than two-thirds of the states of the Union will assemble in Asheville, N. C., members of the U. D. C., for the general convention. Twice before has the Old North State been hostess: In 1901, when Wilmington, N. C., entertained the eighth annual convention, and our own Mrs. James A. Rounsaville, of Rome, presided; and again in 1920, when Mrs. Roy W. McKinney, of Kentucky, was president general, and the convention assembled in Asheville, "Land of the Sky."

Now at that convention innumerable worth-while achievements will be reported but none, the editor devoutly believes, of greater significance than will be presented from the Georgia division. Among the many things the daughters of the Empire State have accomplished the past year are the placing of 2,037 pictures of Jefferson Davis in schools; the awarding of more than 1,900 medals and prizes to pupils for essays on Confederate subjects; and 437 markers placed in designation of memorial highways or historical sites; 30,094 essays written and the sum of $2,060 expended by Georgia chapters for educational purposes.

A beautiful tribute was made two of Georgia's illustrious sons when Robert E. Lee chapter, U. D. C., Milledgeville, unveiled a marker on the door of the room occupied by Sidney Lanier while at Oglethorpe University. This is now Thalian hall, and was given by Mrs. H. D. Allen for this purpose. The chapter, however, deemed it most fitting to honor at the same time the memory of the late Dr. H. D. Allen, one of the state's outstanding physicians, so the marker serves a dual purpose.

Mrs. R. B. Moore, president of the chapter, paid tribute to Mrs. Allen for her generosity in giving the room in the hall, which is the last of the buildings of old Oglethorpe University. An appropriate program, prepared by Mrs. G. A. Lawrence, comprised contributions by Mrs. J. L. Beeson, Cadel Russell Anthony, Miss Juanita Ingram, Mrs. Davis Ferguson, who paid tribute to the late Dr. Allen as a physician of a half century of service.

Betty Canty Allen and Reynolds Allen, grandchildren of the late Dr. Allen, unveiled the marker, inscribed: "Sidney Lanier room. Memorial to Dr. H. D. Allen, placed by the Robert E. Lee Chapter, U. D. C., 1930."

The chapter expects to make the room one of interest to the public and already has installed several pieces of furniture that were used in Oglethorpe University and hopes to accumulate other relics.

Mrs. O. L. Chivers, Dublin, state chairman of publicity, Georgia division, U. D. C., has been named by the grand jury of Laurens county to write the history of that county in compliance with the law that requires a history of every county to be in the state capitol January 1, 1933, in commemoration of the 200th natal anniversary of the state.

Mrs. W. C. Vereen, Moultrie, Ga., honorary life president of the Georgia division, who attended the recent convention in Albany, announced to the convention that she was just out of bed, after an illness of 10 weeks, but "I just had to come," she assured them.

Mrs. B. W. Gray and Mrs. Harvey Roberts were hostesses Thursday afternoon to the Robert E. Lee chapter, Douglas, which was largely attended. The program, Mrs. Mottle Clark, chairman, was given to the life of Sidney Lanier, the contributors being Miss Clyde Wheless, Miss Margaret Shelton, Mrs. R. B. Evans, Mrs. W. F. Bronson and Miss Ruth Brewer. The social hour following the business meeting was in the nature of a Hallowe'en reception, appropriately carried out in decorations, refreshments and other details.

The T. E. Massengale chapter, Norwood, lost a valued member last week in Mrs. A. L. Surratt, formerly Miss Claude Taylor, of Barnett. Mrs. Surratt was the niece of the late T. E. Massengale, for whom the chapter bears its name, and all over the state are relatives and friends who will mourn her passing.

Mrs. Harris Issues Message To Georgia Division, U. D. C.

To Members of the Georgia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy: Greetings and best wishes.

The convention at Albany is now but a happy memory, but the association with each of you, your never-failing kindness and consideration will ever live in the heart of your president. Old friendships cemented, new ties made and a wonderful spirit of harmony seemed the watchwords of the time spent in beautiful Albany, that city where every thought seemed to be of hospitable intent, and where the men and women seemed among those of God's chosen ones.

We are now nearing the time set for the general convention at Asheville, N. C. It is hoped that a large delegation will attend from our ranks. Chapters which have not sent in their general credentials will please follow instructions as per card issued Sunday by Mrs. Warren D. White, your chairman of general credentials. Those who have not made hotel reservations through your president will apply at Battery Park hotel, Asheville, Georgia delegation headquarters. The chairman of transportation will arrange for a special U. D. C. car leaving Atlanta for Asheville. Her notice will appear shortly.

Mrs. Dismukes, general chairman of transportation, states that identification transportation slips have been mailed to Mrs. J. L. Mims, division chairman of transportation, Hawkinsville, Ga. She will furnish these upon request to any members applying for same. Wishing for you the best of all good things and hoping to see each of you at the general convention,

Faithfully yours,
LYLLIAN H. HARRIS,
President Georgia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Mrs. Mims Issues Transportation Card.

Mrs. J. L. Mims, of Hawkinsville, state chairman of transportation, U. D. C., sends following information to officers and members of U. D. C. who expect to attend general U. D. C. convention in Asheville, N. C.:

Round trip tickets to Asheville will be sold on presentation of identification certificates. Apply to Mrs. J. L. Mims, of Hawkinsville, Ga., for certificates as they have just been delivered to her from general transportation chairman. Rates from territory and on dates and with limits as follows: "From points east of Mississippi and south of Ohio and Potomac rivers, (Georgia being in this zone). Tickets sold from November 15 to 21 inclusive, one and one-half fare with limit November 28. One and three-fifths fare, with limit 30 days added to date of sale.

Mrs. Bashinski Indorsed for State President.

At a meeting of the Sarah E. Hornsby chapter, U. D. C., Ellaville, held Monday, which was attended by an unusually large number of members, Mrs. I. Bashinski, of Dublin, was unanimously indorsed for president of the Georgia division, the election to take place in 1931 at the convention to be held in Dublin. On the same day the Oconee chapter, Dublin, heartily indorsed Mrs. Bashinski's candidacy for that office.

Miami Holds Chicagoan

MIAMI, Fla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Leland Line, 22, Chicago Heights, Ill., was in Dade county jail today in default of $1,500 bond on charges of violating the national motor vehicle theft act. He was arrested by Miami police and arraigned before the United States commissioner here on a charge of transporting a stolen automobile from Steger, Ill., to Miami.

Princess Der Ling To Lecture at Brenau.

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Nov. 6.—Princess Der Ling, formerly of the Manchu court of the late Empress Dowager of China, will lecture at Brenau early in December in the Lyceum series of this season. Other lectures to follow are by the famous Italian historian and philosopher, Dr. Guglielmo Ferrero, and the noted Prince Seesodia, of India, Mr. Jehan Warliker. The course is arranged through the Alkahest Bureau of Atlanta.

Professor Henry Towpsend Southwick, dean of the Emerson College of Oratory, Boston, will give a program at Brenau Wednesday evening, November 11. Professor Southwick is one of the best-known leaders in the field of elocution.

John H. Weygandt, head of Brenau Art Department, contributes by invitation, two pictures in oil entitled "Drifting Clouds," and "A Trout Stream," to the Mississippi Art Association for their annual exhibit to be held in Jackson, Miss.

Saturday evening, November 15, Brenau freshmen will be entertained at the gymnasium by the Y. W. C. A.

Brenau chorus, directed by Professor E. B. Michaelis, dean of the conservatory, will give a program at the Baptist church Wednesday, November 12, before the district meeting of the Georgia Education Association.

Cap and Gown Day takes place Wednesday, November 12, and Dr. Goodrich White, dean of Emory University, Atlanta, an outstanding educator in the south, will deliver the address.

Miss Florence M. Overton, secretary of the alumnae association at Brenau visited Toccoa, Ga., where she was a guest of Mrs. W. A. Bailey and Mrs. Bailey and Mrs. J. B. Cheatham entertained 16 former Brenau students living in Toccoa at a tea. The members presented Miss Overton with copies of the first magazine published by Brenau students back in the 90's. Mrs. Edgar H. Johnson, now of Emory University, was the editor, and Mrs. W. A. Bailey, of Toccoa, was exchange editor. Mrs. J. B. Cheatham, who assisted in entertaining, was formerly Irene Johnson, of the class of '23, and is now the wife of the superintendent of public schools at Toccoa. Miss Overton returned with future reservations for eight granddaughters of Brenau.

An Indian Peace Pipe has been presented to the Brenau Museum by A. B. C. Dorsey, of Gainesville to be placed in the collection of Indian relics of the south now being assembled by the college. An invitation to visit Taccoa, Ga., has been received through Miss Mary Bailey, with the promise to open an Indian mound there that has never yet been examined.

Miss Eliza Holmes, instructor in piano at Brenau, is organist and choir director of the Presbyterian church in Gainesville, and Miss Eugenia Wright, a student in organ at Brenau, is organist and choir director at Grace Episcopal church in Gainesville, are members of Mu Phi Epsilon Sorority, a national honorary musical organization.

Dr. Emile Vuylsteker was honor guest and speaker before the International Relations Club this week, his subject being "The Present Political Situation in Brazil." Dr. Vuylsteker, who is professor of Romance languages, visited Rio de Janerio, Brazil, the past summer.

W. C. T. U. Prize Winners Announced on Official Page

By M. Frances Meadors Burghard, of Macon.

Some of the prizes and awards made at the recent W. C. T. U. convention in Waycross: Atlanta and Macon each won a copy of Professor Irving Fisher's book, "Prohibition Still at Its Worst," for the best and most complete reports, and best proportionate average attendance at regular meetings. Mesdames Water Anthony, of Savannah, and W. E. Smith, of Attapulgus, received subscriptions to The Union Signal for gaining 25 and more members each.

Mrs. W. E. Page, of Columbus, awarded the prize of $10 in gold to the Savannah union, and a prize of $5 in gold to the Columbus Rose Hill union for the best work in the sailors' and soldiers' department. In the child welfare department Mrs. K. L. Reeves, of Atlanta, gave prizes to the Young Matrons' branch in Columbus for the best report, and to the McLendon union in Atlanta for securing the largest number of White Ribbon recruits. East Point was awarded the loyal temperance banner by Mrs. R. H. McDougall, of Atlanta, for the best report of activities.

The state treasurer, Mrs. Wilbur Brown, of Griffin, reported that the Georgia W. C. T. U. had won a prize offered by the W. C. T. U. for the first state in the United States to send 75 per cent of membership dues in the Hold-Fast campaign.

Winners in Essay Contests.

Miss Sarah Anne Wright, of Elberton, director of scientific temperance instruction, gave cash prizes to the following winners in the state temperance essay contest:

Fourth grade, $3 to Augusta Wight, Cairo; honorable mention, Nell Hammond, Elberton.

Third grade, $2 to Margaret Brannon, Cairo; honorable mention, Ruth Sharpton, Elberton.

Winning essays have been sent to compete for national prize.

Winners in temperance poster prizes have had their posters sent for the national contest. They are: High school, $10 to Garrett Middlebroks, of Macon, Lanier Girls' High school; honorable mention, Clara Helton, Tallapoosa. Grades, $7.50 to Wesley Brooks, Tallapoosa; honorable mention, Otis Carter, Pelham; Roy Ben Ridley, Zebulon.

Convention Personals.

Mrs. W. E. Smith, of Attapulgus, was introduced to the convention and given a white ribbon salute for her work in securing 159 new members during the year.

Mr. and Mrs. N. C. McPherson, donors of state W. C. T. U. headquarters in Atlanta, who are making their home in Jacksonville, Fla., were welcome visitors. We hear that they are soon to return to Georgia, and we are glad.

Among those missed from the convention were Mrs. Lella A. Dillard, Cochran, honorary president, who was not strong enough to attend, and Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, advisory, who was speaking at the Tennessee convention.

Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, of Milledgeville, always capable, active, energetic, alert, witty and wise, did more than her part toward making the convention a success. Now we are to have another Mrs. Atkins, her daughter-in-law, as an officer. Mrs. Ewell Atkins is the new state Loyal Temperance Legion secretary.

After the re-election of Mrs. Marvin Williams, who received an ovation, the national vice president and convention guest, Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, of Iowa, paid a tribute to Mrs. Williams, for her state office makes her a vice president of the National W. C. T. U., saying: "No woman who sits on the national executive board is more appreciated than Mrs. Williams. National W. C. T. U. will thank Georgia for returning her."

A new and appreciated member of the convention was Mrs. W. F. Withoft, of Fort Valley. Her devotionals, one, "Go and Tell," and another on the G. W. C. T. U. motto: "Speak Unto the Children of Israel That They Go Forward," were of value to all hearers.

Committee on resolutions for 1930-1931 is composed of Mesdames E. W. Jordan, Sandersville; E. G. Adams, Greensboro; C. E. Burts, Macon, and W. W. Jarrell, Thomasville; committee of finance, Mesdames O. L. Taylor, Atlanta; E. E. Steele, Winder; P. E. Bailey, Camilla; D. A. Warlock, Mason; Alice Harrell, Eastman; advisory, Mrs. Wilbur Brown.

Mrs. A. W. Voight, of Macon, was election manager, and her assistants were: Mesdames O. L. Taylor, Atlanta; George I. Steelem, Waycross; R. H. McDougall, Atlanta; C. C. Mordecai, Savannah; Otis Eason, Quitman; T. D. Power, Columbus; John Epperson, Canton; Ewell Atkins, Milledgeville; Robert Travelutte, Moultrie, and Miss Sarah Anne Wright, Elberton.

A real temperance crusader, Mrs. Rosa M. Toy, of Homeland, told of experiences when she accompanied her mother, with other crusaders in Ohio, to saloons every day and prayed, and besought the men who drank to cease to do so, and the men who sold to give up the business, urging each to lead a Christian life. "When in 50 days this whirlwind of the Lord swept the liquor traffic out of 250 towns and villages." She made striking contrasts between drinking conditions then and now. She said she had been a temperance worker 72 years.

Mrs. Mary Scott Russell led the memorial service, paying tributes to the first president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., Mrs. W. C. Sibley, and to two long-time local presidents of local unions, Mrs. W. C. Horton, of Winder, and Mrs. Lou Jackson, of Cochran.

Miss Lucile Lewis, of Dawson, a missionary to Cuba, told of the W. C. T. U work in Cuba. The W. C. T. U. in Cuba was organized by Mrs. Florence Ewell, of Milledgeville, a number of years ago.

Convention Music.

Haslam-McDearmid Wedding Announced.

FORT VALLEY, Ga., Nov. 8.—Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Haslam, of Fort Valley, announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Elizabeth, to George Allen McDearmid in Rock Island, Ill., which was quietly solemnized Saturday afternoon, October 18, at 3 o'clock, in the presence of a few friends and relatives, with the Rev. E. G. Sandmeyer, pastor of the First Methodist church of Rock Island, performing the ceremony. Mrs. McDearmid was one of Fort Valley's most beautiful and popular young women, member of a prominent family on both maternal and paternal side. After graduation at Fort Valley High school two years ago she studied at Wesleyan two terms, and this fall studied at the Moser school of Chicago, until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. McDearmid will remain in Chicago until the middle of December, when they will come south for the remainder of the winter, making Quincy, Fla., their home.

Mrs. Haslam, the bride's mother, went to Rock Island for the marriage and other relatives in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. Guy Giles, of Chicago, aunt and uncle of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. McDearmid will spend the Christmas holidays with Dr. and Mrs. Haslam in Fort Valley and will be honored with a large reception during their stay in the city.

The visiting matrons will take charge of the initiatory work. The chapter room is at the corner of Lucile avenue and Gordon street. Mrs. Katherine Welb is worthy matron and J. W. Styring is worthy patron. All Eastern Star members are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

Party Is Given At Stroud Home.

A party was given by Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Stroud at their home on Ormewood avenue Saturday evening. Members of the Electrical Workers' Union and Electrical Workers Ladies' Auxiliary were the honor guests. The home was decorated throughout and entertainment consisted of games and contests, also a number of late song hits by the Electrical Workers' quartet. Mrs. Stroud was assisted in entertaining the guests by her daughter, Mrs. Lucile Stroud Fant.

Georgia Girl is Rewarded

WHEN children are weak and run-down, they are easy prey to colds or children's diseases. So it is never wise to neglect those weakening and depressing symptoms, such as bad breath, coated tongue, fretfulness, feverishness, biliousness, lack of energy and appetite, etc.

Nine times out of ten these things point to one trouble—constipation. Mothers all around you are coming right out in public to tell how their children are being relieved of this trouble by California Fig Syrup.

Mrs. Paul Gurley, of 775 Brookline Street, Atlanta, says: "My mother used California Fig Syrup with me so I knew what to give Doris when she became bilious, cross and upset; began to complain of sick stomach.

"She has been more than rewarded for taking Fig Syrup. It made her a well, happy girl promptly. She never complains of any symptoms of biliousness now."

The genuine, endorsed by doctors for 50 years, always bears the word California. All drugstores.

Lovely hair!

Modern hair dressers add beauty to your hair by graceful lines and contours. It is just as important to keep your hair soft, lustrous, abundant, rich in color.

Millions of girls and women are doing this at home with the easy help of Danderine. It is so simple to use. All you do is put a little on your brush each time you arrange your hair.

Instantly Danderine brings out the natural color of dingy, lifeless hair; makes it more sparkling and lustrous than brilliantine; makes it easy to manage; holds it in place.

The consistent use of Danderine dissolves the crust of dandruff; stops falling hair; tends to make the hair grow long, silky and abundant. Five million bottles used a year!

League of Women Voters Installs Chapter at Georgia

ATHENS, Ga., Nov. 8.—The University of Georgia chapter of the National League of Women Voters has recently been reorganized, with the following elected to office: Miss Eloise Chapman, Danville, president; Miss Mildred Greene, Augusta, vice president; Miss Margaret Elmann, Jacksonville, Fla., secretary, and Miss Gladys Simpson, Mt. Dora, Fla., treasurer. During the coming year the league will study a series of political and legal questions. Meetings will be held the first Thursday night of each month in Peabody hall. A general invitation to attend has been extended to all women students in the university.

Dolphin Club, a swimming club for girls who have passed the life saving test, initiates the new members of the club at a meeting November 12, according to Miss Vera Hixon, Augusta, president. The members of the club have not yet been selected, but will be before the meeting.

Clarke County Tuberculosis Association has received permission from the county commissioners to start a pine tree demonstration on 10 to 15 acres of land which are now subject to erosion. The forestry department of the university has assumed charge of the actual work of the reforestation and will, during January, plant 10 to 12 thousand pine trees on the property. The purpose of this project is twofold: (1) to prevent soil erosion, and (2) to beautify the grounds of the Fairhaven hospital.

Plans for a co-ed Pandora staff to work with the regular staff were submitted by the Pandora committee and approved by the Women's Student Government Association at the meeting Wednesday. The plan calls for one senior member, two juniors, three sophomores and four freshman members of the staff. Miss Dorothy Sims, Rome, talked on "Student Government at Shorter" at the same meeting.

Both new and old favorite acts will be included on the program of the third annual "stunt night," to be held in the auditorium of the physical education building on the Agricultural College campus Thursday evening, November 13. The Pritchard trio, first place winner in the first "stunt night," will be back again this year with a new act. Two complete orchestras will enter the competition for the $10 prize, and membership in the 1931 Glee Club.

"The Diffraction of Electrons By a Crystal of Nickel" was the subject of a discussion by Milton P. Jarnagen, Jr., tutor in mathematics, before a meeting of the faculty of the physics department Friday afternoon. Mr. Jarnagen is taking graduate work in physics.

"Be a World Citizen" was the subject of the address delivered by Dr. Fletcher S. Brockman, secretary of the Committee on the Promotion of Friendship Between America and the Far East, Inc., at a chapel assembly Saturday. Rabbi Nathan Krass, eminent writer, speaker, and religious leader of New York city, will address a chapel assembly Tuesday morning at the same hour.

Dr. Soule Speaks.

Dr. Andrew M. Soule, president of the State College of Agriculture, was in Lyons and Tifton November 6, and 7 to address meetings of the Georgia growers of bright leaf tobacco. Dr. Soule spoke on "The Future of Bright Leaf Tobacco in Georgia." At the same time he introduced James C. Stone, vice president of the federal farm board, who spoke on the formation of a co-operative association of the Georgia bright leaf tobacco growers. Next week Dr. Soule will attend an economic conference in Atlanta of all the land grant colleges and state universities in the southeast. At the conference an outlook study of the crops and live stock productions of the southeast will be made. The data gathered from this conference will be correlated and published in book form by the middle of December to serve as a program of advice for farmers, bankers and businessmen at large throughout the United States.

The captains of the class hockey teams now engaged in a tournament in the agricultural school campus, have been announced by Mrs. E. P. Soule, director of physical education. The captains for the different class teams are: Seniors, Miss Jeannette Samuels, Thomson; juniors, Miss Cornelia Daniel, Hawkinsville; sophomores, Miss Virginia Wilson, Duluth, and freshmen, Miss Mary Crane, Savannah. Miss Cornelia Daniel, captain of the junior class team, has been made manager. The seniors won the first game of the tournament when they defeated the juniors by a 2-0 score, while the sophomore-freshmen game, 5, ended in 0-0 tie.

Various aspects of the hydrogen ion will be the subject of a new seminar course in the chemistry departments of the university and the Georgia State College of Agriculture, according to Dr. A. W. Scott, professor of chemistry at the university. The meeting will be held monthly in Terrell hall and one member of the department will address the seminar on some phase of hydrogen ions. The graduate students are required to attend the meeting.

Dr. T. H. Whitehead will address the seminar November 18, on the definition of hydrogen ions. Dr. J. H. Mote will talk the following meeting on the measurement of hydrogen ions.

International Peace Is Theme Of Girl Scout Armistice Program

Atlanta Girl Scouts will celebrate Armistice Day November 11. International peace is the theme of the program. Ansley Park troop, meeting Tuesday afternoon at Peachtree Christian church, has prepared a program under the direction of Mrs. Ernest Morrison to commemorate the armistice signing. Girls from 40 nations where Girl Scouting is carried on today, making a great sisterhood of girls the world over, will be be portrayed in costume by members of the troop. One of the ultimate aims of the Girl Scout and Girl Guide program throughout the world is the creation of international friendship and understanding.

The memorial to Mrs. Juliette Low, founder of Girl Scouting, is a fund used to bring girls from other nations each summer to the United States for two weeks' camping with American Girl Scouts, while Girl Scouts go to foreign countries. An international camp is held each year for girls from all nations to know and understand the ways of living and characteristics of each other.

President of Alabama W. M. U. To Speak at First Baptist Church

Through invitation of Mrs. Wilbur M. Jones, superintendent of Baptist W. M. U. of Atlanta Association, opportunity is afforded the women of Atlanta to hear Mrs. Carter Wright, Roanoke, Ala., one of the most gifted speakers of the south, in an address Thursday morning, November 13, at 10:30 o'clock, at the First Baptist church. As president of the Alabama W. M. U. and one of the vice presidents of the southwide union, Mrs. Wright is known as a woman of culture, charming personality and leadership. As chairman of the "ruby anniversary" celebration of the organization of the southwide W. M. U., she gained a distinction worthy of the highest honor.

Mrs. Wright's address will be educational and thoroughly missionary in character. Mrs. Jones has invited Mrs. W. J. Neel, Cartersville, president of the Georgia W. M. U., to lead the devotional period and Miss Lydia Wheeler and Mrs. W. W. Bateman are to be the soloists of the occasion.

School of Missions.

School of missions will be held at the College Park First Baptist church November 10-14, with an inspirational address each night at 8 o'clock by Rev. A. Scott Patterson, returned missionary from Africa.

Mrs. Taul B. White, field worker of the Southern Baptist Woman's Missionary Union, will teach the book, "From Jerusalem to Jerusalem," to the women of the church; Rev. Spencer B. King, superintendent of state missions of Georgia, will teach his own book, "Georgia, a Mission Field," to the men; Misses Vera Atkins and Frances Mason will teach the younger women and men of the church, taking up different phases of the cooperative program. The class periods will be from 7:15 to 8 o'clock each night. This will be the first school of missions the church has held.

College Park is one of the few churches in the Atlanta association that increased its contributions to missions as well as to local expenses over last year. Rev. William M. Sentell is the pastor and Mrs. Baynard Willingham is president of the Woman's Missionary Society. Visitors from near-by churches are invited to enroll in any of the classes and attend the inspirational addresses.

B. W. M. U. Institute.

Mrs. Richard Parrish, of Valdosta, press chairman for the southwest division, Georgia B. W. M. U., writes the following: The nineteenth annual institute of the southwest division, Baptist Woman's Missionary Union, convened October 28 and 29, with the First Baptist church and the Lee Street Baptist churches of Valdosta as joint hostesses. The institute was presided over by Mrs. C. F. Cater, of Quitman, divisional vice president, and had for its theme, "Study to show thyself approved unto God," and its aim, "to more fully glorify Him."

Welcome greetings were extended by Mrs. C. G. Denmark and Mrs. J. D. Paulk, presidents of the hostess societies. Response was made by Mrs. R. L. Maynard, of Americus. Communion through prayer, praise through prayer, petition through prayer, and prayer in the life of young people were the topics of worship periods conducted by Mrs. E. K. Overstreet, Dr. H. M. Fugate, Mrs. Harry Dixon and Mrs. G. T. Hunt.

The inspirational message of Tuesday afternoon was given by the vice president, Mrs. Cater, who for many years has been the able and consecrated leader of this division. The principal speaker on the evening program was Dr. Spencer King, of Atlanta, who spoke on the B. W. M. U. watchword, "Be ye steadfast," and upon the five aims of the union: Prayer, Bible study, mission study, personal service and stewardship. A feature of this service was the beautiful anthem by Williams, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," rendered by the combined choirs of the two local Baptist churches. Divisional officers and distinguished visitors were introduced by Dr. Fugate.

Outstanding on Wednesday morning's program was the address by Miss Pearl Bourne, of Birmingham, assistant secretary of young people for the southern union. The afternoon's session was devoted to young people's work, and was presided over by Mrs. Richard Parrish, divisional leader. A conference hour was led by Miss Mary Christian, state secretary of young people. Associational leaders of young people present and reporting were: Mrs. Percy Youmans, of Climax; Mrs. Fritz Roberts, of Moultrie; Mrs. R. F. Poole, Jr., of Americus; Mrs. W. D. Martin, of Albany; Mrs. W. G. Owens, of Boston; Mrs. H. V. Davis, of Richmond; Mrs. A. C. Doddenberry, of Cairo; Mrs. G. T. Hunt, of Camilla, and Miss Dorothy Jackson, of Valdosta.

Divisional chairmen of departments making reports were: Mrs. W. M. Anderson, White Cross; Mrs. C. H. Hodges, Mercer auxiliary; Mrs. J. F. Knapp, personal service; Mrs. W. C. Twitty, illiteracy; Mrs. A. C. Pyle, stewardship; Mrs. E. K. Overstreet, publicity and scrapbooks. An interesting and constructive conference was held by the following superintendents: Mrs. M. M. Stephens, Mrs. S. P. Holland, Mrs. D. K. Tolbert, Mrs. T. P. Tison, Mrs. R. L. Maynard, Mrs. Paul Ellison, Mrs. W. B. Owens, Mrs. J. M. Kingsley, Mrs. W. A. Rowan, Mrs. J. A. Pope, Mrs. H. M. Dixon, Mrs. J. F. Stoke, Mrs. G. A. Thomas, Mrs. R. L. Hall, Mrs. J. S. Rainey and Mrs. O. K. Jones.

Mission study classes taught were: "Healing and Missions," Mrs. Taul White; "Pioneer Women," Miss Mary Christian; "Raphael and Consuello," Mrs. E. M. Bailey. Mrs. A. F. McMahon conducted an interesting study of the W. M. U. yearbook.

Capitol View.

Mrs. T. E. White was in charge of the program when the Lester Bevills' circle of the Capitol View Baptist W. M. S. met at the home of Mrs. E. L. Smith, 881 Stewart avenue, November 3. Those taking part on the program were Mesdames T. T. Warr, Leon Turk, T. E. White, E. L. Smith, W. L. Allen, C. M. Ford, C. J. McLendon, R. H. Higgins and L. E. La Suer. Mrs. White acted as chairman in place of Mrs. W. R. Murray, who is on a visit to Nashville, Tenn.

T. E. L. Class.

T. E. L. Class of the Cascade Baptist church met in the classroom Wednesday morning, November 5, at 11 o'clock with the president presiding, with 22 members and officers present. This being the first meeting of the new year with the class, plans were made to go forward in the work for the Master.

St. Philip's Cathedral Organizes Classes Of Instruction

Women's organizations of St. Philip's cathedral have repeatedly asked for "classes of instruction." In response to this appeal, Dean Raimundo De Ovies and the Rev. William S. Turner, B. D., canon of the cathedral, have organized classes to meet each week as follows: Every Wednesday at 10:30 o'clock in the morning and again at 3 o'clock in the afternoon the dean will hold classes in "The Kingdom and Personal Religion."

Every Thursday, immediately following the 10:30 service of holy communion in the cathedral, Canon Turner will hold his class in "Church History and the Prayer Book." This class will again be given at 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

Every Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock the dean will conduct his third class in "The Kingdom and Personal Religion" for the Young Woman's Auxiliary. These classes are arranged in groups at various hours in order that all may attend.

Those attending the first two groups of the dean's classes are Mrs. A. H. Steedman, the Misses Cornelia Steedman, Emily Bancroft and Sara Hawks and Mesdames E. D. Blain, J. M. Veal, W. N. Hawks, T. Mrs. J. Connor Oliver has recently been elected president for the tenth year of the Susannah Wesley class of the Druid Hills Methodist church. She is a woman of graciousness and charm, as well as the possessor of rare executive ability, and the many attainments of the class are largely due to her foresight and wise guidance.

Other officers and executives of the class are: Mesdames A. G. Burdett, Willis Dobbs, Fred Bell, J. C. Aycock, Marion Sims, R. C. Camp, W. H. Smith, Jr., W. P. Felker, J. G. Ponder, A. W. Dahlberg, C. E. LaFontaine, F. M. Warburton and Mrs. C. H. McFee.

This class has a membership of 300 and carries on its roster the names of some of the most prominent church workers in the city. Organized along all lines of religious activity, an amazing amount of social service work is done. Three scholarships are financed, making possible educational facilities for girls otherwise denied. Committees visit Grady hospital, Battle Hill and other charitable institutions weekly, assisting in various ways. The members have their own paper, published weekly. Miss Eloise Mason is the efficient editor and the sheet is more than a bulletin. It is an interesting, well-written periodical.

Centering the interest of the women composing the class is the presentation of "An Autumn Fantasy," a play-pageant, on Friday evening, November 14, at 8 o'clock, at the Bass Junior High school auditorium. More than 100 of Atlanta's most talented children will take part. An admission charge of 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children will be made, the proceeds to go to the scholarship fund.

Mrs. Hugh Harris, the lecturer, is a woman of brilliant scholarly attainments. Endowed with a gift for storytelling and a thorough knowledge of the Bible, she is well prepared to instruct in Christian principle and Christian living.

Congregational Churches Plan Interesting Future Activities

Guild of Central Congregational church met at the home of Mrs. H. W. North on Burlington road, N. E., Wednesday afternoon. After the discussion of the various activities of the organization, the pastor of the church, Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, addressed the group on the subject, "The Community Church."

The guild is sponsoring a bridge party at the home of Mrs. Ellis D. Robb, 620 Morningside drive, N. E., Wednesday afternoon, November 12, with both table and drawing prizes. Tea will be served, and the toll will be 50 cents per person. Call Hemlock 9896 for reservations.

The Young People's Forum of the Central Congregational church resumed activities Sunday evening. The topic for Sunday, November 9, will be "How Should a Community Handle Its Charities?" Hot supper will be served at 6:15 o'clock and all young friends are invited.

United Congregational.

Woman's Society of the United Congregational church met in the parlors of Agnes Scott College Tuesday afternoon. Dr. Byron Koo, who was scheduled to speak, left suddenly for Korea, and Dr. Kim, a Korean, who graduated from Columbia Theological Seminary last August, spoke in his place. Dr. E. H. Willisford and Dr. W. T. McElveen conducted the devotions. The society voted to change the time of meeting to the second and fourth Tuesdays of the month. Plans are being made for a special Thanksgiving meeting November 25, when Mrs. E. H. Willisford, of 848 Peachtree street, will be the hostess.

Ministers' Wives Hold Council In Washington

Council of Ministers' Wives of the Disciples of Christ held its annual luncheon in the Mayflower hotel, Washington, D. C., during the international convention held October 14-19 in that city. Over five hundred ministers' wives were seated in the banquet room which was richly decorated with fall foliage and chrysanthemums.

The president, Mrs. Harvey Baker Smith, of Washington, presided and introduced the speakers, among whom was Mrs. Alice Vanderbilt Morris (Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris), of New York city, president of the Esperanto organization and a member of the international Y. W. C. A. board. The subject of her address was "Planetary Consciousness."

Another noted speaker was Mrs. Clifford Weaver, of McKinney, Texas, whose name appears in the "Who's Who of the Literary World" as "Gustine Courson Weaver." Following this address there was a roll call of states and continents, all overseas delegates and missionaries being guests at the luncheon.

The Council of Ministers' Wives is a unique organization which was formed in Atlanta during the international convention of the Disciples of Christ in 1914, thus celebrating the sixteenth anniversary of its organization at the Washington convention.

The nominating committee, of which Mrs. C. R. Stauffer, of Atlanta, was a member, presented the following names for election as officers for the coming year: Honorary president, Mrs. Walter White, Memphis, Tenn.; president, Mrs. A. W. Fortune, Lexington, Ky.; vice president, Mrs. W. Baker, Los Angeles, Cal.; secretary, Mrs. W. A. Shullenberger, Indianapolis, Ind. The next meeting of the council will be held in connection with the 1931 international convention which will be held next October in Wichita, Kan.

Willing Workers Elect Officers.

Mrs. J. D. Jett was elected president of the Willing Workers Wesley class of Underwood church at the meeting held recently at the home of Mrs. Ben Sewell. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Mrs. G. W. Lomax; secretary, Mrs. J. P. Cranshaw; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Hampton; social service, Mrs. Dempsey; home department, Mrs. J. H. Brown.

Hapeville Y. W. A. To Meet Friday.

The Young Women's Auxiliary of the Hapeville First Baptist church meets Friday evening, November 14, at 7:30 o'clock, at the home of Miss Marie Henderson at 24 Forrest avenue, Hapeville. At this time a mission book, "Georgia a Mission Field," will be taught, and examanation made under a splendid teacher, Mis Ida Rhodes. Mrs. Charles W. Martin is counsellor of the Y. W. A.

Mrs. Bell Heads Inman Park W. M. S.

Mrs. Clarence Bell was elected president of the Inman Park Methodist W. M. S. at the meeting held last Monday, November 3. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Mrs. George Butler; recording secretary, Mrs. J. O. Mangum; treasurer, Mrs. F. L. Bond; local treasurer, Mrs. C. P. Lamb; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. A. Campoamor; superintendent study, Mrs. E. E. Barnes; superintendent publicity, Mrs. Wallace Rogers; superintendent social service, Mrs. E. E. Elmore; superintendent children, Mrs. Harry Johnson; superintendent supplies, Mrs. A. L. Zachary; superintendent local work, Mrs. C. A. Rauschenberg.

Mrs. J. C. Penick's Circle had charge of the literary program, the subject being "Our Schools in Mexico." Mrs. E. H. Le Vert, Jr., gave the devotional and the last three chapters of the Bible study, "Jesus Our Ideal," were given by Mrs. E. E. Barnes and Mrs. Roy Petree.

Mrs. Otis Poundstone Heads Mothers' Class.

Mrs. Otis Poundstone was re-elected president of the Mothers' Class of the First Baptist Sunday school when the class was entertained by Mrs. Drury Powers at her home on Peachtree circle last Tuesday. Other officers elected at this time were: First vice president, Mrs. W. F. Crusselle; second vice president, Mrs. J. L. Morrison; third vice president, Mrs. A. E. Wheeler; recording secretary, Mrs. Arthur Allen; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. M. Shearer; treasurer, Mrs. Arch Cribbs; assistant treasurer, Mrs. C. C. Langford; class reporter, Mrs. J. M. Shearer; Sunday school secretary, Mrs. S. C. Prim; assistant Sunday school secretary, Mrs. Mary Green; room attendance, Mrs. Arch Cribb; team captain, Mrs. Williamson; teacher, Mrs. W. F. Clark; assistant teacher, Mrs. Mary Green.

The committees reported work for month completed. Mrs. S. C. Prim, who has attended more regularly during the past year than any member, was presented a lovely bouquet by Mrs. Green, the attendance chairman. The sunshine bags were distributed, the contents to be used to supply Christmas cheer for the Florence Crittenton Home. The class received an invitation from the matron of the Eliza Manget Home for Girls to meet with her at the November meeting. The class for a number of years has held the November meeting at the home, giving a pantry shower of homemade jellies, etc., as a Thanksgiving offering. One of the first rooms to be furnished in this home was furnished and is still maintained by the class in memory of Mrs. Lillan Clark Todd, daughter of the present teacher of the class and one of the first presidents of the class.

This class, one of the most active organized classes in the city, has for years carried on a number of charities, among which are Base Hospital 48, Atlanta Child's Home, Baptist Orphans' Home, Eliza Manget Home for Girls, Red Cross work, Postal Mission.

Mrs. W. F. Clark invited the executive board to meet with her Wednesday.

Mrs. Arthur Allen, who was chairman for the class for the Forget-Me-Not Day, reported the class turned in $35.39. Mrs. Arch Cribbs reported the last rummage sale brought $16, and this was donated to the Georgia Baptist Orphans' Home linen shower.

Week of Prayer and Fellowship To Be Observed by Local Y. W. C. A.

Week of prayer and world fellowship, which gathers the Y. W. C. A.s of the world into a unified company of worshipers will be celebrated by the local association November 9-15. The vespers held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at 37 Auburn avenue, will be open to the public and will be the first services of the week.

Rev. Raymond Paty, one of the outstanding younger members of the Emory University faculty, is the speaker of the afternoon and has chosen for his subject, "Through the Eyes of Jesus." Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood, chairman of the world fellowship committee, and member of the board of directors has planned a program of unusual interest to the members of the Y. W. C. A. and their friends. Mrs. John J. Eagan, president, and leader in the Central Presbyterian church, will open with prayer. The Choral Club, composed of girls who live at the Y. W. C. A. residence, 82 Baker street, N. W., will sing special numbers appropriate to the occasion.

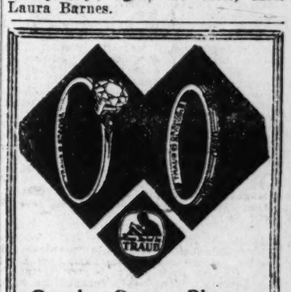

During the week of prayer the Y. W. C. A.s in the United States cooperate with women in 14 foreign countries in building up the associations and carrying out a program of practical service to women and girls. The local Y will follow the program outlined for associations the world over, which emphasizes "God's Purpose for Man." Each morning the Y. W. C. A. staff members will observe a 15-minute program of worship, dealing with the topics contained in the leaflets distributed to every association in the world.

Serving with Mrs. Underwood on the world fellowship committee which sponsors "Friendships Far and Near" are Mrs. John J. Eagan, Mrs. R. S. Day, Mrs. John H. Mullin, Mrs. D. W. Copeland, Mrs. B. H. Palmer, Mrs. John Sibley, Mrs. D. B. McCoy, Mrs. W. F. Caldwell, Mrs. Charles Loridans, Mrs. Charles Hammond, Mrs. E. Smythe Gambrell, Mrs. E. V. Carter, Mrs. C. C. Kingsberry, Mrs. O. L. Jernigan, Mrs. Guy Woolford and Mrs. J. W. Stanley.

Capitol View W. M. S. Meets.

Mrs. Wylie's Report Given At Executive Board Meeting

Mrs. Bun Wylie, regent of Georgia D. A. R., made the following report at the executive board meeting held in Sandersville in October. She said:

"At the state conference in Newnan, March, 1930, the Georgia Daughters of the American Revolution elected me to the high office of state regent, an honor deeply appreciated, yet carrying with it a consciousness of grave responsibility. I shall endeavor to give you a report of my plans, duties and pleasures since that day. After conference two days of charming hospitality was enjoyed at the home of Mrs. W. H. Hightower, Thomaston; a luncheon at the hotel; a reception at the home of our hostess and a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Henry Birdsong, regent of the John Houston chapter.

"The Governor John Milledge chapter, Dalton, Mrs. B. A. Tyler, regent, honored your state regent-elect at a luncheon followed by a reception at which time I spoke to the Dalton daughters on our "Plans and Prospects." It was my privilege to attend continental congress in Washington, D. C., where on the afternoon of April 19, the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington, in our handsome new Constitution hall, I was confirmed as state regent of Georgia D. A. R. This was a beautiful ceremony, a processional of state regents carrying flowers. Your Georgia regent was especially fortunate in this respect, carrying five bunches of pink roses tied with our colors; these formed the centerpiece for the Georgia table that evening at the national banquet in the Willard hotel. I am proud to have it recorded in Georgia D. A. R. history, that Marion Sibley Wylie was the first state regent from Georgia to be confirmed in the new Constitution hall.

"From Washington I went to Richmond, Va., where as a guest of the Commonwealth chapter I brought them a message from my Georgia daughters and enjoyed a tea after the meeting. On my return to Atlanta I immediately took up my new duties as state regent; busy at my desk from 5 to 10 hours daily; arranging the state committees; answering the vast budget of mail that came to me; adjusting, planning and executing the state work along all lines of its ceaseless activity; responding to the calls of the national society and representing the state on all occasions in the official capacity of state regent.

Gives First Reception.

"Joseph Habersham chapter was the first to honor the new state regent with a reception at the home of the regent, Mrs. A. R. Colcord, Mrs. W. F. Dykes, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Stuart Colley, state editor, sharing honors. It was followed by a brilliant reception given by the Atlanta chapter, Mrs. Eli Thomas, regent, at their historic old chapter house, complimenting the state regent and state corresponding secretary. In May, as an honor guest of the John Clark chapter, Social Circle, Mrs. W. O. Godwin, regent, attended their luncheon and meeting, giving an account of continental congress. Mrs. Mell Knox, state vice regent, was also an honor guest on this occasion.

"In June I was the guest of the Kettle Creek chapter, Washington-Wilkes, Mrs. W. L. Latimer, regent, attending the unveiling ceremonies on War hill, the monument marking the battleground of Kettle Creek; made a patriotic address, placing on the monument a handsome evergreen wreath tied with blue and white ribbon, embossed with gold letters, "Georgia D. A. R."

"June 17 I visited Milledgeville, addressing the student body of the Georgia Woman's College, on the inspiring subject, 'Patriotism,' and was the guest of the Nancy Hart chapter at a meeting at Old Fort Wilkinson, making an address. While in Milledgeville I was the guest of our state historian, Mrs. J. L. Beeson, in the old governor's mansion. Mrs. Beeson entertained at luncheon in honor of her guests, Mrs. Thomas Mell, Mrs. Eli Thomas and Mrs. Bun Wylie. Mrs. J. L. Gerard also entertained Mrs. Beeson's guests at a dinner party. Mrs. P. H. Yarbrough, regent, Nancy Hart chapter, together with Dr. Y. H. Yarbrough, Mrs. Beeson, Mrs. Mell and Mrs. Wylie motored to Gibson, where we had the privilege of meeting and visiting with the two real D. A. R. daughters in Georgia, Aunt Sarah Poole and Aunt Mary Poole Newsom, who are 81 and 85 years of age.

"From Milledgeville Mrs. T. C. Mell, then C. A. R. state director, and I motored on to Savannah, where we attended the unveiling of the marker on Yamacraw Bluff, the historic spot which is the birthplace of Georgia. Your state regent was honor guest and made the address presenting the marker to the city of Savannah. Mrs. Robert Travis, state chairman, marking historic spots, arranged the program and presided over the ceremonies unveiling the marker. The three Savannah chapters honored the state regent with a reception, Mrs. John W. Daniel, state second vice regent, acting as hostess; the three regents, Mesdames Robert Roux, G. C. Tilman and J. E. Bacon, receiving with the state regent.

"Stephen Heard chapter, Elberton, Miss Mary Lizzie Wright, regent, invited the state regent to be their guest on the occasion of the installation of new officers, an English tea at the home of Mrs. J. Y. Swift, Rose Hill, the historic old Heard mansion; a dinner at the hotel, and an evening meeting, followed by a reception celebrated this event. The state regent gave the sacred charge to the officers, followed by an address on "What the D. A. R. Is Doing." It was a most inspiring occasion.

Guest of Legion.

"In July I motored to Gainesville, where as a distinguished guest of the American Legion, addressed that body on "Our Kindred Activities." Also in July the Pulaski chapter, Griffin, Mrs. Frank Pittman, regent, unveiled a stone marker on the old McIntosh trail, where General McIntosh crossed the highway en route to New Orleans. The state regent, Mrs. Pittman, and Mrs. J. N. Taylor made historical addresses on this occasion. The Pulaski chapter sponsored a float typifying the revolutionary period as a part of the sixtieth celebration of the birthday of Griffin. The chapter entertained the state regent at a luncheon and reception. Have sent greetings and articles to the state editor for publication in the D. A. R. column of the Constitution and other papers. The Georgia D. A. R. editor, Mrs. Stuart Colley, is most efficient, keeping ever before the daughters their splendid activities and interests. In August I wrote an article for the Bulletin, a sheet published by the national society, showing the special work of different states.

"Your state regent has been honored by Governor Hardman, of Georgia, who appointed her chairman of the state commission for George Washington bi-centennial. On this commission of 10 prominent citizens who will arouse interest over the state in this great celebration which occurs in 1932; your state regent will speak over the radio in the interest of this event November 14 at 5:15 o'clock. All chapters throughout the state are requested to have programs and tre-plantings in honor of Washington.

"Representing the state July 4, I was one of the speakers on the program in Atlanta. In September, the Elijah Clarke chapter, Athens, Mrs. J. T. Dudley, regent, entertained in honor of the state regent at a reception following the regular meeting. At the meeting I read and explained the state regent's fall message. Mrs. Julius Talmadge was also an honor guest on this occasion. One thousand dollars of D. A. R. student loan fund reserved in savings bank for loans to deserving applicants, has been released for this purpose and used by your state chairman, Mrs. Barnett Soloman.

"One new chapter has been organized and confirmed by the national society, the Adam Brinson, Swainsboro, Mrs. Irving A. Brannen, regent. One hundred and nine new members have been admitted by the national society, making a total of nearly 6,000 in the Georgia society.

Motions Passed.

"At the state meeting in Washington last April the following motions were passed: $100 to library, to arrange and index Georgia records; $100 for filing case in Georgia room; $250 for library table honoring the incoming state regent; report contributions to Mrs. T. C. Mell, chairman, Constitution hall. The D. A. R. student loans are our pride: $5,000 at the University of Georgia for boys, $5,000 for girls, $5,000 for Fannie Trammell memorial and $5,000 Valdosta loan fund; all have been completed but Valdosta, which must be closed this year; also the Georgia bell at Valley Forge must be paid for. We must finish our chapter histories and the marking of Nancy Hart highway, Mrs. J. L. Massey, chairman. Mrs. Sanford Gardner has consented to finish the publication of chapter histories as she inaugurated this special work. Two new committees have been created: Publication of county histories, Mrs. B. A. Tyler, chairman, and eradication of illiteracy, Mrs. W. M. Shurling, chairman. Radio broadcasting and fine publicity programs will be featured this year, writes Mrs. Lucius McConnell, chairman. I have written and mailed out hundreds of letters, including state regent's fall message. It is my purpose to visit every chapter in state during my term of office. I have visited and been helpful to many chapters discouraged in the work, inspiring the members to new efforts. Your state regent offers an award of $10 in gold to the chapter securing the largest number of new members on a percentage basis during the year. I have recently accepted invitations to visit five chapters during November. As state regent of Georgia, one of the five states with participating troops in the Battle of Kings Mountain, it was my privilege to represent Georgia at the sesquicentennial, on October 6-7, and bring greetings from my state. I was accompanied by my personal page, Mrs. J. H. Nicholson, who carried the state flag while the regent made her address. From there I went to Washington, D. C., to national board meeting, with its many delightful features and friends. The highlights are: Promotion of George Washington bi-centennial; states urged to subscribe to D. A. R. magazine and give $25 for special subscriptions; to sell 'sunshine' to help pay indebtedness on Constitution hall; to pay promptly for articles purchased for Constitution hall and to send correct inscriptions for same; new design for D. A. R. medal for prizes and gifts; all chapters urged to use them, price reasonable. Members urged to buy D. A. R. historic calendar, order for Christmas. Fifty dollars and more from each state for state building at Tamassee, S. C. The picture depicting the life of George Washington is being filmed for national society. Mrs. W. H. Hightower, state chairman better films, will have this picture presented at state conference in Macon.

"From Washington I came down to Virginia to be a guest at the Yorktown celebration, I enjoyed a luncheon at the governor's mansion, dinner given by the S. A. R., and luncheon by the Compte De Grasse chapter in Yorktown. I delivered an address in Richmond at the tree planting, honoring George Washington. On October 9 the national board of management, C. A. R., confirmed the appointment by the state regent of Mrs. Young Harris Yarbrough, Milledgeville, for state director of Georgia.

"Daughters, we are supporting our candidate, Mrs. Fay Gaffney, for the office of vice president general. Let us go to Washington in April to elect her.

"The southern divisional conference meets in Gulfport, Miss., November 14-15, to which all D. A. R. are invited, no delegates. Many invitations to state conferences have been received, but owing to engagements and duties of office could not accept all, which I so much regret. As a distinguished guest of the U. D. C. in Thomaston, I brought greetings from the D. A. R. It should be the ambition of every chapter to be on the honor roll which can easily be attained this year, as your regent has kept it within 80c per capita.

"There is much work to be accomplished, but there are many fine workers to do it, so let us put aside thought of self and think only of service, working harmoniously and industriously for the betterment of our organization, and great achievements will be ours, with such splendid workers as comprise the Georgia Society Daughters of the American Revolution.

State Board Attendance.

"Those present at the state D. A. R. board in Sandersville October 28, 1930: Mrs. Bun Wylie, state regent, Atlanta; Mrs. Mell Knox, state first vice regent, Social Circle; Mrs. W. F. Dykes, corresponding secretary, Atlanta; Mrs. J. H. Nicholson, state auditor, Atlanta; Mrs. J. L. Beeson, state historian, Milledgeville; Mrs. John S. Adams, state librarian, Dublin; Mrs. Stuart Colley, state editor, Grantsville; Mrs. W. J. Mann, recording secretary pro tem., Dalton; Mrs. Julius Talmadge, vice president general, Athens; Mrs. H. M. Franklin, ex-state regent, Tennille; Mrs. Charles Ackerman, ex-state regent, Macon; Mrs. T. C. Mell, Atlanta; Mrs. T. E. Ryals, regent hostess chapter, Macon; Mrs. J. N. Talley, Macon; Mrs. R. L. Anderson, Macon; Mrs. J. A. Davis, state consulting registrar, Perry; Mrs. W. J. Vereen, Monitrie; Mrs. E. B. Codington, Macon; Mrs. R. F. Brooks, Forsyth; Mrs. Henry McCalla, Conyers; Mrs. I. J. Gerard, Milledgeville; Mrs. H. Y. Yarbrough, state director, C. A. R., Milledgeville; Mrs. J. R. Jordan, Americus; Mrs. H. R. McMaster, Waynesboro; Mrs. J. C. Gentry, Atlanta; Mrs. W. H. Hightower, Thomaston; Mrs. George Riley, Dawson; Mrs. J. D. Faver, LaGrange; Mrs. A. L. Wilkins, Eastman; Mrs. Barnett Soloman, Blakely; Mrs. Lucius McConnell, Atlanta; Mrs. Sandford Gardner, Atlanta; Mrs. T. F. Tabor, Elberton; Mrs. W. B. Daniel, Eastman; Mrs. L. D. Wallace, Madison; Mrs. E. A. Caldwell, Monroe; Mrs. M. J. Guyton, Dublin; Mrs. L. N. Jordan, Monticello; Mrs. W. M. Shurling, Wrightsville, and Mrs. C. D. Shelnutt, regent Gared Irwin chapter, hostess Sandersville.

Georgia Guild of Organists Plan Sacred Concert at All Saints' Nov. 11

The second attraction presented by Georgia chapter of American Guild of Organists will be a sacred service Tuesday, November 11, at 8 o'clock, at All Saints' church. The American Guild of Organists was organized in New York April 3, 1891, and Georgia chapter was organized October 6, 1914, by Edwin Arthur Kraft, F. A. G. O., who was at that time city organist.

Officers of the Georgia chapter are Joseph Ragan, dean; Mrs Bomita Crowe, sub-dean; Mrs. Hall Taylor, registrar; Mrs. John Felder, secretary; Miss Clara Smith, treasurer; George Hamrick, auditor; Miss Ethle Beyer, librarian, who cordially invite all members of the guild and the music-loving public to be present. The Episcopal service, which is the official service of national guild, will be given under the direction of Joseph Ragan, organist and choirmaster.

D. A. R. News Related By State Editor

BY MRS. STEWART COLLEY, of Grantville, Editor.

Do not forget to order your D. A. R. calendars, being sold for 50 cents. Order at once from Mrs. W. L. Dunne, 2151 California street, Washington, D. C. Please report the number ordered to your state editor in order that Georgia may get credit.

Mrs. J. C. Gentry, new chairman of the Lucy Cook Peel memorial books, has started to work in earnest. She has sold these valuable books literally all over the world. Several have been sold to people in Shanghai, China, and many have been sold in Hawaii. There are interested D. A. R. everywhere and somehow Mrs. Gentry has the faculty to find them. She is an intensive, efficient worker.

The D. A. R. magazine is the official organ of our society. Every daughter should be a subscriber. Mrs. J. T. Wood, of Savannah, state chairman, D. A. R., magazine, writes an earnest appeal to all Georgia D. A. R. Read it and we feel sure that your chapter will do what she and your national magazine chairman want you to do. Mrs. Wood's letter follows: "Dear Madam Regent—You have received, I am sure, a letter from Mrs. Donahue, the national chairman of the D. A. R. magazine. May I add my earnest appeal for subscribers to the magazine and ask you to send me $1 to help put the magazine in the libraries of our schools and also be sent to the governors of states. This would mean splendid publicity which would prevent future erroneous articles from appearing in the papers, crediting the D. A. R. with policies and measures of which they are not guilty. If your chapter will give $1 to support this plan, please send to me at once. Be sure to report your magazine subscribers to me also."

Sarah Dickinson chapter of Newnan, met for the October meeting at the home of Mrs. Sam Banks. Mesdames Hugh Carmichal, W. B. Davis, N. L. North and J. H. Powell were associate hostesses. In the absence of Mrs. N. E. Powell, regent, Mrs. E. W. Stone, second vice regent, presided. Mrs. W. G. Post, program chairman, presented the following interesting program: Sulgrave Manor, by Mrs. Russell Wilkinson; a Mediterranean cruise was described by Mrs. Roy Cole. Mrs. Cole has just returned from this cruise and her talk was most instructive. Mrs. James Brown discussed the important dates in October.

Stone Castle chapter, of Dawson, has planned a very splendid program for the entire D. A. R. year. Each month they will study some interesting place and person. We would like very much to drop in and enjoy one of these meetings.

Elijah Clarke chapter, of Athens, held its October meeting at the home of Mrs. Peter F. Brown, with the regent, Mrs. J. T. Dudley, presiding. Two new members were welcomed into the chapter, Mrs. R. E. Gunn and Mrs. Paul Morrow, the latter transferring her membership from the Kanawha Valley chapter, of Charleston, West Virginia. After the completion of the business matters, the meeting was turned over to Miss Annie Crawford, program chairman. A talk on the subject, "Memorial Continental Hall, the Mecca of the D. A. R.," was given by Mrs. Julius Talmadge. Besides the description of Continental Hall, she gave some instructive facts about the organization of the D. A. R. Miss Mable Wedge sang a solo. An open forum, "The Perpetuation of D. A. R. Ideals," was conducted by Mrs. Horace Holden, Mrs. C. B. Daniels, Mrs. Harrison Heidler, and Mrs. Alex Rhodes. At the conclusion of the program, Mrs. J. T. Dudley and Mrs. W. F. Watson gave inspiring accounts of their visit to King's Mountain where they attended the exercises commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the battle of King's Mountain. Several visitors were present at this meeting, among whom were two loyal daughters, Mrs. J. C. Collier, regent of the Lamar LaFayette chapter, of Barnesville, Ga., and Mrs. E. W. Butler, of Madison, Ga. The Elijah Clarke chapter always welcomes any visitors from other chapters who attend its meetings.

St. Anthony's Guild To Give Benefit.

Ladies of St. Anthony's Guild will sponsor a benefit bridge party at Rich's tea room, Tuesday, November 18, at 3 o'clock. For table reservations call Mrs. Julius Bruckner, West 0198, or Mrs. N. Longfeather, West 0359.

Mrs. Noel Park Gives Luncheon.

Mrs. Noel Park entertained yesterday at her home on Peachtree street at an informal luncheon in compliment to Mrs. Charles B. Merritt, who before her marriage was Miss Marion Park, of Greensboro, Ga.

The luncheon table was artistically decorated with colorful autumn flowers and foliage, and covers were placed for only a few close friends.

Miss Jessie Hopkins Fetes London Visitor.

Miss Jessie Hopkins was hostess yesterday at luncheon at the Atlanta Athletic Club in compliment to Mrs. James Campbell, of London, England, the guest of Mrs. Hinton Hopkins. The table was artistically decorated with colorful autumn flowers, and covers were placed for Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Hinton Hopkins, Mrs. Stiles Hopkins, Mrs. Paul Seydel—Mrs. Frank O. Foster and Miss Hopkins.

Rail Blamed for Wreck

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A passenger train wreck on the Louisville & Nashville railroad near Munfordville, Ky., October 3, was determined by an interstate commerce commission investigation today to have been caused by a broken rail. Forty-seven persons were injured when the train piled up.

Book Reviews in Tabloid

HENDRIK WILLEM VAN LOON.

"R. v. R." This is van Loon's title for his biography of Rembrandt. It is also the Literary Guild's selection for October. It seems that the author for many years has wanted to write the life of this great painter, in fact the greatest of Dutch painters, and was always discouraged from doing so. But the time usually comes in the life of a writer, painter or musician when he follows his inspiration and this is what van Loon has done, and now the announcement is made that this biography has been selected by the Literary Guild of America, thus assuring it of wide publicity.

"V. v. R." is the story of an artist of the seventeenth century—to call it a biography might not be understood, and yet all that is known of Rembrandt van Ryn is told in the contribution of van Loon. The writer does not weave his story, however, entirely around Rembrandt, for there are other characters who share the interest with this genius—in other words, the writer presents Rembrandt as his leading character and then surrounds him by lesser lights and in this way he plays up the life of the society of Dutchland in the seventeenth century.

There are also historical facts woven around Holland which was "like an international bazaar with all parts of the world represented by traders in their national dress," and in which the men and women of this country step out in the story as human beings. The book is full of interesting incidents that are so filled with original sayings and doings that one forgets that that period has passed away. The volume contains 600 pages, the illustrations being 24 reproductions of the paintings and drawings of Rembrandt. A map of Amsterdam in the seventeenth century, drawn by the author.

THE GERMAN PRIZE NOVEL.

Ambition. The $2,500 German prize novel. By Bernhard Guttman, offered by Harper's for the best novel or biography written in German by an author who had not published an important novel prior to 1920. Authorized translation by Ludwig Lewishon.

This is Mr. Guttmann's second novel before the writing of which he was a political writer. Before the World War he was the London correspondent for the Frankfurter Zeitung. It was during this period that a book by him on English liberalism was published. He did the very best he could to influence the German government against war and when he realized that he had failed, even after sounding the invasion of Belgium and the U-boat warfare, he was greatly distressed. After the war he continued to write but his writings were lacking in inspiration. He then decided he would write fiction, do creative work, looking for the old inspiration, but with little success. After a time, however, he wrote "Ambition," his second novel, of which the following comment has been made: "It shows its author to be that seeming contradiction, a liberal and a Prussian." (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

A STORY OF THE MAINE COAST.

Mirthful Haven. By Booth Tarkington. When Mr. Tarkington announces that he has written another story, and the publishers confirm this by publication, the reading world is all excitement to know all about it—where it is located, who the characters are, is it truth or fiction, and is the characters as human as those in "Alice Adams," "Gentle Julia," "Seventeen," or some of the other books which have been so widely read.

This is a novel of the Maine coast. The story is woven around Edna Pelter, a 15-year-old girl, and Captain Francis Embury, nearing 80. The former was looked upon as one of the Mayflower stock "who built ships and sailed them when the wharves of Mirthful Haven were crowded with cargo from the China seas and other foreign points. But that was long ago and now the streets were covered with weeds and the attractive homes were owned by the summer visitors, and Edna, had moved from a spacious New England house to a little shack on the wharf, the last of the Pelters was trying to keep existing through the latest means of support—bootlegging. It is a story of life and conditions as between the "summer folks" and the "natives," especially the Pelters. The story of how Edna, who had inherited the pride, the courage and the loyalty of her ancestors, surmounted all the obstacles makes one of Mr. Tarkington's best stories. (Doubleday-Doran Co., Garden City, New York.)

NEW FICTION.

The Open Secret. By Oliver Onions. The British author writes most interestingly of brilliant society life and this being augmented by an up-to-date romance with all the touches of modernism, makes it another story to be widely read. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

The Crime in the Dutch Garden. By Herbert Adams, author of "The Golden Ape." A thrilling story. An unsolvable enigma! A map to study. (Lippincott's Book, Philadelphia.)

Light Lady. By Elizabeth Finley Thomas. She has published four novels—the first, "Rendezvous" in 1926. She has written a collection of short stories for magazines and her husband, who was the owner of the Morning Telegraph, inspired her to continue her writing. She writes in New York and in Europe, adding painting while over there to the writing while her son is mountain climbing in the Italian, French and Swiss Alps. (Farrar & Rinehart, New York.)

All the King's Horses. Loved and Lost! A striking novel by the author of "Rhinestones and Loyal Lover." The name of Margaret Widdemer is that of a household friend. She likes to write romances and her friends like to read them. She was born "in a rose-twined rectory" in Pennsylvania, with Welsh, German, English and French ancestry, so why should she not be bright, witty, animated and with a personal charm that draws people to her and to her writings. She is well known in New York's social and literary life. (Farrar & Rinehart.)

The Bracelet. By Robert Hichens. Author of "The Garden of Allah." The world is making such rapid revolutions, and the men and women are hurrying by so fast with one, or no object in view that only a real good mystery story can call a halt on the highways or in the byways. The author's new novel of mystery, intrigue and a web of circumstances that entangle a lovely English girl will be entertaining, and the question asked will cause the reader to pause and think "why should a woman fight for a man who has cheated her? (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

The French Novel. By Pierre Mille. Translated from the French by Elizabeth Abbott. This is not a story, but a critical history of the novel in France, of which the author says: "From the beginning of the world to the end of time a good novel, a great novel, has been and always will be that novel in which a man or a woman—preferably a man and a woman—appear as definite types more real than reality." (J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.)

Angel Pavement. By J. B. Priestley, author of "The Good Companions," and in this new book the same delightful, interesting and refreshing qualities are characterized. The reader will find plenty of wisdom, to which is added an unusual amount of humorous thinking which pervades the whole volume, presenting a true and real view of life in the broader sense. (Harper & Brothers). (Review later.)

The Counterfeit Wife. By James G. Dunton. Author of "A Maid and a Million Men." A story woven around the modern girl, how she manages the many different situations and how sensibly she frequently shows her hand in them. (J. S. Sears & Co., New York.)

I Met Murder. By Selwyn Jepson. This manuscript was found on the desk of John Arden in the library at Eastblyth Manor. The detective who was investigating the murders took possession of the manuscript, and gave permission to its publication in story form. "There is something very close to genius in the telling of this mystery story." (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

Both Sides of the Street. By Irvin S. Cobb. While this is not a detective story, neither is it fiction, yet the writing of this popular Kentucky author is filled with as much interest and thrills as if it were both in one. In this contribution he looks up and down the world's street and reports what he sees. No one is better fitted to take a stroll along the universal highway, and make comments on what he finds than Irvin Cobb. He talks about "The Folks Across the Way" and tells you what he thinks of our neighbors across the Atlantic and the Pacific and then he reaches "The Folks at Home." It is full of American humor. (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

CONFEDERATE CAVALRYMAN.

The Life of General Forrest. The Confederacy's greatest cavalryman, By Captain Eric William Sheppard, O. B. E. (M. Div.) M. C. (Royal Tank Corps). The frontispiece is a reproduction of a painting of General Nathan Bedford Forrest in uniform. The American Civil War has furnished the subject for many interesting historics of great men, and the English have been much interested in these biographies, expressing their admiration for such leaders as General Robert E. Lee, General Stonewall Jackson and other historic figures. These biographies have been written by well-known writers whose names are quite familiar with the public.

Captain Sheppard of the Tanks, in a most interesting style writes of General Forrest, of the cavalry, whose name has been added to the gallery of great Americans and leaders. In the preface Captain Sheppard writes of General Forrest as "the greatest personality and, to my mind, the greatest commander who fought in the west under the Stars and Bars." He gives the reader a series of pen pictures of this great soldier and his brave deeds. He not only calls him a great soldier, but "a man—a splendid and admirable man!"

It was in July, 1861, that a man was seen standing on the steps of the residence of Governor Isham Harris at Nashville, Tenn., the following conversation still ringing in his ears: "I am sure you will do well for us, Mr. Forrest. Your fellow citizens of Memphis spoke so well of you that General Polk and I did not hesitate to indorse their petition to the president at Montgomery. Here is your warrant to raise a voluntary cavalry regiment." "I will do my best to deserve it, sir," said Forrest.

Captain Sheppard now, after many years since that day, introduces General Forrest. (The Dial Press, New York.)

BRETONS AND BRITTANY.

Enchanted Brittany. By Amy and Thornton Oakley, two well-known authors who in their former books described life in the mountainous regions of France—"The Pyrenees and the Alps," "The Hilltowns of the Pyrenees" and "The Cloudlands of France." This time they are taking their readers on a journey through the romantic and beautiful region of France Brittany. To the lovely volume charm and interest is added by Mr. Oakley's attractive drawings.

Brittany continues to remain with the same individuality which perhaps distinguishes no other part of France as much. With its wealth of historic data, priceless legends of an unforgotten past, castles, fishing fleets and religious festivals, all being enhanced by the picturesque costumes of both men and women, all add to the interest of this attractive volume with its unusual collection of drawings of the travel, made by Mr. and Mrs. Oakley through old and picturesque France.

Mrs. Oakley is a direct descendant of Thomas Dudley, who arrived in Salem on the tiny vessel Arbella in 1630, and who succeeded John Winthrop as the second governor of the Massachusetts Bay colony. Both Mr. and Mrs. Oakley are renowned travelers, and their unique studio at Villa Nova, Pa., contains trophies and antiques from every quarter of the globe. Incidentally, their Villa Nova home, Woodstock, dates from 1776 and has housed six generations of the family. A collection of his drawings from Mrs. Oakley's "Hill-Towns of the Pyrenees," which were purchased by the French government for the collection of the Luxembourg museum in Paris. Various exhibitions of the drawings for "Enchanted Brittany" will be held throughout this country during the coming year. (Century Co., New York.)

IMPORTANT BOOKS RECEIVED.

George Washington. Commander in Chief. By Thomas C. Frothingham. An interesting comment on the military life of the Father of Our Country. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

Jefferson Davis. Political Soldier. By Elizabeth Cutting. The author writes interestingly of the man and soldier who died as "a man without a country. She tells many incidents of his life. (Dodd Mead & Co., New York.)

Jefferson Davis: Hair Stakes and Hair Triggers. By Judge Robert W. Winston, author of "Andrew Johnson, Plebian and Patriot." A volume which swept the country, it being written on the life of a man who has been the storm center of controversy for two generations. Judge Winston, though a southerner, is a federalist, but he writes sympathetically and intelligently of the president of the Confederacy. (Henry Holt & Co., New York.)

Queen Victoria. Sidelights on the Queen. By Sir Frederick Ponsonby, G. C. B., G. C. V. O., etc. This handsome volume is a biographical reminiscence of a man whose father was private secretary to the queen, he having als held the same position, and after having her death he became private secretary to King Edward VII, and as present is treasurer and keeper of the privy purse to King George V. It is an interesting biography filled with many personal episodes, etc. (Jacket Design by Nat Falk.) (Sears Publishing Co., New York.)

General Dawes. "That Man Dawes!" By Paul R. Leach. The frontispiece is the ex-vice president's favorite campaign picture of 1924, used by permission of the artist, John Doctoroff. Mr. Leach tells "The Story of the man who has placed his name high among the great of the world in this generation because he ruled his life with common sense."

The story of Brigadier General Charles Gates Dawes, who is the most picturesque figure in American public life today, is another story that will interest both sides of the Atlantic. The author tells of his life from the time he was the youngest member of the republican national executive committee, then comptroller of currency of the U. S. A., next at the head of the Central Trust Co. of Illinois which he organized, and which is today one of the nation's leading banking institutions. And then there are days spent down south in 1919 when he was preparing for the honor which came to him in being General Pershing's chief aide and the closest personal friend of the commander-in-chief. Next after filling many positions he was elected vice president of the United States, and then later he was appointed ambassador to Great Britain by President Hoover, which post he now holds, and in which position he is one of the most popular American citizens ever to go to the Court of St. James' (Reilly & Lee Co., Chicago.)

ENFORCEMENT STAFF OF COUNTY ARRESTED

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP) Federal agents last night arrested the sheriff, the sheriff-elect, a deputy sheriff and two citizens of Lowndes county on charges of conspiracy to violate the national prohibition laws.

A joint raid by federal and state officers was staged last midnight at Haynesville under direction of James M. Shields, of prohibition headquarters at New Orleans, and resulted in the arrest of Sheriff Morrow Willoughby, Sheriff-elect Buck Meadows, Leon West, a deputy sheriff, M. N. Patterson, and Wilbur Winn.

Utility Probe Delayed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The federal trade commission today deferred until November 12 the resumption of its investigation into finances of power utility companies originally scheduled for November 10.

Legion Auxiliary Officers

President, Mrs. E. F. Travis, Griffin; first vice president, Mrs. Palmer Miller, Columbus; second vice president, Miss Leila Summerall, Waycross; secretary, Mrs. Harvey Kennedy, Barnesville; treasurer, Mrs. Claude Tidwell, Thomaston; chaplain, Mrs. T. W. Reed, Athens; historian, Mrs. J. M. Toomey, Atlanta; national executive committeewoman, Mrs. James Maddox, Rome; alternate national executive committeewoman, Mrs. R. L. Callaway, Rome.

Legion Auxiliary Chairman Writes of Poppy Day Plans

Mrs. Ed Fish, of Gainesville, chairman of publicity for the Georgia department of the American Legion Auxiliary writes of the plans for "Poppy Day" as follows:

One of the features of the Poppy Day sales this year is the fact that the making of poppies is not confined to the soldiers in the hospitals, but to many of the unemployed. Mrs. Gordon Singleton, of Atlanta, chairman of Poppy Day sales, states that many, many ex-service men who had absolutely no income, and could not find employment, found the needed remuneration in the making of poppies.

These poppies will be sold on the streets of Atlanta and throughout all Georgia on Armistice Day. The slogan is, "Serve the living and honor the dead." Thus this dual purpose serves to lighten the financial need of the veterans and also to help in the rehabilitation work. This work is the caring for the veterans and their wives who are in needy circumstances. Mrs. Singleton states that she has had on hand and has shipped 35,000 poppies to be sold on Armistice Day. The workers are paid one penny for the making of each poppy, and the amount made over a penny goes to aid in the great rehabilitation work. Mrs. James Maddox, Rome, chairman of rehabilitation committee, states that daily needs are coming to her and unless a liberal donation is made Armistice Day many of the great causes sponsored by this committee must suffer.

Legion Auxiliary President Names New Board Members

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—Mrs. Ernest Travis, of Griffin, president of the Georgia department of the American Legion Auxiliary, announces two new committee appointments to the executive board. Mrs. Jack Bush, of Barnesville, has been appointed chairman of music for the department, and Mrs. Earle Cocke, of Macon, chairman of the committee on the education of war orphans.

Mrs. Travis and Mrs. Harvey Kennedy, of Barnesville, secretary for the Georgia department, will attend the national presidents' and secretaries' council during the coming month. All of the presidents and secretaries throughout the country will attend this meeting at national headquarters.

The department president notes that one of the outstanding changes at the convention in Boston was the removing the World War orphans' education committee from the child welfare committee and making of it a separate department. "This committee is of special interest to Georgia citizens as General Peter C. Harris is the originator of this bill which provides for adequate education for boys and girls whose fathers were killed in service. Georgia has 360," said Mrs. Travis.

Atlanta.

The veterans of Base Hospital 48, Atlanta, were honor guests at a party given them by the Atlanta unit of the American Legion Auxiliary. Mrs. Fred Scheer was chairman of arrangements. Others assisting Mrs. Scheer were Mesdames C. B. Babb, A. C. Whitehead, Miss Henrietta Michael, Misses Poppy and Molly Bloodworth and Miss Margaret Mary Toomey. An entertaining program was rendered by Dr. Pope Baker, William Bond, Miss Leah White Rape, Mrs. A. T. Grenoe, Robert Seawright, Miss Florence Shearer. Mrs. L. J. Bombardier is president of the unit.

Dawson.

The Davis Daniel unit of Dawson, of which Mrs. J. B. Petty is president, has been active assisting the post sponsor the Southwest Georgia exposition. The net proceeds cleared amounted to $167.17. The unit has begun its membership drive and is also planning to observe Poppy Day on November 11. It will also entertain the legionnaires.

Albany.

The Albany unit were hostesses to the Veterans Hospital No. 62 this month. They sent boxes to these disabled soldiers. This unit also collected and sent a large box of clothing to the tubercular sanitarium at Alto. With the Spanish War Veterans' Auxiliary, the Albany unit entertained the delegates to the state U. D. C. convention with a tea at the Albany clubhouse. Last Friday night the unit gave a benefit bridge, and each month this unusually active unit gives a dinner to the legionnaires at their regular meeting. Mrs. W. C. Dinan is president of this unit.

Gainesville.

At the November meeting of the Paul E. Bolding unit of the American Legion Auxiliary, Mrs. W. P. Whelchel addressed the organization on her recent trip to the national convention in Boston. During the business session the following officers were installed for the coming year: Mrs. Edward Fish, president; Mrs. W. T. Carlisle, vice president; Mrs. A. R. McEver, secretary; Mrs. Roy Newnam, treasurer; Mrs. S. L. Brice, historian, and Mrs. W. D. Whelchel, chaplain; Mrs. John Rudolph, the retiring president, gave a report of her administration, and also plans for poppy sale (as its chairman). Mrs. Mark McConnell, retiring secretary, made a report of the remittances to the department secretary, Mrs. W. T. Carlisle, chairman of membership, told of her plans for the coming membership campaign, and the president gave a survey of the accomplishments aims, and purposes of the local, department and national organization. The next meeting will be held December 1 at the American Legion club rooms at 7:30 o'clock and the program will be in charge of Dr. Mary Day, of the Brenau faculty. Dr. Day made a tour of Europe this summer and will speak especially on the countries she visited that participated in the World War.

Barnesville Unit.

Mrs. Robert Hawkins is chairman of Poppy Day for the Leon Martin post of the American Legion Auxiliary, and she has completed plans for the selling of these next Tuesday. At the recent meeting of the unit Mrs. G. R. Robertson gave a talk on F. I. D. A. C. and its meaning. Mrs. Harvey J. Kennedy, immediate past second vice president and present secretary of the Georgia department, gave a talk on the work being done within the department. The unit will present on Armistice Day a flag and flagpole to the Gordon Grammar school. Colonel Claud Christopher, commander of the Leon Martin unit, will make the address. The unit is planning to serve over a hundred legionnaires on Armistice Day, immediately following the exercises held at the Gordon college auditorium. Jack Bush is chairman of the luncheon.

Roberta Unit.

Mrs. W. T. Bankston, of Roberta, sixth district committeewoman, has appointed Mrs. J. William Lowe as sixth district secretary. The Roberta unit is the first unit in the state to reach the 100 per cent quota. The unit will receive national recognition for this honor, as will all other units who reach this 100 per cent membership quota by December 31.

Macon.

The Joseph Neel unit of Macon made a call in person to the veterans of Base Hospital 62 in Augusta. The rehabilitation committee was in charge of the entertainment, and they carried magazines, 25 pounds of candy and enough cigarets and tobacco for the entire 600 boys.

Columbus.

Mrs. Frank Billings, Jr., of Columbus, chairman of membership for that unit, has planned an intensive campaign for that unit. Her committee includes Mrs. Palmer Mullins, captain of Group 1; Mrs. Joe Walters, No. 2; Mrs. B. F. Spivey, No. 3; Mrs. Roy Luttrell, No. 4; Mrs. J. R. Wooten, No. 5; Mrs. Tom Cooper, No. 6; Mrs. D. A. Stiffler, No. 7; Mrs. Dan Graves, No. 8.

Savannah Unit.

Savannah Unit No. 36 held a presentation exercise recently when it gave to the Chatham High school a flag and flagpole. At the October meeting, at which Mrs. John W. Daniel, president, presided, reports were given by Mrs. C. C. Mordecai, welfare department chairman, and Mrs. J. Witherspoon Daniel, telling of her visits to the marine hospital. Plans were made for the poppy sale, of which Mrs. Walter Housel is chairman.

Carl Boyd Unit.

Carl Boyd unit, of Cartersville, with Mrs. Fred Neel as president, is one of the most active of the small units. At the meeting recently Mrs. G. M. Boyd, mother of the boy for whom the post and unit were named, was the honor guest and made an address on her recent trip to the grave of her son in France. Mrs. A. R. Butler, of Eurarlee, another Gold Star mother, was also present. Mrs. Gordon Powell was chairman of the arrangements for the special program. Mrs. Powell presented Mrs. Boyd as the mother of three brave boys who wore the uniform of Uncle Sam in the World War and one of whom made the supreme sacrifice while serving his country in France. Mrs. Boyd stated that she was one of the 232 in her party, and one of the 3,000 in all, who visited the graves. The first act was to place a wreath of flowers on the grave of the Unknown Soldier in the Arc De Triumph, and later they were received by representatives of the French government, being accompanied on this trip by American Ambassador Page. Mrs. Boyd's son was Colonel Carl Boyd, who died a victim of pneumonia in January, 1919. He was personal aide to General Pershing during the general's service in France. Mrs. Boyd was privileged several times to visit her son's grave in Surenes, which is only a few miles from Paris.

Among the other guests present on this occasion were: Willis M. Boyd, son of Mrs. Boyd, and brother to the distinguished Colonel Boyd. Mr. Boyd accompanied his mother to France. Mrs. Fred Neel, district committeewoman in auxiliary work, made an address on the work throughout the state, and Mrs. G. E. Parks also spoke. M. L. Fleetwood, of Cartersville, brother of Robert W. Fleetwood, who also sleeps in France, was present.

Miss Ashe Weds William B. Creech.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 8.—Mrs. Jacob Edwin Ashe, of Columbia, S. C., announces the marriage of her daughter, Hannah Mary, to William Briggs Creech, formerly of Atlanta, November 2, at her home in Columbia. The ceremony was performed in the presence of the immediate family by the Rev. D. D. Herbert, pastor of the Washington Street Methodist church.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, William Sheeut Ashe, and E. L. Randle acted as best man. The bride wore a costume of brown with accessories to match, and carried an arm bouquet of pink rose and valley lilies.

Mr. and Mrs. Creech left for a trip through Florida. Mr. Creech is connected with the Westinghouse Electric Company. After November 15, Mr. and Mrs. Creech will be at home in the Venetian apartments, Davis Island, Tampa, Fla.

Miss Mary Matheson To Wed George Youmans, Jr., in December

Above is a lovely likeness of Miss Mary Matheson, beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth G. Matheson, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., formerly of Atlanta, whose engagement is announced today to George E. Youmans, Jr., of Atlanta, formerly of Adrain, Ga., the marriage to take place in December in the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian church, Bryn Mawr, Pa. Photograph by Bascom Biggers.

BRYN MAWR, Pa., Nov. 8.—An announcement of cordial social interest in Pennsylvania and Georgia is the announcement made today by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Gordon Matheson, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., formerly of Atlanta, of the engagement of their daughter, Mary, to George S. Youmans, Jr., of Atlanta, son of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Youmans, of Adrian, Ga. The marriage will take place in December at the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian church, Pennsylvania, and will be witnessed by a number of Atlantans who will go to Pennsylvania for the occasion.

Miss Matheson is the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matheson, her only sister being Miss Belle Matheson, and her brothers are Kenneth Matheson, Jr., and Graham Matheson. Her father, who is now president of Drexel institute in Philadelphia, was president of Georgia Tech for 17 years, having gone to Philadelphia only seven years ago. Her mother, before her marriage, was Miss Belle Fleet. Miss Matheson attended North Avenue Presbyterian school in Atlanta before moving north, and she completed her education at Gunston Hall in Washington, D. C., from which institution she was graduated and later took a post-graduate course.

She has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Spalding in Atlanta during the past month, and with her mother attended the wedding of Mrs. Spalding's daughter, Miss Constance Spalding and Albert Anderson, Jr., which took place October 18 at the Homestead, the Spalding home in West End, Atlanta. She was chosen among the new members of the Girls' Cotillion Club of Atlanta this fall, and was presented to the club members at the meeting held last October 29 at the Piedmont Driving Club.

Mr. Youmans, who is a prominent young businessman of Atlanta, holds a responsible position with the Georgia Cotton Growers Association. He is a former resident of Adrian, Ga., where his parents now reside. He received his education at Emory University and is a member of the A. T. O. fraternity. His brothers are Brooks Youmans, a student at Emory University and Rufus Youmans. His family are very prominent in the state of Georgia and are outstanding citizens of Adrian.

Following their marriage in December Mr. Youmans and his bride-to-be will make their home in Atlanta where they will be attractive additions to the young married set of society.

First Christmas Party Honoring Debutantes Announced Today

The first of the Christmas parties to be announced to be given in compliment to debutantes is the tea-dance at which Miss Martha Lewis and Miss Jane Sharp will entertain Wednesday, December 24, at the Piedmont Driving Club in honor of Misses Hannah Sterne, Frances Barnwell and Mary Goddard. This trio of debutantes are numbered among the most popular members of the 1930 Debutantes' Club and innumerable parties have been announced in their honor.

Miss Sterne is president of this season's club and during the Christmas season she and her debutante sisters will be popular figures attending the elaborate social functions that will mark this yuletide season as one of the most brilliant that Atlanta society has ever experienced. Miss Barnwell is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Barnwell and Miss Goddard is the lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John N. Goddard and like Miss Sterne these two debutantes are being honored at many social gayeties.

Miss Thornton Weds M. D. Dickerson, Jr.

MULLINS, S. C., Nov. 8.—Of interest throughout Georgia and the two Carolinas is the marriage of Miss Dorothy Caroline Thornton, of Mullins, S. C., and Marcus David Dickerson, Jr., of Douglas, Ga., which took place at Lawrenceville, Ga., last July 29. Mrs. Dickerson is the youngest of the four daughters of Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Thornton. Football Breakfast Honors Visitors At Driving Club

A number of prominent visitors who were in the city for the Tech-Vanderbilt football game were honor guests at the elaborate breakfast party given yesterday morning at the Piedmont Driving Club by Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Robert.

Vanderbilt colors, gold and black, and the Tech colors, gold and white, prevailed in the decorations of the spacious dining room where breakfast was served from long, attractively decorated tables. Giant yellow and white chrysanthemums predominated in the abundance of yellow and white flowers used on the mantel and tables. Tech and Vanderbilt pennants graced the side walls interspersed by attractive college posters. The hosts were assisted in receiving by the honor guests, including Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Walker, Mr. and Mrs. John Noel, Mr. and Mrs. Dan McGugin and Dr. and Mrs. Duncan Eve, all of Nashville, Tenn.; Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Springs, of Fort Mills, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Cason Callaway, of LaGrange, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. T. K. McKinney, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Madam! have you the—
Wrong Impression?
About Leon Frohsin's? Do you think because, trick young things find, at Leon's, such clever models, brim full of youth—that Leon has not planned equally as well, for those of you in the thrilling thirties? . . . . .
Because you are nearing or jus' past the forty mark, don't dress like "the dowager queen"—step out—be young once more. "A woman is as old as she looks," so let's look ten years younger. Leon's models for the smart matron do the trick. For Leon's models add style and subtract years—they give charm and distinction—that makes the mother of the modern maid her daughter's keenest competitor in style—and they both can find at Leon's just the modes that suit them.

Miss Janet Cooper Weds Lt. Moses at Home Ceremony

A wedding which reflected beauty and dignity was solemnized Friday evening when Miss Janet Cooper, the elder daughter of Mrs. William Somers Cooper, of Rock Rapids, Iowa, became the bride of Russell Leonard Moses, lieutenant of infantry, United States army, at the home of the groom's brother and sister, Lieutenant Lloyd Gibbons and Mrs. Gibbons, on Williams street, with Chaplain Joseph O. Ensrud performing the impressive ceremony in the presence of the immediate family.

An improvised altar was erected in the living room before the mantel and banked with ferns and palms while cathedral candelabra holding slender burning tapers were placed at either end of the altar and flanked by floor baskets of stately yellow chrysanthemums.

Lovely Bride.

The bride was radiantly lovely in her wedding gown of green velvet, which enhanced her brunet beauty. The gown was made long and straight, with a bertha of exquisite flesh lace, and the skirt was ankle length and her slippers were of green, and a corsage of tea roses and valley lilies completed her costume. She was met at the altar by the groom, and Chaplain Ensrud read the service uniting this popular young couple.

Lieutenant Gibbons and Mrs. Gibbons entertained with an informal reception. Roses and chrysanthemums were effectively arranged in the dining room and the table, which was covered with an imported cloth, was centered with the beautifully embossed wedding cake encircled with pink roses. The bride fulfilled an old army tradition by cutting the cake with her husband's saber.

After a wedding trip Lieutenant Moses and his bride will be at home at Columbus, Ga. Mrs. Moses traveled in a smart brown suit with accessories to match, her shoes, bag and gloves repeating the color notes of brown and tan. Her hat was an imported model of metallic cloth and her brown coat was collared in brown clipped fur.

Charming Personality.

Mrs. Moses is the elder daughter of Mrs. William Somers Moses, of Rock Rapids, and although she has never made a formal debut she has been prominently identified with the social affairs of her native state since her graduation from school several years ago. She possesses a charming personality and will be a decided addition to the gay social life of Fort Benning.

Lieutenant Moses is a graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point in the class of 1924 and has had a colorful career as an army officer, with tours of duty in the midwest and in Hawaii. He comes of a distinguished army family for his parents are Colonel George Williams Moses and Mrs. Moses, now stationed at Boise, Idaho. His sisters are Mrs. Floyd Gibbons, the wife of Lieutenant Gibbons, and Mrs. Kennith Pughe, the wife of Lieutenant Pughe, of Fort Benning. Lieutenant Moses is stationed at Fort Benning, where he is a member of the company commanders' class of the infantry school, and he has a host of friends throughout the service who will be interested to know of his marriage to lovely Janet Cooper.

Miss Florabel Shaw To Wed C. M. Johnston in Atlanta

Among today's interesting announcements of engagements to a wide circle of friends and relatives throughout the south, is that of Miss Florabel Shaw to Calvin Mell Johnston, whose marriage will be solemnized early in December at the North Avenue Presbyterian church in Atlanta.

Miss Shaw is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Shaw, of Wabasso, Fla., formerly of Madison, Fla. Through her mother, who was Miss Annie Morgan, of Valdosta, Ga., Miss Shaw is descended from one of the oldest families in the south. Her father is a member of the old and well-known Shaw family of eastern North Carolina, holding title to lands granted his ancestors by King George.

Mr. Johnston is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Johnston, of Monroe, Ga. His mother was formerly Miss Pearl Patrick. Both his father's and his mother's families have been prominently identified with Georgia history in Walton county for several generations. For the past several years Mr. Johnston has been connected with the Procter & Gamble Distributing Company's Atlanta office, as credit manager.

A number of interesting parties have been planned for Miss Shaw, the details of which will be announced later.

Hurst Dancing Club To Entertain.

Members and friends of the Hurst Dancing Club will give a masquerade ball Thursday evening, November 27. A seven-piece orchestra will furnish the music for dancing from 9 to 12 o'clock.

Miss Culpepper Weds Mr. Cutts In December

GREENVILLE, Ga., Nov. 8.—Of cordial interest to a wide circle of friends is the announcement of the engagement of Miss Sarah Caroline Culpepper, of Greenville, Ga., to Harvey Clark Cutts, of Atlanta, the marriage to be solemnized in December. The bride-to-be is the daughter of Honorable Nathan F. Culpepper, one of Georgia's most celebrated statesmen and lawyers. Her paternal grandparents were the late Mr. and Mrs. Simeon F. Culpepper, pioneers in the educational affairs of Meriwether county and in the development of the state's civic and social institutions. Miss Culpepper's maternal grandparents belonged to the widely-known Park family, she being the granddaughter of the late Major and Mrs. John W. Park, nestor of the Meriwether bar. She is likewise a niece of Honorable Orville A. Park, of Macon. Miss Culpepper is a graduate of Wesleyan College and completed her post-graduate work at Columbia University.

Mr. Cutts is the son of Dr. and Mrs. William Loomis Cutts, of Tennessee, formerly of Georgia, being long identified with the upbuilding of the religious life and welfare of these states. Mr. Cutts is a graduate of Mercer University and at present is connected with the publishing house of Charles Scribner's Sons in the capacity of state representative in the educational department.

Miss Edwina Houser Weds Mr. Collins in Fort Valley

FORT VALLEY, Ga., Nov. 8.—Eclipsing in beauty and fashionable interest all other affairs of the early fall season was the ceremony, solemnized amid a setting of floral beauty, at which Miss Edwina Houser became the bride of William Burton Collins, of Rome, at 6 o'clock Saturday evening, November 8, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Houser, on College street. The marriage service, which united two of the states well known families, enlisting the cordial interest of hosts of friends, was read by Dr. L. E. Leyburn, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, of Rome, and was witnessed by a large assemblage of southern society.

The bride and groom plighted their troth directly in front of the large old-fashioned fireplace, which was flanked on either side with Boston ferns, starred with silver candelabra holding lighted candles. On the ends of the mantel, which was centered with a large old mirror, reflecting the bridal party, were silver baskets of handsome white chrysanthemums, and immediately in front of the fire place was placed the priedieu upon which the young couple knelt for prayer.

A special musical program by Miss Miriam Edwards at the piano, accompanied by Professor Horace Rundell with violin was rendered; "Festal Prelude," "At Twilight" and other numbers forming a beautiful story of love and romance. Both the bridal chorus from Lohengrin and Mendelssohn's wedding march from "A Midsummer Nights Dream" was used.

Preceding the entrance of the wedding party, Catherine and Bettie Green, cousins of the bride, entered and lighted the tapers at the altar, then Mrs. Glenmore Green, only aunt of the bride, sang "I Love Thee," by Grieg, and "At Dawning." Following the impressive ceremony, Miss Laura Houser, only sister of the bride and maid of honor, sang the benediction.

The ushers were Doddridge Houser and Harris Hafer and Carl Griffin, of Rome, acted as the best man.

The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Harbin, of Rome, and Mrs. Florine Hatcher Boswell, of Wrightsville. The maid of honor was Miss Laura Houser, and the matron of honor was Mrs. Doddridge Houser, wore pink chiffon were gowned alike in exquisite models of softest green chiffon and carried gorgeous bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums.

Miss Laura Houser wore a gown of blue chiffon and carried pink chrysthemums; the matron of honor, Mrs. Doodridge Houser, wore pink chiffon and carried yellow chrysanthemums. Preceding the bride came little Mamie Miller Hartley, wearing a flesh colored frock and carrying the ring in a calla lily.

Beautiful Bride.

The bride entered with her father, John A. Houser, by whom she was given in marriage, and her queenly beauty was enhanced by her wedding gown of softest satin, the ivory tints blending in exquisite effect with the bride's lovely hair and dark eyes. The gown was cut along girlish lines with a becoming neckline, finished with rose point lace, the sleeves also finished with a lace motif of rose point. The bride's veil of tulle was held in place across the front by a spray of orange blossoms, forming a becoming cap effect. Small clusters of orange blossoms finished the sides, another spray confining the veil at the back. Her slippers were of white satin, beaded in pearls and she carried a sheath of exquisite calla lilies tied with wide satin ribbons, and her only ornament was a necklace of pearls. She carried a handkerchief of duchess and rose point lace which her mother, the former Iza Hartley, carried at her own wedding.

Following the ceremony an elaborate wedding reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. Houser. Receiving with the hosts and members of the bridal party were the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Collins, of Rome, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Haddock, of Quitman, grandparents of the bride. Quantities of lovely cut flowers, tall standards, baskets in shower effect, with shaded chandeliers festooned with smilax completed an effective arrangement of decorations. Miss Annette Shepard kept the bride's book and other young friends who served the guests included: Misses Charley Mathews, Lucy Mathews, Margaret McMillan, Emily and Lottie Norton, Elsie Gray Sanchez, Laura Lambert, Frances Marchman and Emily Taylor.

Others assisting Mrs. Houser in entertaining were Mrs. V. L. Brown, Mrs. J. L. Brown, Mrs. J. L. Everett, Miss Electra Weeks, Mrs. E. L. Lester, Miss Allie Houser, Mrs. W. B. Norton, Mrs. B. H. Fincher, Mrs. Frank Fincher and Mrs. Henry Branham.

Mr. Collins and his bride left for a wedding trip, after which they will reside in Rome. The bride traveled in a smart costume of blue silvertone crepe with accessories blending; her coat collared and cuffed with squirrel and her becoming hat a close-fitting model of French felt.

Among the prominent out-of-town guests attending the wedding were: Mrs. John A. Shields, Waycross; Miss Iris Claxton, Miss Ellen Price, Dublin; Miss Mollie Wells, Midville; Judge and Mrs. Lee Claxton, Eufaula; Mr. and Mrs. Claud Sanders, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Brannon, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Cummings, William Ford, James Hill, Howard and Ralph Griffin, H. W. Griffin, Clayton Clements and M. E. Brinson, of Rome; Mr. and Mrs. Joe Flournoy, Mr. and Mrs. Malcom E. Everett, Dr. and Mrs. A. R. Rozar, Miss Zoe Rozar, of Macon; Judge and Mrs. A. L. Hatcher, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Boswell, of Wrightsville; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Collins, Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. Granville Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Pat Fitzgibbons, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Heard, of Cordele; Dr. and Mrs. Allen Prichett, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Davis, of Perry; Dr. and Mrs. E. B. Davis, Byromville, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Faville, of Dawson.

Charming New Residents Welcomed Into Atlanta Society

Mrs. Arthur S. Bird and her daughters, Betty Ann and Louise, who are pictured at the upper right, are residing on Peachtree road, having arrived recently with Mr. Bird from Kansas City, Mo., for residence here. Mrs. Bird and Miss Betty Ann Bird spent the summer in Europe. Mrs. Bird was formerly Miss Archie Crowley and she is an accomplished golfer and an expert horsewoman. The group appearing at the upper left presents Mrs. R. C. Hoffman, Jr., of 3360 Peachtree road and her small daughters, Kitty and Ethel. Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman and their daughters arrived in the city recently from Baltimore, Md., and are interesting additions to Atlanta's social circles. Like their lovely mother, the Misses Hoffman are also expert riders of the horse and at an early date their string of thoroughbreds will be shipped from Maryland to Atlanta. Misses Hoffman have enrolled at Washington seminary, where they are already numbered among the most popular students attending this fashionable school. Miss Florence Carey and her mother, Mrs. George L. Carey, are pictured below, having moved to Atlanta from Chicago, Ill., and reside on Sherwood road. Miss Carey is a student at Washington seminary, where she is a popular member of the sophomore class and is president of the Journalism Club. Photographs by the Misses Mead.

Mrs. Brooks Speaks.

Mrs. Richard Preston Brooks, state chairman of the national highway beautification commissi of the United States Good Roads Association and also of the Atlanta Woman's Club, at at the meeting Thursday of this committee announced interesting plans. Mrs. Brooks said in part: "Our highest aim and purpose should be not only to make Atlanta highways more beautiful, but our whole nation linked together with beauty as well as with ribbons of cement and asphalt. In doing this work we must seek the full co-operation of the county board of commissioners, the highway board and all patriotic and civic organizations, and with this vast number of forward-looking men and women working shoulder to shoulder with us, we should have every reason to count with confident pride upon the magnificent adornment for the future beauty and good of our beloved state.

"You already know that Georgia will celebrate her 200th anniversary of her birthday in 1933, and as state chairman of the national highway beautification commission of the United States Good Roads Association, as state chairman of the highway beautification committee of the D. A. R.'s and chairman of the beautification committee of the Atlanta Woman's Club, I am also serving as a member of the association functioning under the State Chamber of Commerce in working out a program for bedecking Georgia for her birthday by beautifying the highways and countrysides, and we are hoping to have a 'See Georgia Motorcade' for that occasion in the spring of 1933.

"Many roads are now and will be under construction, yet much can be done now toward their beautification. On such highways as are finished, trees, shrubs and flowers may be planted; and for the roads now under construction we might obtain a plot of ground from someone in which to plant temporarily small trees and shrubbery for transplanting on the roadsides after the highways are completed. In beautifying highways, please bear in mind that the abolishment of all unsightly signs, rubbish and everything not in harmony with beauty is most essential and they should be removed. In conclusion, as we visualize the beautiful Georgia that is to be within the next few years when in the height of her glory and beauty, I will close my remarks in my own simple words:

"Let me be a woman in this land of beauty,
Let my labor be of love and not from a sense of duty;
Always ready with willing hand and heart,
Ever glad to do a woman's part."

Members of the highway beautification committee are: Mesdames Richard Preston Brooks, chairman, Forsyth; Luther C. Holsombach, co-chairman; C. E. Faust, E. C. Crenshaw, William Leppard, H. C. Dobbins, John A. Perdue, Walter Scott Askew, W. E. Beckham, Irving Thomas, A. C. Whitehead, Ira E. Farmer and Miss Virginia Hardin. Mrs. Holsombach is chairman and Mrs. Farmer co-chairman of the Fifth District national highway beautification committee of the United States Good Roads Association.

Dr. Dodge Will Address West End Woman's Club Nov. 13

An address by Dr. Witherspoon Dodge on "Community Loyalty" will be the feature of the community program, arranged by Mrs. Chester W. Johnson, community service chairman of the Fifth district, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, and also of the West End Woman's Club, to be held at the clubhouse, 1100 Cascade road, Thursday evening, November 13, from 8 to 10 o'clock. Dr. Dodge is pastor of the Central Congregational church and a member of the Better Films Committee. He will be especially remembered by the radio audiences for the forceful and inspiring messages brought to thousands of listeners over local stations.

A musical program will be rendered by the orchestra of Gordon Street Baptist church, with Warren Rhodes as director. Several sections by the Toy orchestra, composed of 30 children between the ages of 6 and 12 years, will be another attractive feature of the entertainment. The object of this community work is to create interest and fellowship among the residents of each community. With a spirit of loyalty and interest great and lasting benefits may be derived.

Mrs. Johnson extends invitations to residents of West End and the city at large to attend this meeting on Thursday evening. No charge of any kind will be made. Automobiles will meet those coming out on street cars at the end of the Whitehall-Beecher car line at 7:45 o'clock. Orange juice will be served by Mrs. O. M. Fisher.

The executive board meeting of the West End Woman's Club will be held Wednesday afternoon, November 12, at 2:15, followed by the business meeting at 3 o'clock, with Mrs. Clark M. Settle, president, presiding.

Mrs. W. G. Baskin, scholarship chairman, announces a new full scholarship in dancing to the Margaret Mooring School of Dancing. A scholarship in piano from Mrs. A. L. Slaton and one in expression from Mrs. Milton Davis are still available. Those interested are asked to call Mrs. Baskin, West 0609-J.

Junior department of the West End Woman's Club will sponsor a dance for the members and their friends on Friday evening, November 14, from 8 to 11 o'clock, at the clubhouse.

Mrs. Conrad Smith has been appointed chairman of the committee representing the West End Woman's Club, in the sale of poppies on November 11, for the benefit of disabled veterans.

The clubhouse is available for dances on Saturday and other nights during the week at a reasonable charge. For information call Mrs. E. F. De Freese, house chairman, West 2620-J, or the co-chairman, Mrs. Charles B. Fife, West 0256-M, or Mrs. Settle, West 2210.

Mrs. W. N. Ponder, treasurer of the club, will be at the clubhouse Wednesday at 2 o'clock to receive dues. Those desiring to mail checks may send same to Mrs. Ponder at 1198 Cascade road, and their new membership cards will be mailed to them at once.

Miss Dorothea Stanley Is Honor Guest.

Roy Young To Give Concert At Bessie Tift

FORSYTH, Ga., Nov. 8.—Roy Young, noted violinist, will give a concert at the Bessie Tift college auditorium Tuesday evening, November 11. Mr. Young was at one time violinist for the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra and is known the world over for his animal interpretations. He has also composed songs which have been made famous by Schumann-Heink and Emma Eames and his violin works have been used by Ysaye and Kubelik. Mr. Young is especially noted for his technique and complete accompaniment in contrary motion. His Etude in Thirdo demonstrates his dexterity and skill as a violinist.

Bessie Tift celebrated the two thousandth anniversary of the birth of the poet Vergil Wednesday morning in chapel. The celebration in the United States was sponsored by the American Classical League. Books were published on the subject, tours were made and collections of music arranged for the occasion. Bessie Tift celebrated the day by an interesting and entertaining lecture by Miss Eugenia Stone, head of the Latin department. By the use of picture slides Miss Stone told the story of Rome in the days of Vergil and of the emperor, Augustus, who caused him to write his "Aenid." She also gave the mythological and historic background for this great classic.

Even Society, of Bessie Tift college, has as its president Frances Heard, of Vienna, who was recently elected. In the junior class Ruby Gaskins, of Nashville, was elected song leader. The sophomores have as song leaders Mary Bennett, of Canton, and Leith Carlton, of Nashville. Miss Aranna Watson, Marietta, was recently elected song leader of the senior class.

At a called meeting of the freshman class Monday, two new officers were elected: Cheer leader, Lou Ella Phillips; reporter, Jamye Green.

Music Club met Wednesday night in the music studio and the following program was rendered: Bach: Prelude and Fugue in B Major No. 23, Edna Hendrix; Bach: Prelude and Fugue in E Flat Minor, Mrs. Howell Newton; Leschetizky: Arabesque in form of Etude, Julia Powelle: Liszt: Tenth Rhapsody, Sara McGee; Chopin: Scherzo in B Minor, Irma James; Chopin: Ballade A Flat, Mrs. Newton.

Weddings Center Interest at Griffin.

GRIFFIN, Ga., Nov. 7.—A marriage of wide interest was that of Miss Velma Stewart and J. Arthur Jones, which was solemnized at 4:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. King, on the Macon road, with the Rev. C. B. Bullard, pastor of the Second Baptist church, performing the ceremony in front of an improvised altar in the living room in the presence of friends and relatives.

The bride was especially lovely in a smart fall ensemble of beige tweed with a small felt hat and other accessories to match. Mr. and Mrs. Jones will make their home on Broad street, in Griffin.

Mrs. Jones, who is the fourth daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Stewart, received her education in the Griffin schools and possesses a charming personality. Mr. Jones is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Jones, and is very popular and holds a responsible position with a local business concern.

Miss Susie Bunn, of Griffin, and Thomas Harper, of Goggans, were married Sunday at the home of the Rev. George Goddard, near Griffin. The bride was gowned in her wedding outfit of blue crepe with a small blue felt hat and other accessories to match. Mrs. Harper is a graduate of the Griffin High school and has many friends here, where she has always made her home. Mr. Harper is a prominent young business man of Goggans, where he and his bride will reside after their wedding trip.

The marriage of Miss Bernice Spicer, of Washington, D. C., formerly of Griffin, and Edward Bundy, of New York city, was solemnized Monday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Simon, with a number of friends and relatives present. The bride was given in marriage by her mother, Mrs. Cora Spicer, and was met in front of the improvised altar by the groom and his best man, Harold Bennet, of Baltimore, Md. Miss Frances Hyde was the bride's only attendant.

The bride's brunet beauty was enhanced by her wedding ensemble of hunter's green velvet, worn with a small hat and slippers to match. She wore a shoulder bouquet of green orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Bundy will reside in New York city following an extensive wedding trip.

Mrs. Bundy is the only daughter of Mrs. Cora Spicer and the late Benjamin Spicer, and received her education in the Griffin schools and has often visited her aunt, Mrs. A. Ruskin, since going to Washington, D. C. Mr. Bundy is a member of a well-known eastern family and is a prominent young business man.

Miss Louise Stewart, of Griffin, and Archie McGarity, of McDonough, were married here Monday with a number of friends and relatives in attendance. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Stewart and has won many friends by her charming personality. Mr. McGarity is the son of Mrs. Lizzie McGarity, of McDonough, where the young couple will make their home after returning from their wedding trip.

Miss Parker Weds Harry Morgan, Jr.

The wedding of Miss Alice Sihelnik Parker and Harry Morgan, Jr., was an event of social interest to their friends. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents and an altar of palms and pink rosebuds was improvised in the living room. The bride was given in marriage by her father, W. C. Parker. Her bridal gown was of white satin with bandeau of white sapphires. Her bouquet was of bride's roses. The bride was attended by one bridesmaid, Miss Lena Tollerson, and a maid of honor, Mrs. Hawkins. Best man was Jessie Bloodworth and one attendant, R. L. Parker. There were several out-of-town guests. Among them was the bride's grandmother, Mrs. J. M. Walsh, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan left immediately after the ceremony to visit in Tennessee and on their return they will make their home with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morgan, Sr., on Eighth street.

Mrs. Campbell Relates Colorful Incidents of Her Life Abroad

Mrs. James L. Campbell, of London, England, well-known author, the guest of her sister, Mrs. Hinton Hopkins, at her home on Fairview road in Druid Hills, is an interesting November visitor. Mrs. Campbell was formerly Miss Alice Ormond, of Atlanta, but has resided abroad for 18 years, and this is the first time she has been here in that length of time.

BY BESSIE S. STAFFORD.

The presence in Atlanta of Mrs. James L. Campbell, of London, England, is a matter of keen interest to both the older regime and to the most modern of moderns. It is her first visit here in more than 18 years, and she is so successful as an author that she is internationally known through her novels, "Juggernaut," "Water Weed" and "The Murder in Paris," the latter having been declared this year's sixth best seller. The scenes are all laid abroad and the plots are intriguing. Her latest literary contribution is called "The Click of the Gate," a title which instantly piques the curiosity.

Elusive Charm.

Mrs. Campbell is visiting her sister, Mrs. Hinton Hopkins, at her home on Fairview road in Druid Hills, and will prolong her stay a fortnight before returning to England. She retains the same elusive charm with which she was endowed as Miss Alice Ormond, one of the prettiest and most attractive young women ever to reside in Atlanta. The years have brought a richer expression to her blue eyes, and her golden hair is parted in the middle of her forehead, and waves naturally towards the small knot at the nape of her neck. She wore a gown of independence blue crepe yesterday morning, a color which deepened her eyes and accentuated the fairness of her skin. All of her writing is accomplished in the afternoon, when she goes to her study and closes the door as a sign that she is not to be interrupted, due consideration having been given in the forenoon to the scheduled program of her home. This charming home is located on Albion road, bordering St. John's Wood, which figures so importantly in English literature.

Her Children.

Quite naturally does Lawrence Campbell, 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, come by his literary ability which he is already developing. He goes to Westminster, one of the oldest public schools in England, right next door to Westminster Abbey, and attends service in the abbey every morning before going to school. Golden-haired Ormond Campbell, the only daughter, is the image of her lovely mother, when the latter was a little girl in Atlanta and wore her golden tresses braided in two wide plaits. She is 14 and shows a decided taste for composing poetry. She attends Francis Holland's School for Girls, which has the same fine standing for girls as Westminster has for boys. Comes the youngest, Robert Campbell, who shows an inventive tendency and is always tinkering with things electrical. At 13 years of age he has definitely decided to become an electrical engineer. He is enrolled in a modern co-educational boarding school.

Meets Celebrities.

Mrs. Campbell meets and converses often with Rebecca West, reviewer and essayist, one among two or three foremost literary women in England, has who has lectured in America. It was at Mrs. West's house that she met H. G. Wells, the world-famed author, who Mrs. Campbell says is a delightful person with whom to talk, because he is witty, good tempered, and an excellent listener. At the Pen Club, of which John Galsworthy is the very much beloved president, she met George Bernard Shaw, who often dines there. It is at the Pen Club that authors foregather once a month. Shaw is the theatrical god of actresses and actors, and, in Mrs. Campbell's opinion, his charm has not been overrated.

Mrs. Campbell has dined en famille with Lady Margot Asquith, the brilliant Englishwoman, who has her own convictions and possesses the courage to declare and live by her creed. Her home in Bedford square is one of the handsomest places in London, and the mecca for literary celebrities. Lady Asquith is a well-known author, having made several contributions to literature, and is one of the most charming personages in London. She somehow always contrives to stir up some political angle to interest England. She, too, has lectured in this country, having toured the United States several years ago.

Inclines Toward Conservatives.

When queried as to her politics Mrs. Campbell confessed her sympathy inclined toward the conservatives. She feels the absolute necessity of having the two strong parties. Men and women discuss politics in England in a great measure, and English women are prone to take more interest in the political phase than do American women. She states without any hesitancy, that she could not live in England without being allied with one or the other party.

Her husband, James L. Campbell, is an author in his own right, having written "Face Value," and "Miracle of Peille," books that have met with ready sale. His brother, T. Bowyer Campbell, an Anglican priest, authored "Black Sadie" and "Old Miss," the latter being an extraordinarily true story of life in Virginia in the last century. The principal character was his great-grandmother, whose ancestral home was in Bedford City, Va., and is called Avenel.

Miss Jane Clayton and Mr. Stockton Wed at Lovely Home Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Jane Clayton and Ruble E. Stockton was solemnized yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Clayton, on Oxford place. The Rev. F. C. Talmage performed the ceremony before an altar of palms and ferns. Cathedral tapers were used in artistic effect.

Preceding the ceremony a program of nuptial music was rendered by William Fleming, pianist, and Deneen McCormick, violinist. The bridal party entered to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March. During the ceremony "Dreams of Love" was played.

The ribbon bearers were Bobbie Dell Stockton and Jeanette Cleveland, dressed in pink and blue georgette. Next were Lucy Hickman and Polly Aiken, dressed in white georgette, carrying lighted tapers.

Miss Corinne Clayton attended her sister as maid of honor and was modishly attired in French blue taffeta. Her flowers were an arm bouquet of Ophelia roses.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and they were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Charles Cox.

The bride's blond beauty was enhanced by her wedding gown of ivory satin, made along princess lines. Her flowers were bride roses, showered with valley lilies.

Following the ceremony an informal reception was held. Misses Calvinia Wilkie, Martha Embry, Margaret Sarrington and Martha Erwin presided at the punch bowls. Mrs. Albert Sunson, sister of the groom, kept the bride's book.

Mr. and Mrs. Stockton left for an extended motor trip. Upon their return they will reside at 2025 Robson place.

Garden Club of Georgia Votes To Beautify Dixie Highway

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—At the executive board of the Garden Club of Georgia held November 5 in Augusta, at the home of the state president, Mrs. Joseph McK. Speer, it was recommended that the garden clubs of the state concentrate this year on the beautification of the Dixie highway between Atlanta and Rome. This is one of the important paved highways of the state and its beautification has already been started by garden clubs in the section under the leadership of Mrs. Mary Turner Jones, of Marietta, and Mrs. George Smith, of Rome.

Mr. Milner, assistant state engineer, has promised that the highway department will clear the road for planting and Dr. T. H. McHatton, of the State Agricultural College, has offered to landscape and prepare maps showing the proper planting for it. The Garden Club of Georgia now asks that the garden clubs of the state furnish trees to the extent of their ability. It requires 66 trees on each side for every mile. Mrs. James Hull, of Augusta, beautification chairman, who is unable to serve at present because of illness, asks that communications on the subject be sent to Mrs. W. R. Houston, 2618 Walton way, Augusta, acting chairman for Mrs. Hull. Mrs. Cooper Newton, Griffin, state treasurer, will have charge of the fund, and A. J. Nitzschke, Thomaston, president of the Georgia State Horticultural Society, will act as purchasing agent for the trees. Anyone interested in the beautifying of Georgia is invited to contribute the cost of each tree, probably 75 cents to $1.

The Milledgeville Garden Club, Mrs. E. R. Hines, president, was admitted to membership, making 61 member clubs. The annual convention will be held in Savannah in April, the exact date to be set later.

T. E. L. Class Honors Teacher.

T. E. L. Class of the Tabernacle Baptist church met Friday and was called to order by the president, Mrs. Geise Peeples, with Mrs. C. P. Martin leading the opening prayer. Miss Mattie Smith gave the devotional. Standing committees reported splendid work being done, especially by the benevolent committee, as a number are being cared for, given food and clothing.

Mrs. S. F. Roberts and her assistants provided a birthday surprise party for the teacher, Mrs. Ralph Stewart. The class gave Mrs. Stewart a fountain pen and a large birthday cake. Forty-two members were present.

Service Star Legion To Meet.

Atlanta and Fulton county chapters of Service Star Legion meets in the palm room of the Atlanta Woman's Club Tuesday at 3 o'clock, November 11. Special work for disabled veterans and their families will be reported and new work assigned. The chapter will give the regular monthly program at hospital No. 48 Monday, November 17, and distribute cigarets and chewing gum to the surgical ward of 64 beds which they have adopted. After this meeting a committee will visit "48," distributing choice apples presented to the chapter by J. Frank Beck through the chapter's secretary, Mrs. J. C. Mellichamp. A special armistice program will consist of readings by Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs—the first will be John Mansfield's celebrated poem, "1914," and an equally well-known poem, "Victory Bells," by Grace Conkling, followed by a short talk on adequate defense and international peace. A nominating committee will be appointed at this meeting.

Miss Whitener Weds James Harold Steed.

Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Whitener announce the marriage of their daughter, Mildred Marie, to James Harold Steed, which was solemnized in Seale, Ala., October 27, 1930.

Mr. and Mrs. Steed will be at home at 1017 Blue Ridge avenue, N. E.

Description of Phantasy Concert By Atlanta Symphony Orchestra

BY GEORGE F. BRADFORD.

A Sunday afternoon in December, 1931. Too chilly for motoring or outdoor recreation, yet the family is more than usually cheerful at dinner, because they are looking forward to the great treat of the week. Father is more indulgent, while mother is positively bubbling over with good nature.

Gladys and her young man, Bobby, accompany her parents to the orchestra hall, though the young people will sit somewhere by themselves in the balcony. Of course seats are cheaper there for small-salaried Bobbies who wish to impress young ladies that they appreciate only the very best in music. Let those who wish stay home and dial in on Roxy or the Philharmonic; the wise young Atlantan wants his orchestra full strength and unmixed, a 100 per cent delight to the senses—hearing, seeing and the grasp of young hands which seem to impart a more fervent impress when inspired by delicious strains from a stage-full of skilled musicians.

And the orchestra—here the members of it come, sauntering out to their places. What an impressive body of men they are, 75 of them, each one selected with great care by the examining board. No amateurs here. No favorites. Every day for a week they have been rehearsing and preparing their program. Somewhere in the hall a great Japanese gong strikes, and a hush falls on orchestra and audience alike. The director is about to appear!

From the wings steps our immaculately attired Enrico Leide, the signal for prolonged applause. The baton, posed a moment to assure perfection in the first attack, begins to wave, and we hear the marvelous first strains of Beethoven's "Lenore" overture, a work that trafficks in angels and the sublime, in exaltation that becomes almost opressive, a dramatic pattern in tones. This piece was described by Richard Wagner as "less an overture to a music drama than the music-drama itself." It is, in fact, the mightiest of dramas, plunging us into a gloomy dungeon and night's awful silence, broken by the moans of a condemned soul longing for freedom. Inspired by a swift resolve, the prison barriers are torn down until the last stone is heaved away and freedom's sunlight streams into the dungeon, voiced at the close by all the strings in one of the most stirring unison passages in musical literature. Here has been unceasing dramatic progress, from the first yearning thought to the execution of a vast resolve.

After this ride down the foaming torrent we breathe a spell, and then float out upon a placid, quiet stream. Pastoral scenes line the banks. Green fields, quiet herds, and at night the thinkling bells that "lull the distant folds." We have heard Rabaud's eclogue—"Virgilian Poem of Orchestra." Its beauty of melody, form and scoring makes it worthy of more frequent performance.

And now, after we have met our friends during the intermission, the gong summons us back to our seats for the last half—Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. It is a long work, in four movements, with a somber and fateful theme appearing in each movement—perhaps the first symphony ever written to be so tied together by thematic material common to all the movements. Philip Hale has said that "there is more drama in this symphony than in three-fourths of the operas." In it Tschaikowsky pours out his complaints, longings and despair, as he was so accustomed to do in his more important music, but just before the close it changes from clouds to sunshine, from defeat to triumph.

Well, this concert by the Atlanta Symphony orchesta is over. There is a new or renewed feeling in our hearts as we go out. Much of the exaltation we felt during the music will remain with us, to temper our harshness and make us realize the ultimate greatness of man's spiritual accomplishments. We have viewed again some of the edifices reared by the world's great architects of sound. Our understanding of classical musical literature has been broadened. This orchestra brings more pleasure to the square inch than small orchestras playing commonplace tunes can bring to the square mile.

"Of all the arts," said Napoleon the Great, "music has the strongest influence on the passions. . . . An inspired symphony composed by a master has far more influence than a treatise on morality, which convinces our reason without affecting our conduct."

"Wasn't it gr-r-rand?" is the prevailing comment as we pass into the lobby.

Yes, Mother and Father, Gladys and Bobby, it was grand. Much better than any radio program could possibly be. The symphony orchestra is the greatest universal art creation of man. It helps to sustain our ideals (even the lowest have them) against the ideal-wrecking world.

"I care not who writes our laws," said an idealist, "so long as I can write our songs." Our popular songs have been wrecked, but the songs of the symphony orchestra have not been wrecked. They will never be wrecked by Jazz sensualists or faddists. Musical art is a tree too deeply rooted in the past for that; its fruit does not change with the seasons.

When art declines, then follows the encroachment of social parasites eating into the foundations of our institutions. We have got to do something about our musical situation, which is becoming acute.

One of the best things this city can do is to found a permanent Atlanta Symphony orchestra and support it with our unlimited faith in what it will eventually accomplish for the intelligence and rectitude of our people, especially the young.

Attractive Visitors Prove Impetus To Post Activities

FORT McPHERSON, Ga., Nov. 8.—Attractive visitors and the social activities attendant upon their arrival in garrison circles will center the interest of the military contingent this week. Miss Dorothy Bartlett, of Washington, D. C., arrives Thursday to visit Major Roland Gaugler and Mrs. Gaugler at their quarters. Miss Bartlett was the guest of Major Gaugler and Mrs. Gaugler two seasons ago and has a number of friends in the military set who will be interested to know of her arrival. Miss Bartlett will be accompanied by her aunt, Miss Vashti Bartlett, and her grandfather, G. H. Bartlett, who will spend a brief time with Major Gaugler and Mrs. Gaugler before going to Florida for the winter.

Mrs. Byron Stewert, of Aurora, Ill., arrives this week to be the guest of Lieutenant Walter Scott Winn, Jr., and Mrs. Winn at their quarters. William Saltzman and Emmett Lyons will also be guests of Lieutenant Winn and Mrs. Winn for several days this week.

The corps area dinner given at the Biltmore hotel Saturday evening centered interest. The table was placed in the Pompeiian room on the arcade floor and covers were placed for 60 members of the corps area and their wives.

Captain John Nicholson and Mrs. Nicholson entertained at a buffet supper at their home on the Johnson Mill road Saturday evening following the Tech-Vanderbilt game at Grant field. The table was covered with a canton cover and centered with a low bowl of yellow and white chrysanthemums; the colors of Georgia Tech, encircled by burning tapers, and the guests included the officers of the military unit on duty at Georgia Tech and their wives and a few additional friends.

Miss Emily Plummer Entertains Visitor.

Miss Margaret Thompson, of Nashville, Tenn., the guest of Miss Emily Plummer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Plummer, of Westminster drive, is being entertained at a number of social affairs during her visit to Atlanta, her former home. Yesterday Miss Thompson was central figure at a small luncheon given by Miss Plummer at the Capital City Club. The table had as its central decoration a bowl filled with chrysanthemums, and covers were placed for Misses Thompson, Harriett Grant, Miriam Fleming, Jule McClatchey, Suzanne Memminger and Miss Plummer.

This afternoon Miss Plummer will keep open house at her home from 5 until 7 o'clock in compliment to Miss Thompson. A large number of the younger set of Atlanta society will call to meet the attractive visitor.

Mrs. Holt and Mr. Woodruff Wed at Macon Ceremony

MACON, Ga., Nov. 8.—The marriage of Mrs. Lillian Watson Holt to Frank L. Woodruff was solemnized at noon Saturday at the home of the bride-elect's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Lee Watson, on Orange street in Macon. Dr. Cyril Bentley, rector of Christ church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by immediate relatives. Macon Martin, of Atlanta, acted as Mr. Woodruff's best man, and Miss Anne Holt, daughter of the bride, was her only attendant and wore a costume of brown chiffon velvet and a shoulder bouquet of sweetheart roses. The bride was modishly gowned in an ensemble of hunters' green leda cloth, the coat having a shawl collar of lapin fur, and the blouse was of beige colored embroidered marquisette. Her hat was a French model of green felt, and she wore a shoulder bouquet of orchids.

Mrs. Woodruff is an attractive and charming woman and possesses traits of heart and mind which have endeared her to a wide circle of friends. She graduated from Wesleyan college and is a member of the Alpha Delta Pi fraternity.

Mr. Woodruff is assistant to Ben S. Read, president of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with headquarters in Atlanta, and he holds membership in the Capital City and Piedmont Driving clubs.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff will spend ten days in New York city, and upon their return to Atlanta will make their home at the Georgian Terrace.

Mrs. Greene Requests Ward Leagues To Hold Meetings

Mrs. Harry L. Greene, president of the Atlanta League of Women Voters, requests the ward leagues to meet within the next two weeks for the purpose of electing ward chairmen and for nominating for president and the board of directors of the Atlanta league. The nominations, as soon as made, should be sent to league headquarters to be compiled for the issue of Facts which will again attempt to present, for the benefit of the membership of the league, the platform of league candidates and the answers to the questionnaire which will be submitted to all candidates, just as the league presents the platform and answers to the league's questions sent to candidates for political office. According to the by-laws of the league, there must be in each instance more candidates than can be elected, so as to give the membership a real choice of their officers and enable them to express an opinion as to which candidate appears to them to advocate and to be best able to carry out the aims and program of the league.

It is the purpose of the league to exemplify in its own workings the same principle of democracy which are the ideals of good citizens in American government. Each ward organization is at liberty to nominate "at large" for the city league officers as well as to elect "at large."

Mrs. R. S. Goulden, chairman of the twelfth ward league, calls a meeting at her home, 162 Warren street, N. E., Kirkwood, Tuesday, November 11, at 3 o'clock. After the election of the chairman for 1931 and the nominations for city president and the directors who will compose the officers for the coming year, the feature of the program will be a talk on "Peace" by Mrs. J. N. McEachern, chairman of the Georgia Conference on the Cause and Cure of War. Since the meeting is held on Armistice Day, it is considered fitting to have the educational part of the program for the day to center around education for peace, and the gradual elimination of the causes of war. Mrs. R. E. Rollins, chairman for the second ward, announces the November meeting for Thursday at 3 o'clock at Georgia Avenue school. Mrs. Rollins urges all second ward members to attend this important meeting at which time the officers of the ward organization will be elected and the nominations made for the city league officers.

Eighth ward meets Friday, November 14, at 3 o'clock on the mezzanine floor of the Georgian Terrace hotel. After the election of ward officers and the nominations for the Atlanta league officers, there will be a talk by Mrs. Leonard Haas on city elections and the democratic committee. This subject is specially pertinent just now since in the general city election, to be held December 3, there are more than 25 candidates for aldermen and councilmen to take the place of members of general council who have resigned on account of having been indicted by the grand jury in the graft probe. Says Mrs. Haas, "If the city primary had been held late in October, as the league advocates, it would not now be necessary to have these candidates running in the general election, since nominations would have been taken care of in the primary. Also this election is especially important on account of the plan for reducing the size of council which will be submitted to the people for their approval or disapproval. A study of the proposed plan is necessary before one is qualified to vote in the matter."

Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs, a prominent member of the Atlanta league and chairman of international co-operation to prevent war for the Georgia league, will speak on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock at Miss Lovette's private school on "The Meaning of Armistice Day." The public is invited to listen over the radio at 5:15 in the afternoon of Monday, November 10, as Mrs. Jacobs will discuss "Practical Possibilities of Peace." "Pleasant Paths of Peace" will be Mrs. Jacobs' subject before the Service Star Legion at the Woman's Club at 3:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, November 17.

Eufaula Wedding Of Interest Here.

EUFAULA, Ala., Nov. 8.—Of interest to a wide circle of friends and relatives and prominent family connections is the announcement of the marriage of Miss Annie Ruth Powell, of Eufaula, Ala., and Evon E. Brewton, of Panama City, Fla., which was quietly solemnized at 2 o'clock last Saturday afternoon, at the Foster Street Methodist church in Dothan, Ala. The ceremony was performed by Dr. D. W. Haskew, pastor of the church, in the presence of a group of close friends and relatives. The bride wore a smart ensemble in black and white with hat, shoes and accessories to match. Her bouquet was formed of white chrysanthemums tied with narrow white satin ribbon. The bride is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Angus Powell, of Eufaula, Ala. She is a great-niece of the late Colonel Milton A. Smith. She is a sister of Miss Kathryn Powell, Miss Virginia Powell and Morris Powell, of Eufaula, and Mrs. Mary Lark, of Fort Gaines, Ga. Her other brothers are Milton Powell, Raleigh Powell, of Atlanta, Ga., William A. Powell, Jr., of Houston, Texas, and Ellredge Powell, of Ardmore, Okla. The bride attended school in South Carolina and Oklahoma.

The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Brewton, prominent citizens of Castleberry and Brewton, Ala. Dr. Brewton received his medical degree in Germany. The bridegroom is a brother of Harvey Brewton, of Berlin, Germany, who also received his medical degree abroad but at the present time holds a responsible position with an aircraft corporation in Germany and who is one of the distinguished engineers in charge of the world's largest airplane, the Dornier DO-X. He is also a brother of W. H. Brewton and Miss Voncile Brewton, of Panama City, Florida.

Mr. Brewton attended Rice Institute, Yale, Texas A. and M. College, where he was an outstanding athlete. From the Texas college he went to the University of Alabama, where he graduated. While there he was also an outstanding athlete. Since 1926 Mr. Brewton has been assistant secretary and treasurer of the Minor C. Keith Florida Properties, Inc.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Brewton left for a motor trip to points of interest in Florida, after which they will be at home at their home, Fairview Lodge, overlooking beautiful St. Andrews bay, near Panama City, Fla.

Mr. and Mrs. Heinz Honor Visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Heinz were hosts at a buffet supper last evening at their home in Druid Hills in honor of a group of Nashville visitors who are spending the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Heinz, including Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Tupper, Mrs. Bess Terry, Fay Murray and James Tupper.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wallace, of Nashville, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Beers, shared honors with these visitors at this interesting affair. Mr. and Mrs. Heinz were assisted in receiving their guests by their son and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Bryant King Vann, the guests numbering 35.

Miss Mary Ben Wright Weds George Erwin November 15

The wedding of Miss Mary Ben Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert White Wright, and George Erwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Erwin, of West Point, Ga., whose engagement was recently announced, will be solemnized at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, November 15, at the First Christian church. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. John Wood, of Winder, Ga., who officiated at the wedding of the bride-elect's parents 28 years ago. Mr. Wood will be assisted by Mr. Clarence Roy Stauffer, pastor of the First Christian church.

Miss Wright will be given in marriage by her uncle, Ben Thompson, of Madison, Ga., and she has chosen as her maid of honor and only attendant her cousin, Miss Elizabeth Thompson. Sam Dull will act as Mr. Erwin's best man and the ushers will be William L. Beyer, Jr., Marvin King, William P. Clarke and Newton Thompson. Mrs. Claude Eubank, cousin of the bride-elect, will render the organ program.

A number of parties are being planned honoring Miss Wright and Mr. Erwin. Saturday, November 8, Mrs. Robert McFarland, Jr., entertained Miss Wright at a luncheon, the guest list including six friends of the hostess and honoree.

Miss Sarah Duncan entertained 16 guests at tea Saturday afternoon at her home on Linwood avenue.

Friday, November 14, Mrs. Marvin King and Miss Mary Clark will give a luncheon at the Piedmont hotel. Friday evening, November 14, following the wedding rehearsal, Miss Florence Perkins and Miss Helen Barnett will entertain Miss Wright and Mr. Erwin and the members of the wedding party.

Mrs. Harris Entertains Robert E. Lee, U. D. C.

Mrs. E. G. Harris, of College Park, opened her home to Robert E. Lee chapter, U. D. C., and their friends last Tuesday from 3 to 5 o'clock for a chapter tea. Mrs. Harris was assisted in receiving guests by her charming daughter, Mrs. Suttles, and her sister, Mrs. Houston, Mrs. Earnest Huff, of Georgia Military Academy; Mrs. D. R. Nesbitt, Miss Mary Gray and Mrs. B. D. Gray. Three recent brides, of College Park, including Mesdames Bill Crawford, Billy Mizell, and Hendree Tillman presided at the tea table in the dining room, and made talks to the membership during the program hour.

The following guests were presented during the program: Mesdames W. S. Coleman, John Perdue, Warren D. White, L. D. T. Quinby, Howard McCutcheon, William J. Poole. Little Evelyn Brannen read Miss Moina Michael's poem in answer to Colonel McCrea's "In Flanders' Field," and Master John Webb Oliver sang "Dixie."

Miss Mable Henry Is Honor Guest.

Miss Mable Henry, bride-elect of November, was honored at a miscellaneous shower last Friday evening, given by Mrs. T. C. Stovall and Mrs. F. T. McInnes at the home of Mrs. Stovall on Langhorn street. The program consisted of contests and tap dancing by Miss Doris Perryman. The guests included Mrs. T. J. Daniell, Mrs. O. T. Sewell, Mrs. Deane Martin, Miss Letty Morris, Mrs. M. M. Bullard, Mrs. W. J. Henry, Mrs. A. C. McCreary, Mrs. R. N. Landers, Mrs. J. H. Garvin, Miss Elizabeth Garvin, Roy Bullard, Miss Mable Henry, Mrs. Sayar Sewell, Mrs. L. Shirley, Miss Mary Myers, Mrs. R. A. Walker, Mrs. T. C. Stovall, Miss Doris Perryman, Miss Doris Henry and Mrs. F. T. McInnes.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen Are Hosts at Tea.

Among the interesting parties assembling groups of friends following the football game yesterday afternoon was the tea at which Mr. and Mrs. Victor Allen, of Buford, were hosts at their apartment in the Biltmore hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have entertained at tea after the Tech-Vanderbilt game for many years, the event becoming somewhat an institution with these popular hosts. The honor guests for yesterday's affair included Mr. and Mrs. Vernor Tupper and their son, Vernon Tupper, Jr., of Nashville, Tenn.

The guests included 150 members of Atlanta society and a number of Tennessee friends who were in the city for the game.

The apartments were lavishly decorated for the occasion with quantities of huge golden-shaded chrysanthemums arranged in black vases and bowls, carrying out the Vanderbilt colors of gold and black, with yellow and white chrysanthemums, signifying the Tech colors of gold and white.

Atlanta O. E. S. Sponsors Concert.

Atlanta chapter No. 57, O. E. S., will have the annual benefit concert Thursday evening, November 13, at 8:15 o'clock in the auditorium of the Woman's Club on Peachtree. Mrs. Mary Griffith Dobbs is in charge of the program. There will be a number of large group numbers, including the Washington Seminary Glee Club, the Fulton County Mandolin and Guitar Orchestra, the "A" Club, of Washington Seminary. Mrs. Fred White will read and Vaughan Ozmer will be the soloist. Misses Tootsie Dunbar, Marion Smith and Louisa Robert, Hazel Roy Butler will be the dancers and the harpists are Misses Elinor Wilkinson, Sarah Allen and Gail Cain. All those holding tickets are urged to attend.

The Spirit of American Industry

From a Painting by Stockton Mulford

Prosperity—When and How

The Present Depression Will Be Followed by Record-Breaking Prosperity, Says This Famous Industrial Leader

By Harvey S. Firestone

I DO not know on what date national prosperity will return. I cannot even name the month in which there will be such a substantial upturn in busines throughout the country that there will be national recognition of the return of "good times."

But this I do know: That we shall have in America, and beginning reasonably soon, an era of prosperity for the masses of our people eclipsing anything of the kind we have had before.

I am not saying this with any purpose to "boom business." I know that business cannot be artificially "boomed" for very long or very widely. When business recovery comes, it will come not because of any widely advertised "Buy-More-for-Prosperity" campaigns, but because those who advertise have more to offer.

In short, business recovery will result from the natural workings of economic laws—just as a broken leg knits, heals and mends from within, and not because of any ointment or "remedy" applied by a physician. There are certain things that can and should be done to aid the process of recovery, and to insure a perfect, all-around healing. But, essentially, the recovery must be made by dint of the working of natural forces.

The fact is that when we thought ourselves most prosperous we were least secure. And the fact is also that when we are least happy in a business and economic way—as at present—we are making the most progress toward our goal. Last winter, after a heavy snowfall in Akron, I saw 20 or 30 boys having a perfectly glorious time coasting on their sleds down a long hill in an outlying section. Enjoyment was written on every face as the boys sped downhill. But it was quite obvious that there was not nearly so much joy in toiling up the hill, after the descent; and I have no doubt that to most of the boys the hill seemed at least ten times as long on the up journey as on the trip down. I noticed several of the boys attempt to ride up the hill on the sleds which their companions were pulling. They were promptly put off and rolled in the snowdrifts along the road. Probably this took quite a bit of the joy of the downhill coasting out of their minds. Some of them decided not to continue going up hill, quit and went home.

During a considerable part of the period which preceded the stock market crash of October, 1929, business was coasting downhill, without those in charge being aware of the fact. Business had pushed its way laboriously uphill after the widespread depression of the years 1920 and 1921, and there was an irresistible tendency to "take it easy" and coast along after the hard work of the ascent.

Nearly every big business organization—and, on a proportionate scale, smaller ones, too—added vice-presidents and assistant superintendents and other assistants all along the line, to make things easier for the men who had pulled upgrade and who now wanted to "coast." The effort throughout business was to increase sales, without, however, increasing the incentive to buy. New factories were planned and built, production facilities increased in every way, without much thought of changes that were inevitable in demand, sources of supply, in markets, in methods of manufacture and distribution.

Let me give another analogy that illustrates what happened to our prosperity. I remember as a boy co-operating with several other boys in creating what we conceived would be the biggest snowball ever made. When he first talked over the project one or two of us had in mind a snowball that would tower above the tall picket fence. Another of the boys wanted to roll one that would be as high as the woodshed; and I suppose some of the boys had visions of a snowball as high as the house.

We all went to work with a will, rolling small snowballs and consolidating them until we had one that was so large and heavy that we all had to join in pushing it along, to gather up a broad expanse of the snow on the ground that was getting scarcer and scarcer as we proceeded. We were all so busy pushing and shoving without any definite objective or charted course that we failed to note a slight declivity until our giant snowball had rolled down it and disintegrated in a thousand fragments when it crashed against a tree.

And that's what happened to the prosperity that was created in the years, roughly, from 1921 to 1928. The same thing has happened before. Probably it will happen again.

But mark this: In each cycle we create a bigger snowball, and by that I mean a greater measure of prosperity for the people as a whole. And in the course of the next ten years we shall create a greater prosperity than we have known before, for a greater number of people. We shall permanently lift the American standard of living to higher levels than have existed before during the century and a half of our national life.

Is this mere hope, or conjecture, or baseless optimism?

Not at all!

It is simply sound reasoning based on experience; on knowledge of what has gone before during all the decades since our government came into being.

I cannot predict when "Steel common" will again sell at 200 or better. I do not know, and I do not care, when Wall Street will again have a succession of five or six million-share days on a rising bull market.

I do not know when there will be a shortage instead of a surplus of labor—though I fervently hope that that will be soon.

But I do know, with a positive conviction based on the indisputable facts of the past, that the present business depression will be comparatively short-lived in contrast with the period of national prosperity to follow. It has always been so in America. It will continue to be so as long as we have what are commonly designated as "fundamentally sound conditions.

I know that phrase has been ridden to death; that about the time some leader calls attention to "the fundamentally sound condition of America" the stock market executes another nose dive and derisive comments are freely flung by newspaper paragraphers at those who have expressed optimism about the basic business condition of the country.

Nevertheless, the fact is that the people of America could not possibly avoid prosperity very long, even if they made no attempt to capture it. The country possesses all the natural elements that actually insure prosperity. We have ample supplies of coal, of oil, of steel, of other useful minerals; of tillable, fertile soil sufficient to feed a much greater population. We have a climate which favors those who want to work; and we have a racial heritage rich in energy, mitiative, enterprise, invention and determination to succeed.

Look back to get what might be called a "bird's-eye view" of what these things have meant in the development of America—and instantly it becomes clear why I have no hesitancy whatever in predicting a greater era of prosperity for our people during the next ten years than we have ever had before.

In the backward view we glimpse America at the beginning hewing homes out of the wilderness, with savages to combat, and pestilence drought, and initial poverty in money, of capital, to overcome. The young republic had to operate on borrowed capital; had wars to fight against powerful enemies; had inflated currency panics; had a conflict within that arrayed one section of the country against another in long, bloody and costly warfare; had desperate struggles to maintain its truly infant industries against the long established manufacturing plants of the Old World.

These obstacles our people overcame, by the sweat of their brow, by brain and by brawn, by the aid of the tremendous natural resources of the country, and by the determination and courage of the people who lived within it.

There were cycles of prosperity and periods of depression all along the road from 1776 to 1929. The "down-and-out" periods came with almost monotonous regularity. Men of forty-five can recall the depressions or panics of 1893, 1900, 1907, 1914 and 1921. They were all comparatively short-lived. And after each there were years of better income and better living for the mass of our people. Each wave of prosperity, succeeding the trough of depression in the sea of business activity, carried us a little nearer what might be termed "the golden shore."

We look back over the period of national existence and see the farmers of another generation afflicted with droughts, grasshoppers and mortgages. Yet steadily they forged ahead. Log cabins or huts dug out of dirt were succeeded by well-built, attractive houses. The tallow candle and the oil lamp were displaced by electric lights. The plow pulled by a mule, or even by children, gave way to a tractor motivated multiple plow. Roads that were mere trails through a wilderness traversed by slow moving, jolt-producing horses and buggies, were succeeded by the country "boulevards" of today, over which the farmer and his family speed in a smoothly operating automobile. The farmer still has the vagaries of wind, weather, debt and insect pests to contend with, but he has vastly more in material comfort as the result of his labor. Slowly but surely the economic condition of those engaged in agriculture has improved. That improvement can be seen with the eyes; it is not a matter of statistics, at all.

So, too, has the condition of labor in the cities improved, steadily and surely through all the years, good and bad. There were bread and soup lines in our large cities scores of years ago. It is probable those lines are shorter, proportionately, now than then. They will be shorter lived, at any rate—and relief measures undertaken by government and private business agencies will make the distress less acute now than in times past. The national conscience in such matters has grown none the less than the national business structure.

I can well remember a time not so many years ago when the "ordinary workingman," as he was then generally designated, expected none of the real comforts or luxuries of life. He walked long distances to work, stayed at work ten, twelve or fourteen hours under backbreaking, hazardous conditions; walked back from work to a habitation that was poorly lighted by lamps, with rough floors uncarpeted, with a tin washtub and water drawn from a well as the only means to remove the grime of toil. His family, of course, lacked good clothing, the means of entertainment, education or culture. Children went early into the factories—and came out, often, with maimed limbs or damaged bodies.

Those conditions are now the exception instead of the rule. Hours of work have been reduced; working conditions have been made less burdensome; the workingman's home has hardwood floors, rugs, electric lights, a modern bathroom, a radio, an automobile for Sunday trips.

We take these things, this general advancement, as a matter of course. We forget how the transformation, the progress in our conditions of living, came about.

In most instances prosperity is due to the fact that people realize that they can make a living and that they can advance their position in the world only after they have thought out what there is a need for them to do and what is the best way to do it. Then they follow up their analysis—often a subconscious one—with constant and uninterrupted hard work. The result is that they reap the rewards of their struggles and sacrifices. They become prosperous in a large or moderate measure, depending, to some extent of course, on the inevitable element of chance.

When a nation becomes prosperous, however, its people tend to become self-satisfied and to lose sight of the fundamentals on which their prosperity is based. The new mode of living which this prosperity entails brings material comforts not before enjoyed. These comforts and conveniences incidental to prosperity change the mental attitude of the people from one of striving and accomplishing to one of how best to enjoy the luxury and wealth which they now possess. Instead of "hustling," staying with their work, and maintaining their effort, people (and I am speaking of those at the head as well as those at the foot of industry) become more and more intent upon week-end excursions to seashore and mountains. The new life affords more leisure and many people, heretofore hard workers, become inactive mentally as well as physically. A new state of mind settles on the people. They become satisfied with themselves and with their position. They begin to think that the prosperity which they enjoy will continue despite the absence of really hard work and sound thinking on their part. In this they are wrong, and, as in every case of following out a wrong premise, they must suffer the consequences.

In the case of the American people the consequences have been the business depression which began, noticably, late in 1929. Our people in general had assumed that good business and good times were here to stay and that it was not necessary to safeguard their present status by constant effort. The sound basis of our prosperity hence began almost imperceptibly to shift its ground, and as this shifting gradually became preceptible our confidence began to break down.

A feeling of doubt settled over the American people and this corresponded with the midst of our depression. An uneasiness had gained ground which had its reverberations in fewer sales and smaller profits. There was a hesitancy in the market and in trade, and this hesitancy had become contagious. The feeling of doubt was succeeded by one resembling nation-wide fear, and the latter marked the bottom of our period of depression.

I have in mind an acquaintance who is engaged in the wholesale hardware business in the Middle West. When the first "break came he wired more than 50 factories, cancelling all his unfilled orders, for everything ranging from bolts and nuts to carving knives and garden cultivators. He told me that he "just felt there was some change coming." Naturally, with thousands of the business men feeling and acting the same way, a change did come. Factories which received scores or hundreds of cancellations from their customers in turn canceled orders for cotton, for textiles, for steel shapes, for chemicals, for leather, for belting.

From this feeling of fear it has taken what seems a long time to recover. As a matter of fact, the period of recovery is bound to be short compared with the periods of prosperity fore and aft. That has always been the case in the past.

The depression necessitated an adjustment to a new order of things, and adjustments are hard to make. It is much easier for most people to do the same thing, in the same way, day after day, than it is for them to adjust themselves to a new and better way of doing things. Furthermore, the confidence of the people in business had been badly shaken by the stock market break, and this confidence had to be built up against because confidence of the people is the basis of any widespread business prosperity. During the heydey of our prosperity in 1929, a great portion of the public had taken to buying stocks, many of which later declined and wiped out the

Into the Sunset
From an Etching by Roland Clark

Through the Marshes—an Etching by Frank W. Benson

THERE is always something about the opening day of the duck season that makes a hunter's nerves tingle. It begins to creep on him—this trembling of muscle and spirit — about dusk the night before. Nine months of day dreams will end with the dawn. Months of business worries and hard work. And now comes stealing thru the shadows of the night the witching hours of a great joy. A joy that will banish care. A joy that will blot out the memory of the clatter of machines and the roar of a rgeat city. A joy that will bring into the tired heart the throb of new life. The only thing that can matter tomorrow morning is the wind. It's blowing softly from the southwest and I'm praying for a shift.

I recall the last day of the old season nine months ago—a day of high winds, spitting snow and streaming lines of ducks. Why can't we have a little decent duck weather in November? I never knew how many beautiful days of lazy sunshine could be packed into a winter until I became a duck hunter and began to pray for high winds and stormy weather. In the 50 days we are allowed to shoot, there are never more than six or seven perfect days for ducks. The wind from the right point, its velocity right, the temperature set with the sharp teeth of frost.

There are so many things that favor the duck and so few the hunter, it's a wonder we get them at all. Only a good shot can get them now. In the old days in Currituck Sound any boob who could lift a gun could kill our present bag limit of 25 birds. Now you can't let ducks swing in and out of your decoys. You must see them half a mile away and get them when they come in range, or you'll go home with no meat for your table.

We go to bed early. The call is for 5:30 rising—an hour before daylight. I am restless. There's something electric in the air that keeps me awake. I roll and toss and recall the great days of the past. I get up at 11 o'clock and look out over the moonlit, shimmering waters of the sound. The only echo of bird life is the squawk of a huge heron that wades along the shore. The ducks are always miles away in the lower stretches of water at the first of the season. They move up toward us as the winter deepens.

I tiptoe to my boy's room and hear his deep, regular breathing. He is a man now, but still too young to be restless. When he strikes the bed he lets go of everything. I keep day dreaming and living life over again—especially the red letter days of the world of sun and sea and wind and sky.

I go back to bed firmly resolved to sleep. I hear the clock down stairs strike 3 before I lose consciousness. And the next minute I hear Skete's footsteps as he climbs to wake me. I'm dead sleep and I resent his coming.

This 5:30 call is the zero hour for the soul of a restless hunter. It always finds him in a state of coma, having just begun to sleep. I turn over and pull the cover closer. I make up my mind to pattern my schedule after Mr. Reid's. He refuses to budge till 8 o'clock. Guides beg and plead in vain. He sleeps till 8, breakfasts at 8:30, and goes out leisurely at 9 o'clock. And that's good common sense.

Why can't my fool guide let me do that? Not Skeeter. He's an early bird. He swears that the first two hours of the day are worth the remaining six, and he would lose all interest in the game if he didn't leave the landing before sunrise. The law says we cannot leave before sunrise, but the game commission of Currituck allows us a seven-mile run to a stake before the sun clear the horizon because we live at the north end of the sound.

I defer to Skete because he loves his work. He earns his living as a guide, but the thing is a joy to his soul. He never grows tired, no matter how hard the day. He is a born hunter. And his spirit is contagious. I've already decided that I must get up before he reaches the head of the stairs. He raps sharply, and his voice has in it the ring of a trumpet call to action:

"Five-thirty, sir!"

"All right!" I respond in harmony with his tone. I caught it from him. It told me that within an hour ducks would be streaking gorgeously tinted skies. And we must be on our way.

I close my window, hop into a warm dressing room and slip into my hunting togs with suppressed excitement. The opening day is dawning. Thank heavens I can dress in comfort. In the old days before I built my own shooting lodge I had to sleep at farm houses on the water's edge. There were no hot water heating systems, and no fire were crackling in the stoves. We got out of warm feather beds and touched bare floors, so cold our feet almost stuck to the boards. I shiver now when I think of it and begin to whistle the joy that sings inside of me.

I hurry down stairs with rising spirits and study the barometer. It hasn't moved a point all night. And that means the lazy wind is still hanging to the southwest. I glance out of the window and see the stars shining. The wind will be lazy all day. The ruddies will have things their own way.

I make a savage resolution. "Doggone 'em, I'll get 'em, anyhow. They'd better not try any stunts with me today!"

In spite of my consciousness of taut muscle, keen eye and skill with a gun, I am painfully alive for a moment to the memory of my first day with the ruddies. I had never seen one of these swift little ducks on the eastern shore of Virginia, where I began shooting. Their habits and style of living were entirely new to me. The old Currituck guide simply said:

"Look out, now, they'll come on you like lightning"——

I smiled, settled low in the battery box and loaded my gun. A bunch of them cut across my decoys at a right angle. I gave them both barrels and never touched a feather. For two solid hours I banged away without bagging a single bird. I finally discovered that I was shooting behind them—far behind them. Accustomed to the deliberate beat of a black duck's wing, I was shooting about six feet behind them. The next bunch that crossed my decoys I led by six feet—and killed the last duck in line. I had aimed to get the foremost one. I began to lead some of the fastest fliers by ten feet, and they dropped at the crack of my gun. In half an hour I had got the limit of twenty-five birds.

But the disgrace of those first two hours of blank failure I have never quite forgotten. I caught the old guide laughing that day more than once. The little devils have never got my goat again as they did that day—though I've made some pretty bad records with them.

I've a hunch I can hit them today, and I'm not worrying much about the size of our bag if we can drop the battery at the right spot. It will all depend on that. If Skete drops it five hundred yards out of their lead they'll give us the laugh as they whiz by out of range. But I'm confident his duck sense will not fail him.

We eat a light breakfast of grapefruit, bacon and eggs and coffee and hurry down to the boat house. I hear the low, steady hum of the battery boat's engine as we walk along the wharf, and see the big skiff loaded with 300 wooden decoys swinging at the stern. Everything is in readiness, and we step on the bow, my boy and I, as the second guide shoves the boat's nose over the shoal and heads it for the open waters of the sound. The eastern horizon has just begun to glow with the dawn.

We clear the shoal water of our landing and reach the open in a few minutes, and Skete pulls the throttle of the Ford engine. I feel the boat leap forward.

The sun begins to paint the skies in gorgeous hues of scarlet, purple and gold. There are just enough clouds hanging over the horizon to make a glorious sunrise. It's yet too dark to see the shore line on the other side of the sound, and the reflection of color in the wide sweep of water gives the scene a touch of magic. The world suddenly becomes a thing of unearthly beauty. The water through which we are ploughing is now a lake of purple wine. Again the tint changes and we are cutting through a sea of liquid gold. And then the whole surface flames into scarlet.

A feeling of ecstasy fills the heart. In the soot and filth, grime and roar of the city I had forgotten that such beauty yet haunts our planet.

"Surely this is not the same world we left in New York but a few hours ago!"

I breathe it softly to the boy, and he answered in low tones:

"Glorious—isn't it?"

As the sun's rim cut the horizon I saw a long V-shaped flock of redheads stream across a scarlet background. Another followed quickly.

I beckoned Skete for a conference.

"You see that, don't you?"

He nodded.

"Redheads, aren't they?"

He nodded: "Sure."

"Why not put out all the decoys and try 'em?"

"No use," he protested. "They've just come in from the north this mornin'—ain't settled yet. Better stick to the ruddies today and watch the big birds"——

I nodded my agreement.

"Drop us right on the ruddies then"——

Skete only smiled. He wouldn't promise. I always know that he will do his level best to pick the right spot, and I never butt in when he is selecting his stand for the day. I used to make suggestions to guides, and that gave a lazy head man a perfect alibi. If the stand selected was no good, it was my fault, and his skill was still beyond question. Skete does his own thinking, and if he makes a mistake he never apologizes. He takes up his 300 decoys and moves to a better place.

We see seven or eight batteries ahead of us already on their chosen stands, putting out their decoys. We pass close by two of them near the middle of the sound. They are rushing the work of putting out the full set of 300 for big birds. For ruddies we use only about 50 decoys, scattered closely about the battery. The ruddy duck will not come in to 300 decoys, but he will to 50. In shooting big ducks, the larger the raft of decoys the better they draw. The ruddy is afraid of a large raft of birds. He will cut swiftly across them or pass to the right or left, 75 yards away, but he will not come in the 40 or 50 yards at which most ducks are killed if the full line of decoys is out. If you decide to shoot ruddies, you set your battery as low in the water as possible and stool out for them, forgetting all other ducks.

This is our program today.

Skete slows down the engine and takes his place beside the mast, scanning the waters with keen eyes. He has learned a lesson most guides in Currituck sound don't know—that an hour spent in carefully selecting a good stand after the birds have begun to move is never time lost. He is not hurrying to a spot decided on the day before, even though he has seen thousands of ducks using the spot. He watches the drift of the birds after the boats have raised them, and then decides on his position. I have often seen him place his decoys two hours later than the crowd and get the limit long before any other boat on the ground. Everything depends on dropping the battery at the right spot. And the right spot today may be all wrong for tomorrow. Everything depends on the direction and velocity of the wind and the drift of birds for the day.

We move lazily across the wide shoals that stretch out before Swan island into the middle of the sound.

"I see 'em!" Skete calls, eagerly pointing straight ahead.

I adjust my long range glasses and follow the direction of his arm. I see moving dark lines scarcely a foot above water. The lines waver and splash and disappear. The ruddies are flying but 300 or 400 yards and dropping again. They are using the other side of the shoals on the flats beside Monkey island channel—a location famed for great bags of ruddies on opening day.

There is not a battery, boat in our way. The other fellows, excited by the long lines of redheads, have taken their stands for them.

Skete opens the throttle and shoots our boat through a moving blanket of ruddies, heads into the wind and drops anchor. In 30 minutes he has swung the battery into the water, loaded it level with ballast, placed his 50 decoys and pushed alongside to pick me up and land me in the box.

A battery is a light sink box built of white cedar with a platform four by eight feet around it and hinged wings covered with cloth extending eight feet in the rear, four feet in front and three feet on each side. These wings rise and fall with the waves and prevent the water from breaking into the box in which the hunter sits. It is a delicately balanced contrivance, and the sportsman who always wears full hip boots, must step lively when he gets intot it. He must spring lightly from the skiff, land on the side of the narrow platform and step into the box immediately. If a man of my weight (210 pounds) should pause on the platform the box would be swamped by a rush of water over its side.

My right foot barely touches the platform and I spring in. My weight is directly in the center and not a drop of water has broken into the box. I sit down immediately on the seat jogged in the bottom and load my automatic. On the eastern shore of Virginia I shot a double-barreled gun. In Currituck I've learned that the only sensible gun a man can use is the five-shell automatic. The sportsman's etiquette that still prescribes an old-fashioned double-barreled gun for the waters of Currituck sound is ten years out of date. It is now merely a question of getting your bag limit. Whether you get 25 birds with two shells at a time or five, is merely a matter of taste. I prefer to get my limit quickly with the five-shell automatic rather than hammer away three hours longer with the old-fashioned gun. That a man can kill more birds with an automatic five-shooter goes without question. But if he obeys the law and takes but 25 ducks, he goes home from three to four hours earlier. I prefer the chase of eight hours from 5:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m., instead of the 11-hour pull from 5:30 to 4:30. When I get home at 1:30 I am never exhausted, but always fresh in body and spirit. For that reason I believe in the automatic gun.

Skeeter lifted his hand in warning as he shoved back to the battery boat.

"Knock 'em out, now"——

"No alibis today!" yelled the boy.

I waved a scornful reply:

"Get out of my way!"

In two minutes the empty battery boat shot across the shoals and I was alone, crouched below the water line. The water was getting rippled by the wind and the decoys bobbed up invitingly.

The boat had not gone 500 yards when I saw a little bunch of five ruddies headed straight at my head, coming directly in. In the back lighting of the sun their fat brown breasts looked like so many cannon balls. I had barely time to grip my gun and raise it when they flared wildly and directly over me. I picked a single on my left and quick as a flash had my gun on him and pulled the trigger. There was no report and the bird shook his little tail at me in scorn.

I softly swore. The safety bolt was still on my gun. They had come in so suddenly I hadn't shoved it clear. I fixed it and crouched again. Nothing angers a duck hunter more than to try to shoot a gun with the safety device locked. In the cramped quarters of a battery box it is always best to keep the safety bolt in place until ready to shoot, and the first thing to do when a bird is sighted is to release the trigger. But when taken by surprise by a quick incoming bird of the ruddy breed you realize instinctively from his speed of wing that you barely have time to lift the gun and fire and you forget to shove the bolt. And a "feathered bullet" laughs at you.

"All right, you little devils, come in like that again and I'll nip you!" I mutter as I grip my gun and scan the level waters in a steady sweep of eye from right to left and back again.

Again a bunch of five or six headed straight into me, flying low and moving at a speed of not less than a hundred miles an hour. My hand had scarcely gripped the stock when they were on me. I lifted my gun, they swerved to the left, I made a double with my first shell and knocked out the third bird with my second.

I stood up with a grin at the two ducks lying close together. With my first shot of the season I had knocked out two feathered bullets.

"Not bad," I muttered, just as a bunch of 15 or 20 swerved a hundred yards from the decoys and passed. I was standing up, boasting over my double, and lost one of the best shots of the day.

I dropped back into position, shoved two fresh shells into the magazine and waited for another big bunch to swing in on me. For ten minutes I didn't see the flash of a wing, then suddenly I heard the splash of a flock that pitched a hundred yards from the battery on my right. I slipped down on my back until my long body was folded like a jackknife. I knew that if they did not see my face they would swim into range.

I heard the leader softly call to the decoys as he headed in. I answered him carefully. The ruddy gives a low cluck, almost like the call of a hen to her chicks. Catching his accent at close range, any one accustomed to ducks can imitate him. I didn't dare to raise my head, but finally managed to get a glimpse out of the corner of one eye at the water on my right.

The leader had grown suspicious and stopped 60 yards away. I saw him give the signal of retreat to his flock as he paddled swiftly toward the open sound. There wasn't a second to lose. I sprang to my feet. And from the cramped position in which I had crouched it was no small operation. With the first movement of my body above the water line the whole bunch leaped into the air. I finally found my legs and snapped three shells into the swiftly disappearing line. But one bird fell, and he was only crippled. I shot two more shells before he flattened out on the water.

They began to come in singles now, right, left and center, and I made four clean hits without missing. While I was chuckling with undue pride a flock of 50 suddenly swung out of space and cut across my decoys at a rate of a hundred and twenty-five miles an hour. Before I could grip my gun and fire they were out of range. I had not been watching. The faithful duck hunter, shooting from a battery, must keep low and his eyes must sweep the horizon with a steady swing. Unless you can see a ruddy half a mile away there's little chance of a hit.

My eye suddenly caught the flash of dark wings far away on the left. A flock of 50 or 60 were heading straight across my decoys, coming at full speed, certainly not less than 125 miles. They were going to give me a shot. I had seen them in time. From my left I could shoot without rising. I slipped the safety bolt and made ready to give them five shells. I opened fire as they reached the lower edge of the decoys 40 yards away. Two dropped at my first shot. The flock swerved and doubled and I fired two shells as fast as I could pull the trigger. I got six with the two shells and caught another single that had straggled in after the flock had passed. I counted nine fat little rascals floating slowly away and waved to the battery boat to come in, pick up and put the boy in my place.

"Now watch me wipe your eye!" he waved as he leaped into the box.

"If you can," I called. "I've knocked down sixteen."

"Yeah, and I'll bet half of 'em are cripples," he sneered.

"Beat it if you can," I challenged.

He waved his long arm and dropped low in the box. I'd made a record opening round and didn't believe he could beat it.

But he did. I watched him drop every single that came in and make doubles and triples out of three or four flocks. At the end of an hour we started in to pick up and change.

Skete suddenly drove the tiller hard down and the boat swung gracefully away.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Don't you see that bunch of five redheads going straight into him?"

I looked and sure enough the big birds had set their wings in a curve and were settling straight down into the little ruddy outfit.

"Will they stool to 50 decoys?"

"Sometimes, the first of the season."

Skete had scarcely spoken when the first duck crumpled in the air, and then another, and another, and another and another.

"Great Scott!" I cried. "Five dead ducks in the air before the first one struck the water!"

"That's the way to do it," the guide grinned. "I've done it myself sometimes"—

"Well, I've dreamed it only," I confessed.

As the boy climbed out of the box he winked at me and wagged his head.

"I told you"——

"Yes," I admitted. "I taught you to shoot, doggone you, when you were so small the gun laid you flat. No wonder you can beat me now. My early education was neglected. I was a minister's son"——

We picked up 17 ruddies and five redheads. On the next round I got four and the boy five. It was 11 o'clock, time for lunch, and we had 47 ducks—within three of the limit of 25 each.

Skete made a suggestion.

"Let's stake up, run by Bennie Ansel's bush blind and get a couple of geese"——

"Geese—opening day?" I scoffed.

"Sure. He's got a blind 600 yards from Swan island where he can get the limit of geese any opening day."

I agreed, and we were soon eating our lunch, skimming over the big shoal toward Swan island and passing the time of day with the other batteries. I wondered if there were not something back of Skete's suggestion. For the first time in his life he had been willing to quit before we had the limit on a day when the birds were coming in just right.

There was something back of it—something that meant trouble. Bennie had already got his limit of 16 geese. He was shooting alone—another thing that roused my suspicions.

"Where's your guest, Bennie?" I inquired.

"Ain't got none yet," he answered dolefully. "The Swan Island Club has marked off six square miles of the sound and claims they own the ground under the water. They've warned me to keep off an' I reckon I'm goin' to be ruined ef they make good their claims. My folks is been a shootin' this blind for 50 years an' it's the only way I know how to make a livin'. I axed Skeeter to bring you by here today ter see ef I can't get ye to hep us out in the fight"——

He looked at me appealingly and I extended my hand.

"You bet your life I'll help you."

We shot three geese and completed our bag. But as we swept homeward I thought it over and realized that I had let myself into a nasty fight. The Swan Island Club is an exclusive organization of multi-millionaires. They will stop at nothing to win their point. Well, it couldn't be helped. Bennie is my neighbor. He's a fine, clean, hard-working native of the state in which I was born. He has a wife and children and I'll stand by him, of course.

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

A Greasy Mechanic for a Husband Went Against the Grain of Cora's "Superior" Being, So She Left Him and Her Babies for Another Man—a Man Who Taught Her What It Meant to Be Regarded in the Light of Inferiority.

CORA had prepared the announcement carefully, but now that the time had come she found she could not make it. She could think only of Gordon's constancy, his kindness, his patience, his perfect faith. They had had ten years of aching weariness together, ten long years of burdens and dinginess and poverty, and they had besides white faced, spiritless children. Now the children were in bed, and Gordon, free for the first time that day since seven o'clock in the morning, was looking sleepily through a newspaper. Soon, Cora knew, he would drag himself upstairs. The announcement would have to wait. She simply could not tell him tonight that she was going to leave him.

How could she say it to a man who loved her so deeply? How could she explain to him that his failure to accomplish anything was as unbearable to a wife as a failure to try? If he hadn't tried, she might be able to believe that there was still power in him, but when he had tried beyond his strength, she was forced to admit his weakness.

Worst of all, she felt that the mistake was primarily her own. She had known when she married Gordon that he was her intellectual inferior. She had a college education and he had stopped with high school. True, circumstances had made college an impossibility for him. He had a widowed, invalid mother to support. He had taken up his burden at 12 and never laid it down until his mother died when he was 24. He had married Cora a year later. Poor man, she thought; he had had a pitifully brief vacation.

She had fallen in love with his strength and his honesty and clean blonde freshness and with his deep blue eyes, so very, very blue for one so fair; and she had fallen in love, too—yes, she would admit it—with his humility.

He always had looked so clean, so scrubbed and fresh and wholesome. How long it had been since he had looked anything but faded and tired.

Almost timorously she looked in the mirror which made the ugly sideboard uglier. No, she had not faded; her spirit and body were as brave and fresh as they ever were. She had kept her mind young with books and lectures, with symphony concerts, even occasionally with a visit to the theater. Hours daily of giving piano lessons to the stupid brats of stupid immigrants had made her intellectual pleasures a possibility, but now she could have finer pleasures with some one who understood them. The pleasures would be finer because they would be shared. She was weary of returning from a symphony concert to find Gordon heavily asleep or patiently walking the floor with an ailing baby.

Yes, she decided, their life was summed up in the house. It had been built by Gordon's great-grandfather, and the great-grandfather had been somebody. The grandfather had been less, the father still less, and Gordon—well, Gordon had permitted the house to rot into its present dirty ugliness.

Cora hated the house and hated her life in it. Housekeeping was drudgery to her, and though Gordon always shared the burden, it remained a burden. He did the washing Sunday morning but the ironing was hers to do on Monday; he scrubbed the floors when they were scrubbed and helped when he could with the dishes, but they were often unwashed or she washed and dried them alone. Most of all, she hated the piano lessons. Her children kept her at home when Gordon was at work and so she could seek only pupils who would come to her. She was fortunate in the size of her class and some of the pupils were really gifted, but even the most gifted usually came to the lesson with dirty hands, and most of them sickened her with the same sour body odor that so offended her in her own children.

Her two boys and baby girl were her greatest disappointment. She never hesitated to admit that she wasn't cut out to be a mother or that the children loved Gordon far more than they did her, but he loved them devotedly and, try as she would, she could not love them. They were such colorless babies, all blonde like Gordon, all palely lifeless, the kind of children who seem always to have nose colds and no handkerchiefs. If she could see only their eyes, she sometimes thought, she could care more for them, because their eyes were wide and more deeply blue even than Gordon's, and their blueness sparkled when he came home. She would leave the children with him, and with a pang of shame she admitted she would leave them with relief. They weren't children she was proud of.

She looked into the sideboard mirror and smiled dreamily. Her dark hair was soft as a cloud of smoke around her forehead, her brown eyes were brilliant. She sometimes thought her beauty and the children were Gordon's only happiness.

She had never quite understood what Gordon's work was. He did something wtih electricity in a huge factory across the tracks in the west of the city. All she knew of the work was that it offered a poor wage for a man with a family and that it kept the man smelly and black with grease. Once Gordon had spoken hopefully of a business of his own, but the hope had faded into a memory—if that; he never mentioned it any more.

She had been discontented usually, irritable sometimes, but until three months before she had never even thought of the possibility of escape.

"I'm glad you came, Mrs. Coburn," she said quietly. "I don't want the children to forget you."

Eric Coburn had frightened her at first. His fame awed her and his assurance disturbed her. A mutual acquaintance introduced them when they happened to be in a small book shop at the same time. She knew who Coburn was and had read in the Journal that he was in Providence gathering material for a life of Roger Williams. Biography was a new experience to him, he explained to Cora when she spoke admiringly of one of his novels, but he hoped to accomplish two tasks with one effort. In gathering material for the biography he would learn enough to write an historical novel about the Rhode Isand Quakers.

He talked charmingly for fifteen minutes and left her thrilled and excited. She met him a second time by accident and he invited her to tea. From the first he confessed himself captured by her dark beauty. He was a widower, he said, and lonely, and he made the simple statement into an appeal. Small, dark, and nervous, he hardly looked the forty years he admitted.

His first proposal that she divorce Gordon and marry him shocked Cora into an immediate and instinctive refusal, but Eric was not a man to be dismissed with a single rejection. For six weeks Gordon's loyalty held her, but it could not hold her forever. Eric had too much to offer; his fame, the friendship of people more famous, freedom from drugery and ugly poverty, travel—and, most of all, his sensitive, flaming mind. Everything she wanted he had to give, especially himself. She did not capitulate until she was sure she loved him, until the man thrilled her more than his promises did; then she could resist no longer.

She finally told Gordon on a Sunday morning. Breakfast was over, the children were in the yard, and she and Gordon were reading the paper.

"Gordon," she began uneasily, "I have something to tell you."

"Yes," he said, laying down the sporting sheet. "What is it, Cora?"

"I don't know how to tell you, Gordon. You—you've been so good to me and—and tried so hard. I feel cruel. It—"

And then he helped her. It was like him to help her even when she was putting a knife into his heart.

"You want to tell me about Eric Coburn, don't you?" he asked gently, but his face was pale and his eyes dull with fear.

"Yes. Yes— How did you know, Gordon?"

"Lots of people have told me about how much you've been seeing him and you didn't say anything. Are you—in love with him, Cora?"

Her head sank. She could not meet his gaze.

"Yes," she whispered. "He wants to marry me."

Gordon sat very still and said nothing.

"I shan't stand in your way," he said after a long pause. "I don't blame you, dear. You've had a hard life with me."

"O, don't be so kind!" she cried, looking at him, her eyes full of tears. "It makes it so hard."

"It is hard for both of us, but being mean won't make it easier." He hesitated and looked out of the window. "The children, Cora?"

"I couldn't take them from you. They've never loved me. You know that. I won't ask for them."

"That's all I wanted to know." Again there was silence. "I—I hope you aren't going to get a divorce here," he murmured at last.

"O no!" Then rapidly, almost hysterically, she explained. She would go to Reno. Eric would bear the expense. She had made it very clear to him that she would not humiliate Gordon by asking for a divorce in Rhode Island, and she had told him, too, that she could not ask Gordon for money, not a penny. She told the plans in detail. White and quiet, Gordon listened. When she was done he asked:

"You're leaving today?" For the first time in ten years she felt that a question from Gordon was a command. She hadn't planned to leave that day, hadn't thought of it, but she replied:

"Yes. I'll go to Boston—to Aunt Minnie—this afternoon."

"You'd better begin packing then. I'll do the dishes."

Taken completely aback, she stared at him. For a moment she thought he was indifferent; then she saw that he was terribly moved and that his calmness was masking emotions so powerful that they shook his body and blanched his face.

"Yes—yes," she stuttered. "I'll pack," and she fled from the room. Alone she wept. She had hurt him more even than she had thought she would.

By the time her packing was done he had apparent control of himself. He went to a corner drug store and telephoned for a cab, gave her what money he had and insisted that she take it, carried her suitcase downstairs, and explained that he would express the trunk to Aunt Minnie's the next day. His face was ghastly in its whiteness.

When the taxi arrived, he did not call the children and she dared not ask for them. He carried the suitcases to the cab and returned to her in the hall.

"Goodbye- Cora," he said gravely. "I—I hope you're very happy."

She struggled with her tears. "O, Gordon!" she cried softly.

She telephoned to Eric from the station, and the topsy turvy world almost righted itself when she saw him hurrying across the waiting room toward her. He understood her unhappiness, spoke admiringly of Gordon, and regretted that he had not been able to help her through the ordeal. He went with her to Boston, stayed there until she left for Reno, and cheered her with plans and love until the memory of Gordon's haunted eyes almost faded from her mind.

To her surprise her stay in Reno proved delightful. She rested, relaxed. It was pleasant to live in a hotel with no cares, no worries, no work. The divorce was acquired so easily, so quietly that she was neither so ashamed nor so humiliated as she had expected to be, and when Eric met her in San Francisco and married her, she felt that her life had at last been fulfilled.

For a time she heard from a few friends in Providence, but one by one they ceased to write. She knew that their silence was cold criticism, and in a way she was glad. It was only right that Gordon should have the sympathy of the people among whom he lived.

She and Eric went to Hollywood. He had received an unexpected offer from the movies, and for a year he was far more affluent than he had even been before. They had a suite in a hotel, Cora was permitted to buy beautiful clothes, and they met many of the people she had yearned to meet.

Little things occasionally disturbed her, but she passed them off as little. Gordon had seen nothing which was irritating; Eric saw everything, which was sometimes humiliating. He was very particular about her clothes, very definite in her preferences, and actually unhappy if she wore a dress soiled with a single spot.

At first she thought he was hypercritical, but she soon realized that his severe standards were set for him, partly because he was an artist and partly because he loved her. He wanted her to be perfect as he wanted his books to be perfect, and anything less in her was agony to him. His belief in the possibility of her attaining perfection was, of course, flattering, but his ambition for her wasn't comfortable.

He made her feel very ignorant, not because he paraded his knowledge but simply because he had it. She wasn't used to feeling humble. She had thought herself well read, but in comparison with Eric she knew nothing—and, worse, she knew that he knew she knew nothing. To Gordon her comments on music had been final; to Eric she soon dared not ever to make them. He played the piano as she could never hope to play it, and before long she ceased entirely to play.

"Please don't wear that dress," he would say. "It has spots on the blouse." Or, "Cora, please don't throw the newspaper on the floor."

She wasn't a very apt pupil; she was afraid, and she wasn't always as successful in hiding her irritation as he was. Once she flared at him: 'You hold me to an impossible standard!"

He looked gravely at her and replied: "I hold you to no standard at all. It's just that I have a dream."

She could make no reply to that; she could never make a reply; she could only feel ashamed and ungrateful.

So she felt in blue moments, but mostly she knew that she was a lucky woman and thanked God for her luck. When they went to Europe for a year on the proceeds of his labor in Hollywood, she felt thrice blest. Dreams which had seemed impossible were becoming realities. She learned a great deal in that year, but somehow she did not enjoy the learning as much as she had expected to. Eric took her ignorance of art for granted after their first visit to the Louvre, and she wasn't used to being considered ignorant.

She visited cathedrals with him, galleries, and museums in every city in Europe, and by the time they sailed from Naples she could understand the significance of the art he admired. She never ceased to resent his instruction, however, and was glad when Vesuvius was left behind and she had nine days of peace and relaxation ahead of her.

She knew that Eric was pleased with her progress, that he was proud of her aptitude, but she resented the implication that progress was necessary and that the aptitude had to be discovered. She resented, too, the fact that the pictures they bought had always been Eric's choice.

They found an eight room house in Westchester county, furnished it, and at last settled down to a routine of living.

"Our roving and our riches are over for a while, I'm afraid," Eric said. "We'll have to live within my income now." The book on Roger Williams was selling well but the novel was still to be written and Eric's assured income was not large. It permitted a pleasant home charmingly furnished, adequate entertaining and entertainment, and a cook, but so far as the cook was concerned, her duties existed only in the dining room and kitchen. The care of the house was Cora's.

Eric was apologetic. "I'm sorry, dear," he said, "but I simply cannot afford a second maid."

Cora laughed. "After what I've done, the work here will be nothing," she said lightly. "Don't worry, Eric! I shan't break under the strain."

Yet she came close to breaking. Eric worked at home and it was disturbing to feel him always present.

She found housekeeping according to Eric's standards so burdensome that relaxation was impossible. Little enough was demanded of her, but details constantly escaped her eye and attention. She meant to keep her clothes in the closets or drawers where they belonged, but Eric found them on chairs, on the floor, or in the bathroom. He had his own bath and she wondered why he was so distressed if he saw a ring in her tub; but he was distressed and he never failed to see the ring. He saw everything.

"I'm afraid I wasn't cut out for a housekeeper," she confessed at last. "I honestly do try, Eric, but I can't reach your standard. I think you must be the only really neat man in the world."

"Women like to think all men untidy," he replied quite calmly, "but they really haven't much with which to justify their attitude of superiority. There are only two places cleaner than most men's offices; one is an army barracks and the other is a ship—and men control and clean both."

"They aren't neat in their homes, though," she retorted, frankly unpleasant.

"Because they have a right to expect their wives to be," and the patience in his voice was a greater criticism than his words.

She thought she tried and knew she failed. She was as uneasy in her house as she was in society. When they had company or went to a friend's house, Eric watched her unceasingly. He never apologized for her, never shamed her with a word or gesture of criticism, but she knew that he was on the qui vive to save her if she slipped in taste or tact. Twice he covered up slight errors so subtly that no one but she knew they had been made, but she hated him both for saving her and for seeing the need to. If he had mentioned the mistakes later, she could never have forgiven him, but he never alluded to them by so much as the vaguest hint. He recognized her sensitiveness, treasured it, guarded it for her, and she knew she ought to be grateful, but she could feel only resentment—and it grew until any reason for gratitude was entirely forgotten.

One afternoon she returned home from a visit to New York. They had been in the house for more than a year and she thought their routine thoroughly established; yet she knew the instant she opened the door that something unexpected had happened.

Wondering, she went upstairs to her own room. She stopped in the door, stared angrily an instant, and then went very white. Eric was bending over a chair, a dust cloth in his hand.

"What are you doing?" she asked coldly.

"Cleaning house."

"Was it necessary to do that?" she asked, making little effort to hide her rage.

"It was and has been for a week." Eric stood upright, looked straight into her shamed eyes, and said his say. "I'm accustomed to living in a clean house and I'm going to live in one if I have to do the cleaning myself. I'm not hypercritical, as you think, and I'm not exceptional, either, except in one way. I'll do the work myself if necessary, and most men won't, but most of them want exactly what I want. You apparently have never had a proper standard of neatness and cleanliness. I've tried to give you one. Either you can't or won't accept it. I'm not going to try any more. If the work isn't done, I'll do it; that's all."

Her whole body seemed to shrivel. She turned, fled downstairs, and fell sobbing on the davenport. If she could only have answered, offered some justification her humiliation would have been less, but there was no answer; Eric, always, was right. She knew what he thought and knew how true his thinking was. Never naturally neat, she had grown slovenly in her ten years with Gordon, and now the effort to correct her slovenliness was too much for her. She even liked disorder; she admitted it; she found it natural and pleasant. What a terrible change this second marriage had proved to be! It offered her everything but peace. Gordon had scrubbed the kitchen regularly and she had been pleased; now Eric dusted a chair and she felt pilloried. The situations were fundamentally alike, but how different the men were!

Eric never dusted another chair because there was no reason; he never found her clothes anywhere but where they belonged; the flowers were cared for, the tubs scrubbed, the soap dishes washed. Cora was the perfect housewife and she hated her perfection as she hated the strain with which she attained it.

And as she worked she thought of Gordon. It was well over three years since she had already polished, she remembered while she polished a mahogany table which she had already polised, she remembered his easygoing acceptance of everything she said or did. What she said or did had been right because she had said it or done it, and what she left undone he ignored or took care of himself—uncritical, uncomplaining, only adoring and proud. To have some one proud of her again, to have some one look up to her, admit her superiority, to have some one feel that her taste was impeccable, her ideas unanswerable, to be loved for what she was, to be accepted as a beautiful creation and not to be recreated; in short, to be the wife of Gordon Jamieson that was all she asked.

Gradually, unknowingly, she transformed her desire for Gordon into his need for her. She grew honestly ashamed of her abandonment of him and her children; she felt selfish, heartless and cold. It would be hard to go back to him, not because he would make it hard—O, Gordon would only make it beautiful, but the people they knew; how they would laugh and sneer! Well, let them laugh if they must, and sneer, too; she must do what her conscience demanded.

She told Eric she would like to go to Boston to visit her aunt. "I want to see the children, too," she explained. "I'll stop off in Providence on my way back—if you don't mind."

"Of course not," he agreed quickly. "You must want terribly to see them, and I'm sure Jamieson will be willing. I'm glad you thought of going Cora. You need a change. You've been looking very tired lately."

She stayed resolutely with Aunt Minnie for more than a week; then on a Sunday morning she took a train to Providence. Never had she dressed with such care. The suit she wore was more than a year old, but it had been made in Paris and looked it. The style was still good. She wore her silver fox fur that Eric had bought for her in the Hollywood days, and the diamond bar pin that had been his wedding present.

She almost passed the house before she recognized it. Gone were the bushes and seedling trees, gone the matted weeds and sagging blinds. Instead the elms stood alone in a smooth green lawn, lacy in their new spring foliage. The house was gleaming white, the blinds a gay green, and the windows shone. Daffodils waved their yellow chalices in neat plots, and a few tulips were open.

Startled and confused, she stared at the transformed house for minutes before the explanation occurred to her. At last she understood. "He's had to sell the house," she thought, pityingly. She hesitated, then decided to ask the new owners if they knew where he could be found.

She lifted the gleaming brass knocker, let it fall, and waited. The door opened, and, taken completely by surprise, she exclaimed in blank astonishment, "Gordon!"

It was Gordon, but Gordon changed; Gordon young again. He had been thirty-five when she left him and looked ten years older; now he was nearly thirty-nine and looked less than thirty. And he was clean, beautifully, immaculately clean. His flannel trousers were creamy white and perfectly pressed, his shirt was as white as a good laundry could make it, and his powder blue sweater jacket was innocent of a spot. His eyes had never seemed bluer, his skin fresher; he was slender and healthy and strong; he was Gordon as she had first known him.

"Why, Cora!" he said, in his turn surprised and startled.

"I was—I'm on my way to New York—from Boston, you know," she explained haltingly, "and I stopped. I thought—I wanted to see the children. I know I ought to have written, but—"

Her face was flushed with confusion and he hastened to put her at ease. "O, that's all right," he interrupted generously. "Of course, you can see them. They're at Sunday school now but they'll soon be home. Please come in."

Her embarrassment seemed to give him complete confidence. He opened the door wider and she saw into the hall. A gate-legged table held a blue bowl of jonquils; over it was a framed sampler. He stepped back to let her pass into the living room.

Hooked rugs were beneath her feet and a miracle before her eyes. Everything was impossible, the sunshine reflected in the mahogany furniture, the chintz covered easy chair, and the utter, sweet smelling cleanliness of everything. She recognized most of the furniture. It had been in the house when she came to it; the great-grandfather had bought nearly every table and chair, and now, mended and polished, they proved his taste. She could see into the dining room. The ugly old set was gone. In its place stood a table and buffet which she knew Eric would have admired. The oil lamps were gone, too; electricity had at last taken their place. Strangely enough, a grand piano seemed the last miracle of all. In comparison with the transformed house and the rejuvenated Gordon, it was as nothing.

She struggled for poise and found a little.

"You know I'm astonished, Gordon," she said. "The change is wonderful. The house is beautiful and you look like a boy."

Gordon smiled.

"I've often wanted you to see the house," he said. "I'm proud of it now."

"You have a right to be." She was saying the right thing; she knew she was, and yet—and yet—Gordon didn't react to what she said as he should. She forgot the house and looked at him. He had no nerves, like Eric; he was calm and gentle and strong—yes, and handsome, as handsome as he had ever been.

"Will you tell me," she asked, almost humble, "how you did it?"

"Of course." He paused as if ordering his thoughts, and then explained. He was comfortable in the big chintz covered chair, at home in it, but Cora didn't feel at home on the davenport. "I was pretty badly upset the day you went away," he began. "At first I just couldn't think, but I had to get lunch for the children, and doing things helped, you know. Then I realized that there was no one to take care of them the next day. I didn't know what to do. I thought and thought; then I remembered Carl Schultz. He worked down at the plant and I remembered he'd told me his mother was looking for work. I hunted her up. Se looked clean and motherly and she was used to children. She's been here ever since. She's out in the kitchen now.

"That was all right, but I didn't see how I was going to pay for everything. There'd been barely enough with what I'd earned, and now I had Mrs. Schultz' wages to figure on. Well, I was sort of dazed for a week or two and then I woke up. I had to. I had to do something and do it right away. You remember I'd always wanted to go in business for myself. Well, I did. I mortgaged the house for capital and managed to get a radio agency. I hit it just right. Everybody'd gone crazy over radio just then and everybody had money. Before I even opened the shop I canvassed the plant, and you know about a thousand people work there. I had a lot of orders before I started."

He paused and smiled happily. "Things certainly broke right for me. I didn't have to use half the mortgage money because money began to come in so soon, and I'd paid off the mortgage in less than a year. Business just boomed and it's been good ever since, but you can bet I gave the best service in Providence—and that helped. I knew radio couldn't keep up—I mean the way it was going—and so I put in electrical appliances and fixtures, and now I've even got stoves. I had Carl Schultz working for me from the first, and now I've got three men and a girl." Again he paused; then added slowly, "You sort of kicked me into success, Cora."

The last statement was innocently made and sounded innocent, but to Cora it was a whip of scorpions. It was exact y as if he had said, "I couldn't succeed until I had got rid of you."

Confused, baffled, even in a way disappointed, she managed to speak naturally and to congratulate him. "You must have done wonderfully and I'm very glad. You worked so hard for such a long time. And you've done marvels, just marvels, with the house. It's lovely—perfect."

"Oh, the house!" he exclaimed. "Don't give me credit for that. That's Estelle's work."

"Estelle?" A cold fear touched her, a dreadful premonition.

"Yes—sure, Estelle. You look so surprised, Cora. Didn't you know I'd got married again?"

She shook her head in confused denial as her world turned upside down and scattered her lovely dreams like shriveled petals at her feet. "No," she murmured; "no, I hadn't heard."

"Why, I've been married a year and a half now. It's Estelle Kingsley."

Estelle Kingsley! Astonishment, like a sharp blade, pierced Cora's confusion only to leave her more confused. Estelle Kingsley. How well she knew who she was; every one in Providence knew who Estelle Kingsley was. She had gone to Bryn Mawr and then to Munich for two years to study with a famous musician. She returned to Providence, announced calmly that she could never be a really great pianist, and settled down to give lessons with a success equaled only by her serene acceptance of her fate. She held a position, socially and musically, which Cora once had envied. How could she have ever chosen Gordon?

"How did you ever meet her?" she asked, humiliation destroying her tact.

If Gordon caught the derogatory implication in her question he gave no sign. "I've known her always," he explained quietly. "We went to the same school." Once more he smiled. "Estelle says she made up her mind in grammar school to marry me, but that you fooled her while she was in Europe. She says I didn't have a chance as soon as she knew I was—a bachelor again. I thought I did most of it but she says I just said, 'I do,' when she told me to."

The grand piano was explained; everything was explained—except a change which remained inexplicable. Nervously she left the davenport, went to the piano, and leafed the music. All of it was far beyond her. Some of it was beyond even Eric.

"Does Estelle play this sort of thing to you?" she asked, striving instinctively for her old supremacy. The question was not kind; she did not mean it should be. It was a weapon to ward off the last blow, and it was a thrust of revenge for the pain she was enduring.

Gordon's serenity was unshakable. Again that happy smile lighted his eyes. "Yes—and I like it. I even like Brahms. Sometimes I almost think I like Stravinsky." The smile faded and with it his friendliness. "Cora," he asked, his voice level and significant, "why didn't you ever take me with you to symphony?"

"Why," she retorted, "it never entered my head it would mean anything to you."

"I love it."

It was as if he had said, "You took my inferiority for granted and carefully kept me inferior. I was just food to your ego. I was a failure because it was necessary to you that I should be one. You robbed me of pleasure and success so that you could fatten on my humility."

Later she wondered if he had really meant what she thought he meant. She couldn't believe he did, and yet those sentences had formed as clearly in her mind as if he had said them.

Steps sounded on the porch. There were children's voices. The front door opened and Gordon leaped to his feet.

"There's Estelle and the children now," he said hastily. "Excuse me a minute, please." He hurried into the hall.

From where she stood Cora could see in Championship Events Are Increasing in Number and Appeal Year by Year

By Shepard Barclay

BRIDGE has come with a great rush in the last few years as a medium of championship competition. Besides the increasing number of events of national scope, more and more sectional, state and city tournaments are being held. The season which is just now getting into its stride will be more active than any of its predecessors in this respect, just as each of the last several seasons was bigger than the one that went before.

In the field of national activities, in which some events are decided in the summer but most of which occur in the winter, there are now competitions for teams of four men, four women and combinations of men and women, for pairs of men, pairs of women and mixed pairs at auction, and almost as many different ones in contract. In addition, there are several special contract competitions, such as the team of four challenge championship, for a trophy which goes to the winner of a challenge match between the holders and those who assail them; the masters pair supremacy, settled in an annual tournament to which nobody is eligible except players who have finished first or second in other national events, and the Vanderbilt cup annual contest involving the greatest teams of four in the country, who play on practically an invitational basis.

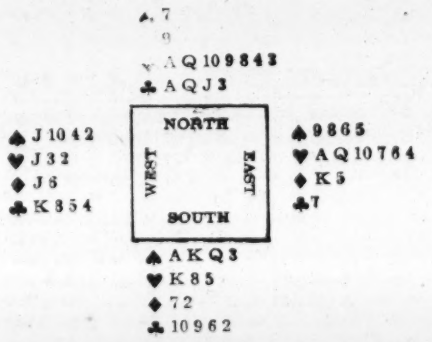

December will be a great month in bridge competitions of national significance, for the official national championships of the American Bridge League will be held during its first week in Cleveland, and the Vanderbilt cup test is scheduled immediately thereafter in New York. Reports from those in charge of both events indicate an appreciably larger number of distant entries than in previous years, so that they will be still more representative geographically than in the

Among the states which will hold championship events this season are Ohio, North Dakota, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which has already had its event, a most successful one, in Pittsburgh. All of these attract entry lists of several hundred players, as also do the western tournament in Chicago and the eastern championships in New York. Interclub leagues are now flourishing activities in various cities, notably Cleveland and Philadelphia, both of which have several such organizations busy throughout the season. Interclub matches between clubs in the same or nearby cities are likewise coming to the fore.

Why don't you enter some of these events?

Contract Systems

Is there any way that a small slam may be properly bid and made on the following hand, in which neither side is vulnerable and North is the dealer?

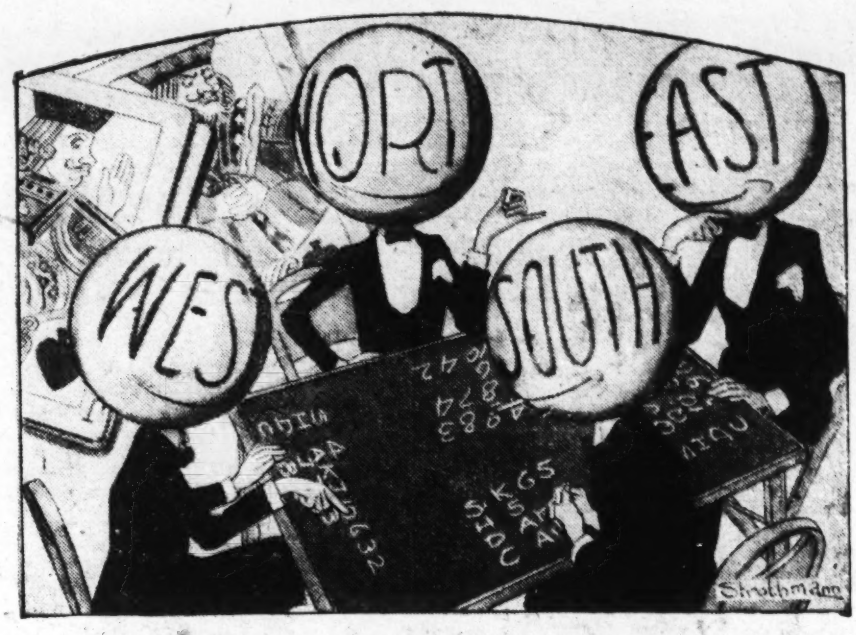

There is. The crackerjack pair of George Reith and Willard S. Karn found the way to do it in a recent championship tournament. Or perhaps it would be truer to say that Karn found the way to bid it and Reith the way to play it.

Reith in the North opened the bidding with one diamond, East bid one heart and Karn in the South bid one spade. After West's pass, Reith made a jump shift, or forcing takeout, of three clubs, which Karn carried to five clubs. Reith now switched to five diamonds, indicating pronounced preference for that suit despite his partner's having helped clubs.

That set the stage for Karn's wily declaration. He reckoned that his three set-up spades would enable Reith to discard any heart loser or losers as soon as he might happen to get the lead, and that therefore there probably was at least a small slam in the cards if the opponents could be prevented from leading hearts. So he bid five hearts! This was sure to fool everybody at the table and make it appear that he had a void suit in hearts and so could trump the first heart lead. It compelled Reith to bid the small slam of six diamonds, which closed the bidding.

East fell into the trap, as would practically all good players when a "feature showing" or "cue" bid of their own suit had been made. Instead of leading a heart, he opened the five of spades, believing that suit offered the best chance to score against declarer.

Karn, as it turned out, had put a pretty little job of playing up to his partner, who measured up to it, however, as he usually does. After taking the first trick with his ace and returning the king of spades for a discard of his only heart, Reith led the ten of clubs and let it ride, winning the finesse. Realizing his lack of re-entries into the dummy, he cashed his queen of spades next, discarding the jack of clubs on it, then offered his club nine and put the queen on it, forcing East to let it win or trump it. As things now stood, that was the only trick East could get, so he ruffed it, and the rest of Reith's hand was a laydown for the remaining tricks.

The Big Four

The greatest four that ever played,
Outclassing badly all the rest,
Who never one mistake have made,
Are North, South, East and West.

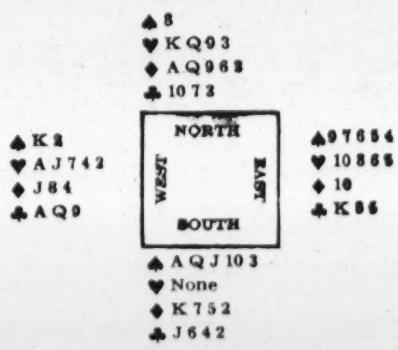

Those jolly boys are always right
Whenever a finesse is guessed,
They seem to have a second sight,
Do North, South, East and West.

They make the most amazing plays,
They never fail to know what's best;
You cannot stack a hand to feaze
Old North, South, East and West.

For years they've starred in diagrams;
Real cards might bring a different test
And maybe end those games and slams
By North, South, East and West.

Without Karn's deceptive bid, more than five-odd tricks are impossible.

What is the correct bidding of the following hand, with East and West vulnerable and North and South not vulnerable?

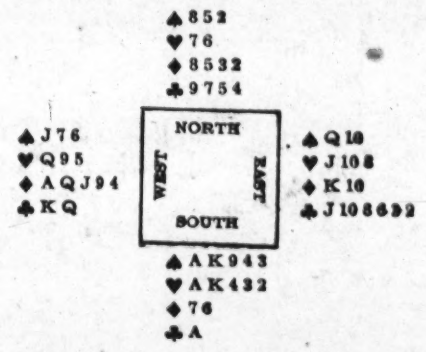

A Law a Week

What rights does dummy lose if he intentionally sees the face of any card held by declarer or either adversary? He may no longer call declarer's attention to any of the following: 1. Any legal right. Penalty: forfeiture of such legal right. 2. A card exposed by an adversary. Penalty. the card is no longer exposed. 3. An adverse lead out of turn. Penalty: the adversaries, after consultation, may decide which of them shall lead. 4. An adverse revoke. Penalty: the revoke may not be claimed. 5. The fact that he has refused a suit by asking whether he has any or none of it. Penalty: declarer may not change his play and is liable for any revoke resulting therefrom.

Next week—What occurs if a player has incurred a penalty requiring him to play the highest or lowest of a suit, or to win or lose a trick, or to lead a certain suit, or to refrain from playing a certain suit, and he fails to act as directed when able to do so?

Auction Problems

How would you bid and play the following hand?

South should open with one spade. West may properly bid two diamonds, or else double to show a hand appreciably stronger than a minimum—a declaration which would be safe if his partner makes a non-fitting response, as he is most likely to do, for West is prepared to resort then to a diamond bid. If West bids two diamonds, North and East should pass and South show his second suit with two hearts. West's hand, being worth about six tricks, justifies a three-diamond call now, North and East passing. South, insisting on his partner choosing between his two suits, should rebid the lower ranking one with three hearts, West passing and North showing spade preference with three spades. Since East has twice indicated probable borderline support for his partner's diamonds by passing, he can now risk four clubs in the chance that West will fit that declaration well, failing in which West can bid four diamonds now without increasing the contract. South, however, will now call four spades, ending the auction.

If West on his first turn should choose to double, North passes and East should bid two clubs, South two hearts, West three diamonds, North and East pass, South three hearts, West pass and North three spades, which would end the bidding.

The point emphasized in either version is that North is released from the obligation of showing preference for his partner's suits if, when his turn comes, it is a hostile bid that prevails; but no matter how weak he is, he must express his preference, if any, when his partner's bid is the one prevailing. Having three spades as against only two hearts, he must show his spade preference.

In the play at spades, West should lead his king of clubs, top of his partner's suit, which South of course wins. South, counting losers in his own hand, sees that he must lose two diamonds and one trump trick; if he also loses a heart he cannot make game. His sole chance is to prevent a heart loser by finding the six missing hearts evenly divided, enabling him to ruff the third round in dummy. This risks an over-ruff, which may possibly be prevented, in the case of a bad distribution, by first leading two rounds of trumps. So he should lead his ace and king of trumps, next his two top hearts and a little one ruffing it in dummy. Game is now sure, no matter which minor suit he chooses to lead from dummy. It will be noted that game would have been impossible if North had let South play the hand at hearts.

The New Problem

How should the following hands be bid, granting that opponents constantly pass?

NORTH
♠ 7 ♥ A Q 5 3 ♦ A K 6 5 4 3 ♣ 9 6
SOUTH (Dealer)
♠ A K J 10 4 3 ♥ K J 10 9 4 ♦ 2 ♣ 4

Gallant Fox—King of the Turf

The Biggest Money Winner in the History of Racing, Gallant Fox, Now Retired From the Turf, Was the First Horse to Win the "Triple Crown" of Racing Since 1919—As Game a Colt as Ever Waited at the Barrier, He Was a Real Equine Personality as Well

By James Fitzsimmons

Trainer of Gallant Fox, Diavolo, Distraction, Dice and Many Other Famous Thoroughbreds

A GREAT horse was lost to the turf when Gallant Fox was retired from racing. The biggest money winner of all time, he was a champion if there ever was one—one of the best the American turf has ever seen and by long odds the best three-year-old I've ever trained. Is it any wonder that it feels like a wrench at my heartstrings to have to part with him?

The general public, until near the close of Gallant Fox's career as a two-year-old, probably looked upon him as just another thoroughbred. But before a year had gone by they voted him the most popular race-horse and the greatest sensation since Man o' War.

Several things the big bay did during this past season may have had something to do with that. He won the historic Preakness at Pimlico. He won the famous Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs. He won the rich Belmont at Belmont Park. Those great stakes make up the "Triple Crown" of American racing. Gallant Fox was the first horse that has won all three of them since Sir Barton pulled the trick back in 1919.

But Gallant Fox did more than that. He won the American classic at Chicago. He won the Saratoga cup. He won the Lawrence realization stakes, and in that event he ran the greatest horse race I've seen in nearly 45 years on the turf. Altogether he won nine races during the season—all of them stakes; and when he brought his career to a close with a victory in the Jockey Club cup his winnings in two brief seasons of campaigning reached the astonishing total of $328,165. No other horse in the world's history of racing has ever equaled that figure. Since Gallant Fox's retirement the Jockey Club has ruled that the value of trophies won can be added to a horse's earnings. This carries his winnings to $341,365.

One race he lost this year, and only one—the Travers stakes at Saratoga. The course was heavy and holding that day and he was beaten unexpectedly by an extreme outsider, Jim Dandy.

Now his career as a racer is over and the colt has been retired to the stud. His owner, Mr. William Woodward, vice-chairman of the New York Jockey Club, had intended to start the big bay in the Hawthorne gold cup at Chicago and the Latonia championship; but Gallant Fox contracted a cold which, while not serious in itself, made it necessary for us to ease him in his work. This interruption to his training would have prevented him from doing himself justice, and it was decided to retire him at once rather than wait for the end of the fall season.

Although he had been in constant training since last January, Gallant Fox never looked better, and never was better, than just before he caught that cold. In fact, I don't think he was ever as good. He was a horse that seemed to thrive on work, was never sick or sorry, and he retires from racing just as sound as he was on the day he was first broken.

I hate to lose him, but my consoling thought is that within three years I may have some of Gallant Fox's sons and daughters to handle and that they may possess the qualities that made their sire the champion three-year-old of 1930. With his blood lines, his power, size and quality, Gallant Fox should make a great sire.

Those yearlings will carry me back to the day, just a little more than two years ago, when I first saw Gallant Fox. Then a yearling, the son of Sir Gallahad II and Marguerite, he had been brought up from the Belair stud, Maryland, and placed in my charge. To me, he was just a nice colt with a tremendous curiosity—there wasn't anything about him that made me feel confident that some day he'd make history on the turf. Mr. Woodward, though, thought differently. From the very first he was certain that Gallant Fox was a future champion. And he never wavered in that opinion—not even when the colt failed to finish in front in the first two races of his career. Rather, he was more than ever convinced that he was right.

Now, I'd better explain that, to a trainer, an untried colt is just so much promise. Breeding and appearance are all right, but the all important question remains: "How fast can he run?" The trainer has seen so many well bred "good lookers"—high priced ones, too—that have turned out to be failures in the racing game that he doesn't begin to get enthused until a youngster shows him he can run a quarter of a mile in 23 seconds or better. Then he might loosen up a bit.

Of course Mr. Woodward had watched Gallant Fox from the days when he was a foal and had made a study of his blood lines—and he said from the start that I'd do well to keep my eye on that yearling for he was positive that he had the makings of a great horse. Well, results have proved that he was right.

A minute ago I mentioned Gallant Fox's curiosity. That colt had more of it than any horse I've ever seen, and I've seen thousands of them. He wasn't a bit shy, or timid, but when it came to curiosity he was like a child who wants to see "what makes the wheels go round." I remember one day soon after he had first come up from Belair. It had been raining lightly and I had taken an umbrella out with me. When the rain stopped I put it down on the ground without bothering to close it. A lot of yearlings would have shied away from it, but when Gallant Fox got a flash of it out of the corner of his eye, he just naturally had to find out all about it. So he walked over, just as calm as you please, and nosed around it. Then, when he had found out everything there was to know about it, he gave it his O. K. and went his way. It didn't interest him any more.

He was like that about everything—and he never quite got over it. Right through his career, whenever he was going to race at a track that was strange to him, I'd have to show him everything there was to see. I'd have him led into the paddock a couple of times and let him stand in one of the stalls to see what that was like. He wanted to see everything for himself.

Probably he was more curious as a yearling than later on, but he saw so much that year that was new to him. He had to find out about everything we did in teaching him to race, and after he knew about it, and it was old stuff to him, he didn't seem to think about it any more. We thought we had shown him everything he might be interested in—the barrier and all the rest of it—but when he went out to run his first race, it was his curiosity that beat him.

He got interested in the other horses that were standing there at the post with him, and what they were doing. His jockey tried to snap him out of it, and get him off with the others when the barrier was sprung; but Gallant Fox got away next to last. He had been too curious. But when he saw the other horses running down the track, he started after them. He wasn't curious then; he was trying his best to catch them. At the finish he was galloping over them, but the effort had come too late and he finished third. The way he made up ground convinced me he was all right. I was beginning to agree with Mr. Woodward—that we had a champion on our hands.

That first race didn't quite satisfy the colt's curiosity. He was still interested in the horses about him when he went to the post for his second race, the Tremont stakes over his home course at Aqueduct. And again he forgot to leave the barrier. Some of the best two-year-olds in the country were in that race. Sarazen II finished first, and Mokatam came in second. Soon after Gallant Fox started he got into a pocket on the rail, and in that position he couldn't possibly get through. But for his curiosity he should have won both of those races.

That finished his curiosity at the post. He knew what was what after that and he went on to win the Flash stakes at Saratoga and later the Junior championship at Aqueduct. But, though he didn't win it, I am satisfied that the best race Gallant Fox ran as a two-year-old was the futurity. Whichone and Hi-Jack finished ahead of him, but he wasn't beaten far and those seven furlongs down the Widener course at Belmont are a very good test. Following his Junior championship victory he was allowed to take a rest for the remainder of the season.

Gallant Fox had a trick that he pulled again and again during the two years I trained him. I got wise to it quickly enough, and found a way to beat him at it, but we never succeeded in changing him. When the colt was getting a stiff work-out, such as he had to have in the intervals between his races, he absolutely refused to concede any start to his work horse. Whatever horse it was had to toe the mark with him and break on even terms.

It is a practice in training stake horses to give the work horse a good start. It spurs on the stake horse and he works hard to overcome the handicap. We tried it with Gallant Fox, letting the work horse canter half a furlong down the track and then starting both of them at once. But would Gallant Fox go after him? Nothing doing! He'd canter along like he was wondering why the other horse didn't stop and wait for him to catch up. We tried it again and again, but Gallant Fox just wouldn't do it. Perhaps he thought it would be rubbing it in to give his stablemate a start and a licking as well.

Whatever his reason, the fact remains that the only way we could get a really satisfactory trial out of him was to use two horses. We'd start one away with Gallant Fox and let him battle the big bay for the first half of the distance. Then another horse, which had been cantering ahead and was fresh, would take up the task and race Gallant Fox over the rest of the route. That usually worked all right, but several times I had to use as many as three horses to get a good trial out of our colt.

We bought a horse named Flaming for the special purpose of helping the colt get ready. The arrangement worked well for Gallant Fox, but not so well for Flaming. He's resting up now.

Gallant Fox wintered well after his first campaign on the turf and was in excellent condition for his first test as a three-year-old, the Wood Memorial stakes at Jamaica. When he won that handily enough, beating Crack Brigade and other good horses, we decided that we'd go after the Preakness and the Kentucky Derby, the classics of the spring season. Crack Brigade again furnished most of the opposition in the Preakness, and Gallant Fox had to come from behind to win. It was a closer race than the Wood Memorial, but the better horse won.

Then came the Kentucky Derby, racing's greatest classic. Gallant Fox must have regarded it as just another workout, judging from the way he acted. He was as cool as a cucumber. Some horses seem to worry over a big race, especially when they are in strange quarters, but Gallant Fox made the trip from Pimlico to Churchill Downs like he was going home for a rest. He was just as quiet as you please and he never missed a meal.

As he was being taken from the car at the unloading station a locomotive passed close by. That might have scared some horses. Gallant Fox merely stuck his head out of his box, gave the locomotive the once-over for a moment to satisfy that curiosity of his and then calmly stepped out of his car and went on his way.

That coolness never left him. It was a slow track—and I had been hoping for a fast one—but Gallant Fox paraded confidently to the post, and once the barrier was sprung he never left the issue in doubt.

I had gone to the paddock to see Gallant Fox before he went to the post, and as the horses were parading around to the start I went to the infield and watched our horse win the race and heard the cheers of the thousands who jammed old Churchill Downs. The second the horses passed the judges' stand and the race was over I started running toward the colt. I thought I could get to him on his way back to the scales. But I must have been slow getting off the mark. Before I could get across the track the crowd had closed in and I was shut off completely. The mounted troopers started to clear the course and that only made matters worse for me. One of their well-trained horses bumped me over to another which gave me a shove to a third. I came as near being a human football as I ever want to. The groom, fortunately, had succeeded in reaching Gallant Fox and had handed him to Mr. Woodward; and I remained an interested spectator until the ceremonies incidental to the presentation of the cup were just about over. But I'm glad it was I and not Gallant Fox that got pocketed in the derby.

The big bay's next engagement was the Withers at Belmont Park, but Mr. Woodward preferred to wait for the Belmont stakes before starting his colt again. I backed him in his decision. What with the racing and traveling he had done Gallant Fox was entitled to as long a rest as he could get.

Despite his preakness and derby victories our colt did not go to the post a favorite in the Belmont. Whichone was given the edge as a result of his victory in the Withers and his excellent record as a two-year-old. The track was muddy and a light rain was falling, but the greatest crowd in Belmont's history was out to see the meeting of the champions. Mud at Belmont Park is different from that at most other courses. The track has a good hard bottom to it. Gallant Fox apparently found it to his liking. Before they had gone a mile the race was virtually decided. And the fact that he downed the public favorite didn't prevent the big bay from getting a tremendous ovation from the huge crowd as he went into the lead and never gave it up.

In the ceremonies following his victory Gallant Fox's curiosity again came to the surface. Mr. Woodward had started to lead the colt into an inclosure near the judges' stand that had been especially railed off for the winner. This was something new to the horse, and there wasn't time for him to get fully acquainted with it. He became a bit restive. Watching him as I hustled along trying to get there I was afraid he might hurt himself in his strange surroundings, but he quieted down and behaved like a gentleman.

Following the Belmont, Gallant Fox scored an easy victory in the Dwyer stakes. The horse was doing so well that we decided to ship him to Chicago and try for the American classic, run at the Windy city's newest and most elaborate race course. Gallant Knight, that had run second in the derby, put up a better fight there than he had at Churchill Downs, but it wasn't good enough to win. He was a much better colt than I had expected to meet.

I don't think the American classic was Gallant Fox's best race. In fact, I know very well it wasn't, and we wouldn't have been a bit afraid to have met Gallant Knight for the third time in the Latonia championship. The Audley farm people, following the American classic, expressed great confidence in their colt's ability to beat ours, but I am just as satisfied that Gallant Fox would have hung it on him again. Unfortunately, both colts were retired, so the question will never be settled. But the honors remain with Gallant Fox.

After Chicago came the Travers derby. Never has Saratoga's beautiful course held such a crowd of racing enthusiasts, all of them worked up to fever pitch in expectation of the battle between the two three-year-old champions, Gallant Fox and Whichone. What a fizzle the race turned out to be. After Gallant Fox and Whichone had raced each other into the ground on the muddy track the despised outsider, Jim Dandy, that went out at odds of 100 to 1, came from behind and won. It was just an example of the glorious uncertainty of the turf.

Our big bay came back in his next start and won the Saratoga cup in a gallop, and then we began getting him ready for the Lawrence realization stakes at the fall meeting at Belmont Park. However, he may have won his other races, Gallant Fox had the battle of his life to win the Realization. James Butler's colt, Questionnaire, was a great horse that day and it was only after a terrific struggle that Gallant Fox got the verdict by a nose.

Questionnaire was the one that set the pace, and what a pace it was. Sande rode with good judgment and held off the pace when he found it too fast. He kept two lengths back of Questionnaire until he reached the turn for home. There he closed the gap.

The straight at Belmont is the longest we have on any of our courses with the exception of Aqueduct, and from the home turn right on down to the judges' stand the colts staged their epic battle. Gallant Fox, on the outside, had been forced a bit wider than was necessary by Workman, who had the mount on Questionnaire, but the big bay quickly recovered the lost ground. And, locked together nose to nose, the two colts fought it out, foot by foot and inch by inch. With the air filled with a frenzied din from the packed stands the two horses reached the wire so close together that no one but the placing judges knew the winner.

When the numbers went up on the board I heaved a sigh of relief and wiped the perspiration from my forehead, which nowadays goes a long way back. But the placing wasn't made official for a few minutes. Workman had entered a protest, claiming that he had been crowded. It was quickly dismissed and the red official square was slapped up under Gallant Fox's number.

It was a great race—the greatest I've seen in my lifetime on the turf.

Then came the Jockey Club cup—Gallant Fox's last race. We didn't know it at the time, but in winning that event he was making his last appearance on the turf. It was an easy victory.

He is the second great horse that has left our stable in the last season. Early in the year Diavolo, one of the greatest distance runners the American turf has ever seen, showed that he wouldn't stand training any longer and he was retired to the stud. A

INSTALLMENT IV.

THE hostess looked round, consideringly, at the party gathered together. "Of course you must come, Mr. Vanderlyn! That will mean four in Lord Mansfield's car; and then you and I and Colonel Bruce can go in mine."

"We'd best start at once," said Lord Mansfield firmly, "for it's a damned long way."

"The first thing to do," observed the colonel, "is for everybody to go and find, and bring down here, his or her passport. And then it would be as well if Lord Mansfield took them all in his sole charge. His name will carry weight, and perhaps shorten the tiresome formalities at the frontier. The Italians are extremely particular now, and no bribe, however large, will pass any one lacking a passport into Italy."

After they had all, with the exception of the marchesa, left the terrace, Mr. Dove trotted towards her. "I think I'll ask you, dear Camilla, to drop me in Nice!" I've several old friends and cronies I'd like to look up there, and I can make my own way back here quite comfortably." But, as he knew would be the case, she said gently, "Colonel Bruce will arrange for you to be motored back, Theophilus. I'm in touch with a big garage there, and they're always bringing my friends backwards and forwards."

"In that case would it matter if I stayed and had dinner there?"

"Not in the least! Do just as you like."

She added smiling, "You know that Belle Colline is really what the English call 'Liberty Hall.'"

"Indeed it is." And with real tenderness the old fellow took her pretty soft hand and raised it to his lips. "Liberty Hall," he repeated, "and the most delicious chatelaine in the whole world!"

Lady Mansfield, tall, thin to emaciation, and with faded yellow hair, came out of the chateau, and hurried towards them, a worried look on her fretful face. "I can't find my passport anywhere! James will be terribly cross with me. I don't know what to do about it!"

"But surely Lord Mansfield has got it?"

The marchesa's heart was large enough to feel real sympathy for the querulous, downtrodden wife of the peer profiteer.

"He makes me keep it always. And when we arrived, I put it in the top right hand drawer of my dressing table. I saw it there only yesterday. I've left my maid looking for it—but of course I know quite well she wont' find it!"

Hard on the heels of the poor lady came her big, stout liege lord. "My passport is gone!" he exclaimed in an angry tone. "I've hunted high and low—and so has my man, Dent. It was kept in a dispatch box where I keep some of my office writing paper."

At that moment Joan Peveral came forward. "I've mislaid my passport, so I'll have to stay at home." She looked round her. "Why, what's the matter? You all look as if you had the blues! Have I kept you waiting?"

"I've lost my passport!" cried Lady Mansfield. "And so has my husband."

"I expect they're all right, said Joan airily. "I've often mislaid mine."

"Unluckily, passports visaed for Italy are worth anything from two thousand to ten thousand francs, in France," said Colonel Bruce vexedly. "And a British or American passport is worth twice more than any other."

"Why that?" asked Vanderlyn.

"For the reason that Italy is eager to welcome the right kind of tourists, and American and British travelers are, as a rule, just the sort of folk welcomed there. Not only do they spend money, but they are not in the least interested in Italian politics. Would you go up and see if your's is safe?"

Vanderlyn smiled, for he always carried his passport on his person. But as he felt in all his pockets, and patted himself more or less all over, his smile turned to a look of rueful amazement, for his passport, together with the thin leather case which had contained it, was gone!

Half to himself he exclaimed, "I must have worn another suit yesterday—and forgot to transfer the case from one coat pocket to another." (But, even as he spoke, he felt quite sure that he had worn the clothes he had on now at Monte Carlo; in fact, he had not seen his passport since he had had to produce it in order to gain admittance to the Casino.)

He hurried up, two steps at a time, the central staircase which led to the first floor of the chateau. Then walking rapidly along the broad corridor to his bedroom, he opened the splendid piece of old Spanish furniture arranged now as a gentleman's wardrobe. As he had inwardly well known would be the case, there was no passport case in any of the pockets of the coats hanging there.

"You see an American passport visaed for Italy is worth about $300 to the thief."

There came over him a sudden belief, nay certitude, that he had dropped his passport while he was in the gambling rooms, or, as an alternative, that he had left it on the broad counter of the admission card office.

As he came out of his room, he met Lady Mansfield's maid. "Well," he asked good naturedly "have you found her ladyship's passport yet?"

"O, no, sir! I haven't found it, and, what's more, mine's gone, too, and so is Mr. Dent's!"

Lord Mansfield's valet came out of his master's bedroom looking utterly bewildered.

"I can swear I saw his lordship's passport yesterday in his dispatch box! As for mine, I kept it in a drawer with my clean collars and things of that kind; nothing else has been disturbed, sir, but it's gone, right enough."

Vanderlyn, the bearer of ill news, went down, and so out on to the terrace. "My passport has gone, too," he said briefly.

"It looks as if there's been a clean sweep, and that we shall have to go and see the English and American consuls at Nice and arrange for temporary passports to be supplied to us," said Colonel Bruce.

"Still, Bernard, don't you think you'd better go and see if your passport has gone, too?" said the marchesa anxiously. She had already rung the bell, then ran from the house to the marble table, on which there still stood the coffee tray and stand of liqueurs.

Colonel Bruce must have raced up to his turret room; it seemed but a moment later that he came back, waving a green and gold booklet in his hand. "I could hardly believe my eyes," he cried, "but there this was—on my dressing table, where I confess I generally leave it."

A few moment's later arrived the marchesa's maid, an old-fashioned, not overpleasant, plain featured Frenchwoman, who adored her mistress, but liked nobody else in the world. She bore a large envelope in her mahogany tinted hand.

"Her excellency wants her passport? I have it here."

The marchesa looked from one of her guests to the other. "How amazing!" she exclaimed.

Colonel Bruce opened his mouth; then he shut it again. He was a prudent man, and very seldom said more than he need.

"I think every one sleeping in the chateau had better see whether he or she has his or her passport," said the marchesa.

At the end of an hour every member of the big household had sought and found his or her passport, the exceptions being the butler, Powell, and the three footmen under him. Their four passports had disappeared. So there was nothing for it but to go to Nice. Then some one with dismay remembered that the consulates shut at three. That meant that they must all wait till the morrow.

Vanderlyn alone demurred. "I think—I'm almost sure—I dropped my passport in the casino at Monte Carlo. I know I had it there yesterday."

"So had we all," growled Lord Mansfield.

Vanderlyn went on, "So, if I may, marchesa, I'll go off at once to Monte Carlo to see if I can find it."

Colonel Bruce accompanied the American to the garage, and, as they walked side by side, "What's happened," he said quietly, "is quite clear to me, Vanderlyn, though I don't choose to tell the others what I think. The man who brings over the clean linen each week from a laundry run by some English ladies near here must have been well bribed to steal any foreign passport he could find in the bedrooms at Belle Col-

What Has Happened to Justice?

The Mystery of the Passenger Who 'Jumped Overboard' With A Bullet Through His Heart

By PETER LEVINS.

WHEN the freighter Creole arrived at New Orleans from New York on October 11, 1929, its skipper reported that one of the passengers, Jack Kraft, had committed suicide by jumping overboard while the vessel was steaming up the Mississippi. His motive could not be explained exactly, but then there are many reasons why people commit suicide. Kraft had been infatuated with a young woman passenger, Miss Ione Orde; no doubt there had been a lovers' quarrel. After all, one must expect anything of a young man in love.

It was said that Kraft, 25-year-old New Yorker, had been en route to California with the young woman, who had registered aboard the Creole as his foster-sister. They had planned to write stories of their experience for a newspaper syndicate, and later Ione might try to get into the movies. She was an exceedingly pretty girl, tall, slender, vivacious, and well educated.

What had happened? Well, it was hard to say, exactly. Officers had heard the girl scream, shortly after midnight of the 11th, and then suddenly Kraft had dived overboard. Miss Orde had tried to fololw him, it was said, but had been restrained.

All of which might have been accepted as the truth had not the body been found three days later with a bullet through the heart.

The bullet had entered the right side, passed through the heart, and come out the left side. The body was clad only in underwear and trousers and there was a bedroom slipper on one foot. Miss Orde had told the authorities that Kraft was fully clothed when he leaped from the ship. She nearly fainted when she was informed, at a hotel where she was staying in New Orleans, that the young man's body had been recovered.

Naturally, the discovery played the dickens with the stories already told the authorities. It is no easy matter to explain away a bullet through the heart. Miss Orde and various others did their best to describe what had happened, but they were never able to explain the bullet wound. And when an acting coroner reported that death had been caused not by drowning, but by that same bullet wound, the situation grew difficult in the extreme.

But trust a pretty girl to take care of herself in a bout with justice.

Kraft, it developed, had once served aboard the Creole as a member of the crew. He had long been a friend of Sam Epstein, the steward. He was known in Greenwich Village and had made a slight reputation as a fencing instructor. He had written to friends in the Village that he "hoped to put Ione over" in Hollywood.

A GIRL OF MYSTERY WHO HAD STUDIED ART.

Little was known about the girl. She said that her parents were dead, that she had been educated abroad, had studied art, and had appeared in a show or two in New York as a "high-class showgirl." She admitted that she had registered as Kraft's foster-sister for appearances' sake, and that they had been "bumming their way to California." But she couldn't quite understand, apparently, why Jack had committed suicide.

We will recite some of the other witnesses' stories, as told after the body was found.

Benedict Deeley, the lookout, stated that he was walking the deck at 12:10 a. m., shortly after his watch began, when he saw Miss Orde and Epstein sitting together near the pilot house. He said they seemed to be arguing.

"After I passed them I heard her scream," he said, "and I rushed back and found her with her head in her hands, sobbing. I didn't want to interfere, so I kept on my rounds. Five minutes later I neared them again and I saw Kraft come from below the deck. He rushed by me to the rail and went overboard. I think he jumped," the lookout was reported to have added.

Epstein, in these early reports, appeared unable to add much to the story. He said Kraft suddenly appeared on the companionway, shouted "So long!" and dived over. The steward said Kraft was wearing a bathrobe, thereby differing with Miss Orde, though she may have thought that the bathrobe was an overcoat.

Apparently no one had heard a shot.

All the officers seemed quite in agreement that there had been no unusual commotion. Certainly if there had been a pistol shot, any serious trouble, the night watchman would have heard it. A boat had been lowered soon after Kraft went overboard, it was said, but no trace of him had been found, despite a determined search.

And now he had been found, with a bullet through the heart.

On October 16 the police made another interesting discovery. Miss Orde, it seemed, had written a letter to John McGouldrick, handsome second officer of the Creole, in which she asked him to "remain the same on the subject we talked over at the hotel." Here's what she wrote:

"Mac, dear:

"Though I didn't see you even to say good-bye and things look pretty black, my promise still holds. I haven't changed my mind. Remain the same on the subject we talked over at the hotel the last evening I saw you and as soon as I am cleared of all this I'll write you and we can make plans.

"You don't realize that you and thoughts of you are the only things that keep me from going to pieces. Please write to me immediately when you get this. I'll live for the letter and it will keep my courage up. I need it so.

"Your Ione."

Confronted with this letter, and with a revised statement by Epstein that the girl had quarreled with Kraft, she now altered her story considerably. She said Kraft had accused her of paying too much attention to others on board, and that he had slapped her and tried to choke her. "When I screamed, Mac came up and Jack left us and went below," she stated. "In a minute he came back on deck, ran to the rail and jumped over."

She and Epstein continued to maintain they knew nothing of a shot having been fired.

"Several of us had been sitting on the deck," said Epstein. "I was with Miss Orde, Kraft, and another passenger named C. D. Bridges. After a while Bridges left us and Jack asked me to let him talk to the girl alone. I went below and had been gone about 15 minutes when I heard her scream. She often screamed during the day, so I didn't think anything was wrong."

He said he tried to quiet the girl and was there with her when Kraft appeared from below and went overboard. "She knocked me over trying to follow him, but I held her," he added.

THEY TRY IN VAIN TO MAKE AN ARREST.

The authorities felt they were getting somewhere, but very slowly. They decided to hold Epstein and Miss Orde and to arrest McGouldrick. By this time, however, the Creole had shoved off for New York. When deputy sheriffs boarded the vessel at Pilot's Point, La., Captain W. C. Sundstrom refused to give up his second officer, saying he was needed for the operation of the ship. "You can arrest him in New York," said Sundstrom.

So the leading suspect and the chief piece of evidence, the ship itself, departed the scene.

Miss Orde went through something of an ordeal on the 17th when officers, accompanied by George Kraft, of New York, the dead man's brother, took her to have a look at the remains. Several days before, when asked to describe Kraft, she had seized a pencil and drawn a sketch of him, but now she was feeling rather differently. She fainted twice in the course of the identification.

"I'm—not—not sure that it's he," she moaned.

George Kraft, however, was positive.

The girl was locked up in the Pointe-a-la-Hache, La., jail, to await the action of the grand jury. District Attorney Leander Perez stated he would request the jury to indict McGouldrick. The case had fallen into Perez' jurisdiction, since the body had been found in Plaquemines parish. He continued to question the girl after her trying experience at the grave and the next day announced that she had made a new statement, and that "we obtained a lot of good stuff."

It was reported the girl had made the statement, "I know that neither Sammy nor I saw it."

Gilbert L. Stancliff, local head of the Pinkerton detective agency, took part in the questioning. Reporters heard Stancliff's voice raised several times. Once he was heard to say, "When he reaches New York, he may throw the blame on you." And again, "He's ditched you, left you to face the music. Are you going to stand for that?"

Nothing would be given out, however, until the grand jury meeting, scheduled for the following Saturday.

True to expectations, the grand jury indicted McGouldrick and it was stated that he would be arrested as soon as the Creole arrived in New York. Miss Orde was closeted in the jury room for an hour-and-a-half and was near collapse when she emerged, but though it was said that she had grown furious with McGouldrick because he had gone away and left her in jail, no details of her testimony were made public. It was said that her story had caused the second officer to be indicted.

While the grand jury was deliberating, three ship's mattresses were found on the west bank of the river not far from where the body had been discovered, washed up on the levee. The mattresses were identified by Miss Orde as precisely similar to those upon which she, Kraft and Epstein had sat on the forward deck of the Creole. She could not explain how they had gotten overboard.

"We have found stains on the mattresses," announced Sheriff Ernest Alberti. "The stains will be examined."

Miss Orde was brought back to New Orleans on the 19th and placed in jail there, pending the construction of women's quarters in the Plaquemines parish hoosgow.

"Hold grand jury indictment for John McGouldrick, second officer, S. S. Creole, for murder of Jack Kraft, committed night of October 11, Kraft having been shot aboard the vessel by McGouldrick in the Parish of Plaquemines," read a telegram from Alberti to the New York authorities. "Mailing you by special delivery copy of indictment. Pinkerton agency will cooperate with you."

DETECTIVES IN ROLE OF WELCOMING COMMITTEE.

Five New York detectives went down the bay on Monday, the 21st, in a police launch to meet the incoming Creole. When the freighter did not stop at Quarantine, the officers trailed it up the river to its pier at West 11th street, where they boarded the Creole and placed McGouldrick under arrest. His fellow officers joked with him while he changed to civilian clothes. He said it was a "lot of foolishness."

Taken to the marine division of the police department at the battery, he gave his age as 28 and his home as the Creole. He said he had been with the Southern Pacific lines for six years. Reporters were not allowed to talk to him, nor were any newspapermen admitted aboard the Creole. S. I. Cooper, general manager of the line, being on hand to see that the pier guards did their duty.

Cooper interviewed Captain Sundstrom and Deely, after McGouldrick had been removed, and later told the following story to reporters:

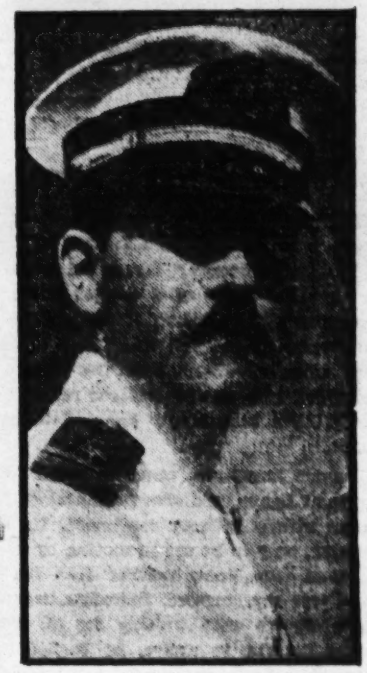

He said that Deeley heard a woman scream at 12:10 and, investigating, found Ione, Kraft and Epstein sitting on a mattress. The girl was crying. Deeley decided the matter was of no concern to him and returned forward. At 12:20 he saw Kraft come from the steerage, run to the rail and jump. Deeley shouted to McGouldrick, who was on duty on the bridge, and the ship was stopped.

Deeley was positive that no shot had been fired, said Cooper. Then the general manager informed the reporters that there had been conjecture on the ship as to whether Kraft, athletic and an able swimmer, had jumped overboard because he had feared trouble with the authorities because of taking Miss Orde from one state to an-

Masquerade Snare---Notorious Plot Failed Through th

By ASHTON-WOLFE.

AN INHUMAN soulless monster was Heilbrunn, an Alsatian, nicknamed "Le Loupin." Never did the avenging blade of a dagger strike more opportunely than when it sheared through the thread of his evil life. None of us felt sorry when we found that the woman who had killed him was beyond our reach, for we should have been sorely tempted to let her escape.

Jacques Laughton, chief inspector of the Surete at Lyons, had always impressed me as a man utterly without sentiment. He was a machine, only to be set in motion by a crime—a man who knew neither fear nor pity. Great was my surprise, therefore, when one day while we were waiting for M. Duprez, the magistrate, to arrive, he turned to me and said: "She is the sweetest girl in all the wofld!"

I stared dumfounded. Laughton had a habit of saying queer things in the most unexpected manner.

My friend walked angrily up and down the room without replying. Suddenly he stopped and planted himself before me.

"I'm a ugly beast! I know," he said, "but I can't help it, I worship her."

"But, who is it, man? You haven't told me yet."

"Mlle. Gilberte," he replied, sinking his voice to a whisper. "The new assistant. What do you think of her?"

"For once I agree with you, Laughton. She is beautiful, clever, and charming."

Laughton seized my hand and shook it warmly.

Her Secret Purpose.

"Thanks, my friend," he cried, as though I had conferred a great favor upon him. "I am going to marry her."

I dare say I looked startled, for experience had taught me that when Laughton spoke so seriously nothing could turn him from his purpose. Yet such a courtship seemed utterly ludicrous. Mlle. Gilberte Chavannes was truly beautiful, not more than 25 and with such marvelously clear gray eyes that it was a delight to encounter her gaze.

She had entered the Surete laboratories some six months previously as assistant to our chief. Although charming in her manner to everyone, she appeared to live in a world of her own, and we had never exchanged more than formal greetings.

"She is to be transferred to the anthropometrical department, is she not?" I asked curiously.

"Yes," Laughton said, "she is greatly interested in our photographic records. I often wonder if there is not some secret reason for her choice of profession."

At that moment the inner door opened and Mlle. Chavannes entered.

"The judge awaits you, sirs," she announced, "and I warn you that he is very irritable."

We entered the office of the magistrate, whose power of forcing a confession from the most obdurate criminal had made him the foremost investigating judge in Lyons. He greeted us and at once opened the sheaf of documents before him.

"I have been instructed to investigate these jewel robberies, M. Laughton, of which the perpetrators cannot be traced. Nor, have you discovered where all the stones are sold. Are your agents useless?"

"It is not that, monsieur," my friend answered calmly. "This gang either does not sell its loot or else they sell it somewhere far away. We are in touch with every jeweler and fence in France and England."

"I see your report speaks of a man named Heilbrunn. What is he?' '

"Oh, we have his chart—he has been arrested several times on suspicion. Here it is."

"My heavens! What a hideous beast!" the magistrate exclaimed, staring at a photograph.

M. Heilbrunn, born in Mulhouse, 1878, speaks French and German, short, stocky figure, almost a hunchback, long arms and slender fingers, nails always carefully polished. Face pear-shaped, protrudging light blue eyes, no chin, mouth unusually large, teeth black from chewing betel nut, straggling red hair, long hooked nose. Traded for years in the Pacific. Arrested in 1906, suspected of helping convicts to escape from Numea. Deported from British South Africa in 1908 for I. D. B. Wounded in 1909 in Sydney for presumed theft of pearls from Chinese smugglers. "A pretty record," said the magistrate when he had read the chart, "and you believe that he is the man behind these robberies?"

"Yes, monsieur. We are watching him and I think we shall trap him yet."

Our colleague, Jules Voltaire, had come dashing up the stairs, his eyes alight with excitement.

"Great news," he gasped. "Another jewel robbery. Messrs. Laurent just phoned up. I have no details yet, but the jewelers have reported the disappearance of one of their employes, and with him a bag containing a fortune in emeralds."

"Come along, then," said my friend. "We'll go and interview the manager."

M. Laurent was very concise in his replies to Laughton's questions, but he could tell us very little beyond the fact that Countess Castiglioni, an Italian lady living at the Continental, had called and requested that a collection of emerald neck laces, pendants and rings should be sent to the hotel, stating that she wished to select several pieces for the wedding of a niece.

Every precaution was taken against trickery. The man they sent was a trusted employe, Jose Martinez. The man knew well that he ran a certain risk, and went armed. The jewelry was carried in a stout leather bag lined with steel netting, and locked automatically.

It was a rule that in order to prevent substitution he should never place the bag anywhere except on the table on which he exhibited its contents.

He had left about 11 o'clock, and should have returned by 1. At 2 p. m. Laurent had telephoned to the hotel and learned that Martinez had left with his bag shortly after 1 o'clock. He had stopped to chat a moment with the manager of the hotel and had shown him some of the stones.

He had told the manager that he would call again with a cheaper selection. We obtained a photograph of Martinez and a description of the clothes he was wearing from M. Laurent, and drove at once to the Continental.

The director of the hotel was unable to tell us anything further than that the Countess Castiglioni was well-known, paid her bills regularly, and was reputed to be wealthy.

We found the lady at home. While Voltaire put a few questions to the countess, I saw Laughton's keen eyes flickering over the room and noting every detail. The countess was a handsome woman with hard, masculine features and a frigid manner.

She was aware of the unpleasant position in which the disappearance of the jeweler's assistant placed her, and she resented it. She had seen that the emeralds were too expensive and had sent the man away.

The porter gave us the only bit of information, of any value. He had called a taxi for Martinez, and heard the assistant order the chauffeur to drive to Messrs. Laurent.

It was a simple matter to find the taxi driver, and with his assistance we were able to follow the missing man's progress.

It appeared as though Jose Martinez had suddenly lost his reason. When half the distance to his firm's premises had been covered, he had ordered the chauffeur to drive to Petit Vatel—a restaurant noted for its epicurean dinners. The Petit Vatel has a huge glass frontage, and through this the driver saw his passenger greet a number of elegant men and women and settle down to luncheon at a table.

"Stop!" cried the fe

Good fortune awaited us at the Petit Vatel. Pranzini, the head waiter, was bubbling with information.

"Certainly," he exclaimed, when Laughton asked whether he had noticed a group of men and women. "This morning I receive an order to prepare a table for 10 people—plenty of flowers, and the menu—!"

"Yes, yes," Laughton said impatiently. "I

tel. ith ton of an nty "I know your talents, Pranzini, never mind the menu."

"Oh, but monsieur, the menu has finger marks of the luncheon party," Pranzini grinned with delight at our astonishment.

"You see," he continued, "I love to observe human beings. In my profession that is necessary. But I also love to—be a detective. I observe all kinds of trifles and try to guess what a man or woman may be. Lately I have started to collect menus with finger marks.

"Today come this party. They were what you call strange. The women looked demi-monde and the men adventurers.

"Then I see M. Martinez, whom I know well. He greet them and si down and I hear him tell my assistant to put the bag he carry on the seat.

"'It's full of emeralds,' he say, 'so be careful.' Now I think how strange for a man who carries jewels to be so careless. So I prepare some menus with a little wax mixture and I hand it to each one to hold——"

"Pranzini, you are a great man," Laughton exclaimed. "You shall have a testimonial from headquarters if we find Martinez."

"He has disappeared?"

"Yes, with the emeralds. Go on, what happened?"

"Well, as soon as I had the menus I write on the back a description of the man or woman who held them. Now I get them."

"Splendid!" Laughton exclaimed, reading the terse remarks penciled on the back of each card.

"But read the menu, monsieur," Pranzini insisted. "These people had a good luncheon."

"Yes, I see—but that does not interest us."

"Monsieur, books I study, say, 'never neglect anything.' I know M. Martinez. He tell me he is dyspeptic and never drink wine."

"Good Lord!" Laughton gasped, sitting down hurriedly. "Thanks for the lesson, Pranzini."

The Italian cackled with triumph: "Eh, I catch you there? Today M. Martinez eat and eat—and drink Pommard and Clicquot; and he smoke cigars, which he never did before. That is strange, unless he has been playing a part and now he throw off the mask. I have here the best of all," and he opened a small box.

"Why, it's a piece of cake," said Voltaire.

"It is, and in it you will find teeth marks of M. Martinez, who bit into it and left it. That will be good proof that it was truly Martinez who was here today."

It was nearly midnight when we ran him down in an infamous dance hall. Watching the whirling couples of apaches, our attention was attracted by a swarthy fellow whose drunken antics were amusing everyone. Laughton pulled out the photograph of the man we were searching for. The drunken fool was Martinez.

Just as my friend was about to signal, some one noticed the uniformed police and gave alarm. There was a rush for the doors. Laughton and I forced our way through the crowd where the assistant was last seen, but he had disappeared; nor could we find him.

As a last resort every one was ordered to stand against the wall while we examined each in turn. Suddenly we heard Voltaire shout and saw him appear from behind a curtained recess. He was struggling with a man who was dressed only in shirt and whose round, vulgar face seemed familiar.

"I found him trying to crawl into a cupboard," Voltaire said. "He is not the man we are after, but we'd better take him with us."

Laughton felt humiliated at his failure; he would not hear of rest until the menus had been photographed and the prints enlarged. A plaster impression of the piece of cake was also taken. Pranzini had helped us more than he knew, for the following day when the records were searched, we found that one of the guests at the luncheon had been a notorious thief known as Jean Tricot.

"Things are not so bad as they appear," Laughton said. "It is a nasty tangle, but this thread leads straight to our friend Heilbrunn. Has the laboratory enlarged our prisoner's fingerprints yet?"

"Yes," I replied. "The chief has questioned the fellow. His name is Raphael Vinieux and he is an actor."

The door had burst open and Voltaire appeared, flushed and breathles. "Come along quick, we've got Martinez."

"Where—alive—has he the jewels?"

"He is alive and at the Hotel des Voyageurs in La Roselle. A doctor is with him now. He was asleep when we arrived and he looked as though he had been drugged——"

"Dubonnet, the landlord, telephoned half an hour ago; he said he'd read about a missing man and thought his lodger might be the one."

The Hotel des Voyageurs was a tumble-down tavern. In a small room we found police officers guarding the door. Lying on the dingy bed, was the man we sought. He seemed barely conscious and moaned feebly. The doctor whom Voltaire had summoned, shrugged his shoulders at Laughton's questions.

"The man appears to have been poisoned. When I came I found him sitting at that table, with his head on his arms. Near him was an overturned bottle of cognac. He was fast asleep——"

Dubonnet, the landlord, related that Martinez had come the night before, accompanied by two women. He appeared to be very intoxicated and his companions helped him up the stairs.

"Did he carry a bag?" Voltaire questioned.

"No," Dubonnet said, "nothing at all."

"I shall lay the whole case before the chief!" Laughton exclaimed when we left the place. "It's too complex for me. What do you think, Voltaire?"

We were fortunate in finding the chief at the laboratory.

The Bitten Cake.

He was examining some photographs and the plaster molding of the piece of cake, and greeted us with a curious smile.

"Now," said the chief, "let us take things in their order. Thanks to that clever waiter and his menus we have traced some of the guests who lunched with Martinez. Two of them are cronies of Heilbrunn. He is at the bottom of this. We have also a plaster molding of a set of teeth. You'll notice that the left canine is missing.

"Martinez was known as a steady, honest, trustworthy man, married and father of a family. I am informed that he suffers from dyspepsia, is a non-smoker and an abstainer, yet he suddenly runs off with jewels worth a quarter of a million francs, lunches heavily, drinks, smokes, and spends his time with disreputable women; and he does all this so openly that every one sees him.

"You were able to follow his trail until you arrived at the Bal Parisien, where he disappeared. Twenty-four hours later you find him weak and ill in a lodging house, minus the jewels. What does that suggest?"

Laughton stared at his chief. "The fellow went suddenly mad."

"Oh—that's your theory? Wait. Mlle. Gilberte has brought me a report from the doctor at the infirmary. Martinez is recovering rapidly, and I have allowed his wife to see him; here is his statement: Martinez declares that he went to the Hotel Continental with his bag attached by a chain to his wrist.

"When he was shown into the salon, the Countess Castiglioni was sitting on a couch, before which a table had been placed.

"He remembers that he handed her a pendant, but when she held it up to the light it slipped and fell to the floor. He stooped to recover it. Up to that point his tale is clear, now it becomes confused and fantastic.

"Something happened when he attempted to pick up the pendant. He says he has a dim recollection of some stifling vapor squirting into his face, and that it robbed him of all power to move. He believes that while he sprawled helplessly on the carpet, someone bound his hands together and carried him into a dark room.

Laughton laughed. "A pretty story. He was seen to leave the countess' rooms; he spoke to the manager of the hotel. He was recognized at the Petit Vatel by Pranzini, and I saw him at the dance hall. Do you suggest that he did all this in a trance?"

Our chief was about to reply when a cry came from Mlle. Gilberte. She was staring at us with dilated eyes, her trembling hands groping as if for support. Suddenly speech came to her with a rush.

"Oh, M.—M. Laughton—I understand at last—It is the same trick which ruined my father and made him a convict. I knew that I had seen that horrible Heilbrunn before. It must have been in Bordeaux. That man who left the hotel with the bag was not the real Martinez!" With a rapid gesture she dragged some papers from her blouse.

A Link in the Chain.

"Look!" she cried. "Five years ago Pierre Chevannes, my father, was a trusted employe of a famous firm of jewelers in Bordeaux. He was sent with valuable stones to a lady—the Duchess Elvira Vladiroff. He was seen to leave with his bag and was found some days later in a small hotel.

"Dozens of people stated that he had waded through orgy after orgy before the police discovered him. His defense was that he remembered nothing, but the jury found him guilty, and he is now in Cayenne. My mother died of grief.

Our chief recalled us to our senses.

"That settles it, gentlemen. I didn't know about this, but I had decided that some scoundrel masqueraded as Martinez while the man was a prisoner. I telephoned a moment ago to the hospital and learned that Martinez has no teeth missing in front; that proves that it was not he who left those marks in that piece of cake. I have ordered the thumb print of Martinez to be taken, it will be here in a moment—come in." The door opened and a gendarme entered.

"Ah, here it is, and here are the menus and the chart of your prisoner, now compare them!"

"Why, the thumb print marked Martinez on the menu is the same as that of our prisoner Vinieux."

"Yes, and I have already ascertained that Vinieux, whose real name is Bourgignon, has lost his left canine tooth. He is the man who disguised himself as Martinez. He is evidently a clever actor.

Get the Leader.

"Now you see why your fake Martinez was able to disappear at the dance hall, and why Vinnieux was only dressed in shirt and trousers when the alarm was raised? The fellow slipped behind the curtain and got rid of his make-up and the assistant's clothes. His own were hidden there, and he was dressing when Voltaire caught him. It was all part of the plot. So was the finding of Martinez at the Hotel des Voyageurs.

"We want the brains of this gang, Heilbrunn. We must let that man think that we are completely deceived. Release Vinnieux and apologize for his arrest. Watch where he goes. Let someone shadow the countess, and if she goes out search her rooms. One of them will surely lead us to Heilbrunn's headquarters. I am convinced that if we raided his house we should find nothing. There are sure to be secret exits."

Orders were given for our prisoner to be released, and two of our best men were chosen to watch his every move. Voltaire grinned when I told him what we suspected.

"You see—the impossible theory. I said so. I followed that fat innkeeper to the house where the fence is known to live, but we dare not risk alarming Heilbrunn or he may slip through our fingers again. However, like every one of us, he has a weak spot in his armor—that is where we must strike.

"He has two. Pretty women and jewels. Now, if you'll promise not to throttle me, I'll suggest a plan. Mlle. Gilberte is pretty, and it's just possible if she went to the Hotel des Voyageurs and played the part of a thief who wants to get rid of some stolen gems, that Dubonnet would take her to Heilbrunn. Once there, she'll have to flirt with the dog and report on all she sees."

I gasped with surprise. Mlle. Chavannes had transformed herself with a few deft touches into a perfect apache girl.

Into the Web.

Laughton shook his head sadly.

"Don't be a fool," broke in Voltaire. "It only shows how clever mademoiselle is. Now listen, my child, I am going to become a drunken cabby and drive you to La Roselle, and from the moment you enter the Hotel des Voyageurs, you'll have watch-dogs always within sound of your whistle.

"I shall post several armed men at the corner ready to rush the house if you are in danger. Dubonnet is one of Heilbrunn's men; let him think you have a chance of making a rich haul, but be reticent—don't tell him anything. Hint at wonderful jewels which you can obtain, and if he takes you to the fence pretend to be very suspicious and crafty."

The plan worked admirably. At first Dubonnet pretended to be indignant at the girl's suggestion that he might help her to get rid of stolen trinkets, but when she displayed a fine diamond as a bait, he made an appointment for the next evening.

Although Dubonnet did not leave his hotel he had evidently communicated with Heilbrunn and received instructions, for when Mlle. Gilberte arrived a car was waiting, and we saw our plucky decoy leave in the company of the infamous Tricot, whom we knew to be a toady of Heilbrunn.

We were well hidden and ready for instant action when they arrived at Heilbrunn's house.

Deadly Danger.

We heard the door open and shut. It was an ordeal to wait, pistol in hand.

It was a risky plan but we counted on the cowardice of the monster. Two dreadful hours passed, and Laughton, haggard with anxiety, was about to order the attack, when a roaring detonation split the silence followed by a yell of pain.

Laughton leaped to a window ledge and hurled himself through the glass. Shots were being fired continuously by the police surrounding the building, in order to terrify the inmates and prevent them from harming the girl.

Voltaire had followed his colleague through the window when the door gave way. A fearsome sight met us as we burst into the room. Tricot was lying on the ground nursing a shattered arm, while in a corner was a heap of writhing bodies with Laughton underneath, and Voltaire half strangled by the fellow Dubonnet.

We quickly dragged Laughton free of his assailants, while our men overpowered and handcuffed them. He was bleeding from several stabs and for a moment groped blindly, gasping for breath, then a terrible cry burst from his swollen lips:

"The girl—in Heaven's name—the girl! Heilbrunn has her! There is a secret passage hidden by a panel somewhere; I heard him dragging her through it, the scoundrel——"

Danger!

Voltaire pushed a pistol into the stomach of Tricot, who was squirming on the floor.

Tricot was inarticulate, so great was his terror, but he pointed to a large picture on the wall.

Laughton tore it away, and we saw a yawning hole. That chase down the dark tunnel was a nightmare. Suddenly a beam of light shone in our faces, and a snarling voice spot vile curses.

"One step farther and I'll cut the girl's throat. You don't know Heilbrunn."

For the moment we were helpless. I don't know how long this intolerable situation would have lasted—when suddenly a choking cough which swelled to a shrill yell of terror, burst from Heilbrunn. His torch clattered to the ground and we heard the soft thud of steel biting into flesh.

Heilbrunn was staggering, blood spouting in streams from his neck, at each blow he squealed, while with crimsoned, quivering hands he strove to cover his gaping wounds. Behind him like an avenging fury swayed the woman we knew as the countess.

Trapped At Last.

Her arm rose and fell savagely, rhythmically, and the knife which she grasped hacked and slashed at the shrieking wretch.

I remember that Voltaire cried desperately: "Stop—Stop! Enough, you beast!" but when, breaking the paralyzing spell of loathing which had gripped us, we rushed forward. Heilbrunn was already dead, and the woman lay a twisted heap, beside him—she had taken her own life.

Huddled against the wall we found poor Gilbrete. She had been spared the atrocious scene we had witnesed, for she was unconscious. Laughton lifted her and bore her to a car, leaving us to see to the ruffians we had captured.

We had taken a great risk in allowing the girl to enter there alone, but without her assistance it is probable that the leader of the gang would again have escaped. We collected evidence enough to send all the men to the penal settlements for life. In a small safe hidden under the floor were the jewels stolen from Martinez.

When Tricot, whose real name was Janex, learned that his leader was dead, he broke down and answered all our questions. The woman who had killed Heilbrunn was named Mathilde Celeste. When she was still a young girl Heilbrunn had involved her in a devilish scheme through which she had unwittingly killed her own brother. Since then he had forced her to commit crime after crime until escape from him had become impossible.

It was Mathilde Celeste who had impersonated Duchess Elvira Vladiroff in Bordeaux when Gilberte's father was convicted. She had then become the Countess Castiglioni. Tricot admitted that he was hidden under the couch when Martinez called with the emeralds; when he had stooped to recover the pendant, which the pseudo-countess had dropped, Tricot had squirted a liquid given him by Heilbrunn into the man's face.

Martinez had then been undressed and pushed into a cupboard. Vinieux, who had studied the voice and mannerisms of the jeweler's assistant, had put on his clothes, donned wig and beard and cleverly impersonated him.

When this statement had been signed, Vinieux was brought in, but he furiously denied the whole story and accused Tricot of inventing it. Unfortunately for him there was the damning evidence of the finger-prints and the missing tooth.

The ruffians we had captured were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

At the conclusion of the trial, when the presiding judge had promised to apply for the pardon of Gilberte's father, Laughton and Mademoiselle Chavannes plighted their troth. M. Chavannes returned to France in time to give the bride away.

PROSPERITY—WHEN AND HOW

investments made. Hence, what money the people now had left they were determined to keep rather than spend. When people made purchases they did so for what they needed at the time and for no more.

Many of our large industries were faced with large stocks on hand, of which they could not dispose at a profit. This was due to the fact that production had outstripped consumption and to a sudden reduction in buying. Hence it was necessary to curtail the manufacture of products until the demand had caught up with the supply. The scale of production had to be lowered, and hence payrolls or employes had to be reduced. This enlarged a class of unemployed with no money with which to buy.

It was not until industries were willing to reduce prices and cut their overhead that a ready market could be found for their products.

The job of business men is to produce cheaper and better goods—and create new wants among the mass of people. But business men neglected that job during a considerable period before the 1929 market crash. Now the leaders of industry are back at their real job, with coats off, sleeves rolled up—and golf sticks and stock ticker pitched in a corner, gathering dust.

Business in general is getting to a stage where consumption is about to catch up with production. The telegraph wires are beginning to fill up with such messages as this: "Rush immediately by express ten gross number three twenty-four hammers we have orders waiting duplicate shipment by freight."

This is not fanciful. It is fact. It is a condition becoming apparent in my own factory and in other factories throughout the country. Stocks of merchandise are becoming low. Soon wholesale dealers and merchants will begin to anticipate business, instead of waiting for their customers' orders and they will order from factories in larger quantities, weeks and months in advance.

Meantime, the heads of industry are performing their other necessary and vital function—the creation of new wants and markets. Necessity is still the mother of invention. The heads of industries are going through their factories, finding ways to reduce costs and to improve products. That means more "sales appeal" to more prospective buyers. Cheaper and better rugs, cheaper and better refrigerators, cheaper and better auto tires, cheaper and better things for ten thousand kinds are on the market—and are being bought. New and attractive products are coming upon the market. Seven piano companies have made the first radical change in manufacturing methods in 107 years, and will be able to offer a reduction of 25 per cent in price as a result. A new development of "dry icing" by use of solid carbon dioxide is effecting changes and improvements in shipment of perishable foods. The automobile owner of not many years ago thought himself lucky if he made a single trip without a tire puncture or blowout; and 3,500 miles was "big tire mileage." Now, tires selling for less travel ten times that distance. Such is the legitimate function of business—to make products better and cheaper. Not necessarily lower in dollar cost; but higher in value to the buyer.

And that is what is being done today, all over America, in practically every industry. Methods are being appraised, revised, improved, revolutionized.

We are on the eve of a great period of prosperity, a higher standard of living throughout America, because the mental attitude of the people has changed. It is now one of confidence and determination. It is one of confidence because it is founded on the theory that hard work and sound thinking are the basis of prosperity. The people now realize that they can obtain prosperity not by means of a governmental regulation of the price the merchant shall get for his groceries or the farmer shall get for his wheat, but by means of the work and the thought which they, themselves, put into their business. A great many people no longer have the notion that they can become rich quick by speculating on the Stock Exchange.

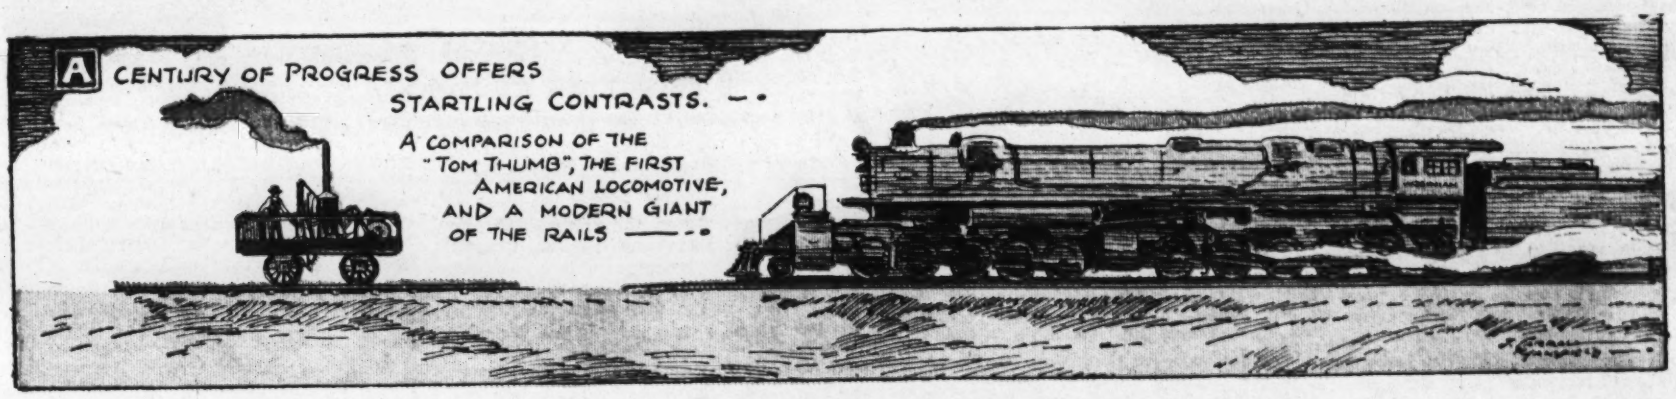

The whole atmosphere of the business world has been changed and clarified. Throughout the nation, men and women are putting into their work the energy and thought that built this country up from its rude beginning to its present foremost place among civilized nations. We must not, however, expect the prosperity of 1928 and 1929 immediately to return. It will not return this fast because time is required for the building of stable, firm foundations. We shall not undertake new enterprises until we are sure of our bearings. We shall not establish new industries until we are reasonably sure of a market for their products. The great majority of us will not speculate and gamble in the expectation of "cleaning up." We shall approach our problems hence on a sure footing. This means that our business recovery will not be spectacular and sensational. It is, however, without a doubt, getting under way, slowly, surely and soundly.

The decade ahead will hence be one of great progress, great prosperity, great satisfaction for our people, because it will be founded on a sound basis.

America is on the upgrade once more.

The Story Of The Railroads -- Part X

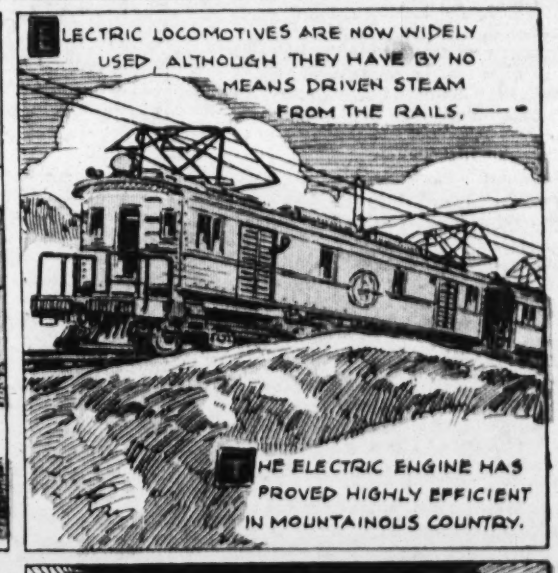

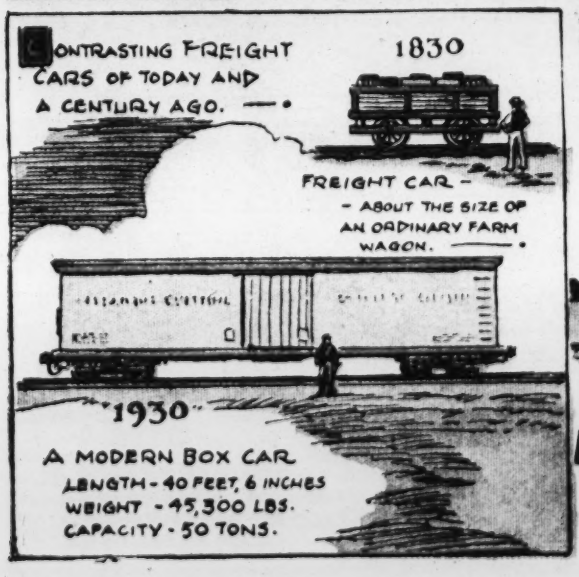

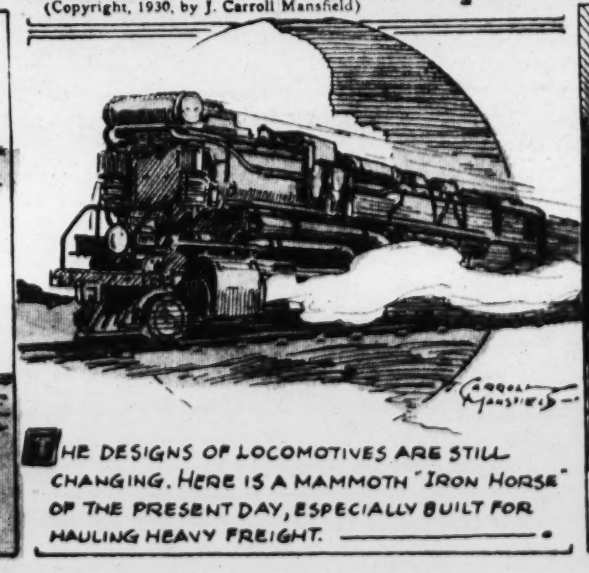

(Copyright, 1930, by J. Carroll Mansfield)

THE RAILROADS HAVE GREATLY AIDED THE GROWTH AND PROGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES AND ARE AN ESSENTIAL FACTOR IN AMERICAN LIFE.

THEY HAVE SPED THE SETTLEMENT OF MANY ISOLATED REGIONS THAT WITHOUT SUCH TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES WOULD STILL BE INACCESSIBLE AND UNDEVELOPED

THEY HAVE HELPED INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE BY AFFORDING AN EASY MEANS FOR ONE SECTION TO SHIP ITS MANUFACTURED GOODS AND SURPLUS PRODUCE TO ANOTHER.

BY BRINGING ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY INTO CLOSE COMMUNICATION THE RAILROADS HAVE HELPED WELD US INTO ONE GREAT NATION.

other. The ship had been only 100 yards from shore at the time, Mr. Cooper said.

And the bullet through the heart?

No, Mr. Cooper hadn't found out anything at all about that.

Captain Sundstrom, according to Cooper, testified that McGouldrick had been on the bridge with the river pilot in charge. Fred Blasland, and that when Miss Orde screamed, the pilot said to the second officer, "You better go and see what that's about." McGouldrick went down, it was said, and played his flashlight on the girl, who was crying. Then he returned to the bridge and several minutes later the cry of "Man overboard" was heard.

But perhaps the reader is getting rather fed up on versions. We don't seem to be getting anywhere. Neither did Justice.

Sheriff Alberti and Under Sheriff Dorsey took McGouldrick into custody on the 26th. "I'm glad to go back and have the matter finally cleared up," he said. "I am sure to be exonerated."

In New Orleans detectives examined belongings of the girl in the case and quickly established that she was Gloria Rouzer, New York debutante, and a niece of Rear Admiral Julian L. Latimer. It was a startling development.

Subsequently her mother, Mrs. Gloria Rouzer, who had been under the impression that the girl was touring the country with a fashion show, was located in New York and additional information was obtained.

Mrs. Rouzer said that Ione was born in East 73d street, Manhattan, and that her father was Captain Leigh H. Rozear. He had changed the spelling of his name after his divorce 12 years before, when the girl was 10 years old. The father had made millions in Mexican mines, only to lose all in a revolution. He was now assistant manager of the Wardman Park hotel in Washington, D. C.

AND SO THEY CAME BACK FROM EUROPE—BROKE.

Mrs. Rouzer said she took the child to Europe with her when she was 15, to continue her schooling and art studies. They were still in Europe three years later when Ione fell in love with and married Michael Powell, a young English movie actor. The marriage proved unsuccessful, and, on top of that Mrs. Rouzer's financial investments turned out badly, with the result that mother and daughter returned to New York quite broke.

Mrs. Rouzer became a dress designer, and the girl, using the name "Gay Powell," took to modeling in fashionable shops and serving as hostess in New York night clubs. The girl was, according to the mother, still awaiting her divorce.

The impulsive, intense young prisoner in Pointe-a-la-Hache bitterly resented "dragging her family into this mess." In fact, she first insisted that she wasn't Gloria Rouzer at all. "What business have they to dig into my past?" she demanded. Later, when her mother announced that she would go to Louisiana with Miss Dorothy Frooks, a lawyer, the girl dispatched telegrams saying it was "quite unnecessary," and that they were "making mountains out of molehills."

"I'll kill myself before I let them see me here!" she cried.

On the 29th it was reported in New Orleans that a bullet hole had been found in a partition of the cabin that had been occupied by the girl.

When McGouldrick arrived, he was lodged in the same jail, his cell being directly above hers.

On the 30th Judge J. Claude Meraux arranged for Ione to tell her story "in order that she might be released without bond." The authorities in the meanwhile had made every effort to make the girl as comfortable as possible under the circumstances.

Her meals were brought by a Frenchwoman who cooked them in her own home. Ione continued to dash off spirited telegrams to her mother, urging her not to come. However, when she received a sympathetic letter from Mrs. Rouzer, the girl tossed her head proudly and said:

"You see, there is loyalty in our family."

The Creole docked in New Orleans on November 1 and four members of the crew were immediately placed under arrest. They were Deeley, Manuel Castro, steerage night watchman; Joe Rodrigues, steerage steward, and Jack Surley, quartermaster.

Mrs. Rouzer and Miss Frooks left New York for the scene of activity the following day. When the train halted at Washington, D. C., a somewhat embarrassing incident occurred, for Captain Rozear came aboard for a few moments. He and his former wife had not seen each other in many years. He pledged all he possessed to aid the girl.

Unquestionably, there was loyalty in that family.

The same day that Mrs. Rouzer and the woman lawyer arrived (November 4), to be received cordially by Ione, it was announced that the body would be exhumed for a further examination, and it was hinted that in this examination no bullet wound would be found!

In other words, the stories of the various witnesses, regarding the manner of Kraft's death, would presently cease to be questioned. After all, the testimony was all against the coroner's finding of a bullet through the heart.

We will briefly list the ensuing events:

November 5—Epstein released on $3,000 bond following hearing. Said McGouldrick had visited girl on shipboard "nearly every day." Stuck to story that Kraft jumped.

November 6—Quoting from a news dispatch—"An effort was made to exhume the body of Kraft at Diamond, La., but because of the condition of the body no pathological examination was made."

November 7—McGouldrick arraigned. Miss Orde clung to original story. Perez expressed surprise, said he'd understood she would turn state's evidence. Had she not told him that, "Mac could have killed him"? She said that the statement had been forced from her under duress. Perez denied the charge and opposed bail for her. He admitted that his case had been greatly weakened.

Ione smiled frequently at McGouldrick during the arraignment, but he only faintly responded.

Perez announced that McGouldrick would go on trial November 25.

November 10.—Ione Orde released after signing transcript of testimony at McGouldrick arraignment. Shook hands with natives, but did not call on the accused officer. Left for New Orleans with her mother, saying they would visit Ione's brother in San Francisco.

November 21—McGouldrick freed. Charge nol-prossed.

The released officer hurried to New Orleans. He received a message to call on Ione at her hotel. He declined, and presently left for New York, to spend Thanksgiving with his family.

DIAMONDS IN THE DAYTIME

a mirror the meeting between him and Estelle. It was brief. He kissed her and whispered in her ear. She whispered a question and he nodded. Cora could never forget that moment's reflected scene, the perfect intimacy of it, Gordon's sureness and pride, Estelle's utter adoration. When Estelle looked at Gordon, Cora understood too much, and what she understood was incredible. Estelle was humbly proud of her husband—of Gordon!

Estelle came into the room. She was a plump woman, in her early thirties, not pretty, but radiant with vitality and happiness.

"I'm glad you came, Mrs. Coburn," she said quietly. "I don't want the children to forget you." She did not offer her hand, but she was neither cold nor distant. "They call me mother, but I don't want them to suffer the shock some day of discovering that I'm really not their mother."

"You're very kind and generous," Cora murmured, too shaken to say more. Then as Gordon and the children entered the room she suffered the last and fiercest blow.

They were beautiful, the kind of children she adored. Their eyes were bluer even than she remembered, their cheeks round and rosy, their curly, well brushed hair shining with golden lights. They stared at her and something cruel caught her heart and crushed it. Her eyes filled with tears. Her babies!

Somehow she managed to say, "They're so changed. I—I can't believe it."

Gordon and Estelle exchanged a significant glance, and Cora understood its significance as clearly as if they had said, "All they needed was proper care and food."

The children stared; she could not speak; the silence grew unbearable.

Gordon broke it by saying to the oldest boy, "You remember your mother, don't you, Gordie?"

"Yes," the boy replied, but made no move toward Cora. His searching hand found Estelle's skirt and clutched it.

Cora wanted to take each child in her arms, all of them at once; she wanted to fondle them, kiss them, call them her own—and she dared not move, dared not touch them, dared not even speak their names.

Finally Coralie, the youngest, could bear the strain of the silence no longer. She lifted her blue eyes, bright with hostility, and stared at the stranger. "Go 'way," she said: "go 'way!"

"Coralie!" Estelle exclaimed reprovingly, but Cora lifted her hand to stay the reproof. "Don't, please," she said, her voice flat with weariness. "She doesn't know me—and she's right. I shouldn't have come. I won't again." She picked up the silver fox fur from the davenport where she had dropped it. "I'm sorry to have—I mean—well, never mind; you understand." She managed a smile. "I'm glad to find Gordon so successful and happy and the children with such a good mother."

"Thanks, Cora," Gordon said. "You are very generous. Shall I call a taxi?"

"No, thanks; I'll walk."

She looked again at the children, looked long and hard, memorizing the picture they made so that it would never fade from her mind.

"Good-bye, Gordon," she said bravely; "good-bye, Mrs. Jamieson—good-bye, Gordie and Robert and Coralie; good-bye." Her voice caught and she closed her eyes to hold back the tears.

"Good-bye," they all said at once, the children's voices suddenly clear and strong.

Cora never quite remembered how she reached the station or passed the time until the train left. She did send a telegram to Eric.

It was suddenly and surprisingly good to see Eric waiting for her when she reached New York; he at least was real, not a confused nightmare.

He kissed her and said, "We'll have to hurry. We can just catch a train home."

Saying nothing, they walked rapidly down the stairs to the lower level, across the waiting room, through the gates, and down the long incline.

"You look tired," Eric said when they were seated. "Did you have a hard trip?"

"Not very, but I've had a long day. I stopped in Providence to see the children and that upset me."

"Of course," he agreed sympathetically. "It was bound to."

As the train rumbled under Park avenue they were silent, but when they had passed 125th street Eric spoke again.

"I suppose," he said, "you've been dressed just this way all day."

"Of course," she replied. "I hardly could change. Why, is anything the matter?"

"O, no, not really. You look very nice, really beautiful, but I do wish, dear, that you wouldn't wear diamonds in the daytime."

An angry retort rose to Cora's lips, but she did not speak it. Instead she unfastened the bar pin and dropped it silently into her bag.

GALLANT FOX—KING OF THE TURF

big, good-looking son of Whiskbroom, Diavolo was the property of Mrs. H. C. Phipps and her brother, Mr. Ogden Mills, who race their horses jointly in my charge under the name of the Wheatley stable. We've had few horses in my 45 years on the turf the equal to Diavolo over a distance of ground and on a fast track.

Divaolo was one of eight yearlings that the Wheatley stable purchased from Mr. Harry Payne Whitney's Brookdale stud back in 1926. What a lucky purchase that was. Out of the eight no less than five turned out to be stake winners. Among them were Dice, Diavolo, Distraction, Swizzlestick and Nixie. On his two-year-old form Dice looked like the best horse of the year. He had won all of his five starts, the last with 130 pounds up, and it was a bad loss, one that hurt me a lot, when that promising son of Dominant died at Saratoga from an internal hemorrhage. He wasn't working hard at the time, just breezing a half mile in about 50 seconds. I had a very high opinion of the colt; he should have made a great horse.

And, now, just another word about Gallant Fox. He was an ideal horse to train. He never sulked or loafed either in work or in racing. All that he wanted was company, something to give him a battle and awaken the fighting instinct that was in him. He wasn't afraid to look any horse in the eye. With brilliant speed he could stay as long as a boy in a candy store. No distance was too far for him and no pace too fast.

It has been hinted more than once that there was an inclination to "duck" some of Gallant Fox's engagements. That is entirely untrue. Mr. Woodward is too good a sportsman not to start his horses at any time he is told that they are fit to run; and, as for me, I've had too many lickings for one more to make any difference. No! We were afraid of nothing on four legs with Gallant Fox!

Not sold in drug stores, but sent direct from labatory. If you want to be free from pain in three days, and relieved of the above ailments in a remarkably short time, call or write for full information to Atlanta Von Co., 709 Walton Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.—(adv.)

Rupture No Longer Spoils My Fun

"Now that I am rid of my rupture and do not wear a truss, I enjoy dancing again. There are many things I now do that I could not even attempt before, also my work is a pleasure instead of a task. To look at me now, no one would believe that I ever was crippled by a rupture."

This is the way people write us after ridding themselves of rupture by using STUART'S ADHESIF PLAPAO-PADS. Stacks of sworn to endorsements report success—without delay from work.

The PLAPAO-PADS are designed to assist nature in closing the hernial opening so the rupture can't come down. When this is accomplished, mechanical support will no longer be needed. The PLAPAO-PADS cling to the body without straps, buckles or springs. Easy to apply—comparatively inexpensive and comfortable.

MY BATTLE WITH DRINK

(Confided to the Author by an Addict)

By P. G. WODEHOUSE

I COULD tell my story in two words—the two words, "I drank." (But as long as editors make a practice of paying for human documents by length, I'm hanged if I'm going to do so.) But I was not always a drinker. This is the story of my downfall and of my rise, for, through the influence of a good woman, I have, thank heaven, risen from the depths and can now go through Times Square without even hesitating at a drug store.

The other day, I met a wild young fellow, a chum of my undergraduate days, up in New York for a good time. He took my arm and began to steer me to the nearest soda fountain.

"Come, Cyril," he cried. "We shall be young only once. Let us enjoy life while we may. I'll blow you to a nut sundae."

I shook him off. "No, Clarence," I replied, kindly but firmly, "I'm through with all that sort of thing. I am saved."

I lost a friend, but I retained my self-respect.

I was not always a slave of the soda fountain. The thing stole upon me gradually, as it does upon so many young men. As a boy, I remember taking a glass of root beer, but it did not grip me then. I can recall that I even disliked the taste. I was a young man before temptation really came upon me. My downfall began when I joined the Yonkers Shorthand and Typewriting Correspondence college.

It was then that I first made acquaintance with the awful power of ridicule. They were a hard-living set at college—reckless youths. They frequented movie palaces. They thought nothing of winding up an evening with a couple of egg phosphates and a chocolate fudge. They laughed at me when I refused to join them. I was only twenty. My character was undeveloped. I could not endure their scorn. The next time I was offered a drink, I accepted. They were pleased, I remember. They called me "Good old Cyril!" and a good sport and other complimentary names. I was intoxicated with sudden popularity.

How vividly I can recall that day! The shining counter, the placards advertising strange mixtures with ice cream as their basis, the busy men behind the counter, the half-cynical, half-pitying eyes of the girl in the cage where you bought the soda checks. She had seen so many happy, healthy boys through that little hole in the wire netting, so many thoughtless boys all eagerness for their first soda, clamoring to set their foot on the primrose path that leads to destruction.

It was an apple marshmallow sundae, I recollect. I dug my spoon into it with an assumption of gaiety which I was far from feeling. The first mouthful almost nauseated me. It was like cold hair oil. But I stuck to it. I could not back out now. I could not bear to forfeit the newly won esteem of my comrades. They were gulping their sundaes down with the speed and enjoyment of old hands. I set my teeth and persevered, and by degrees a strange exhilaration began to steal over me. I felt that I had burnt my boats and bridges; that I had crossed the Rubicon. I was reckless. I ordered another round. I accosted perfect strangers and forced sundaes upon them. I was the life and soul of that wild party.

The next morning brought remorse. I did not feel well. I had pains, physical and mental. But I could not go back now. I was too weak to dispense with my popularity. I was only a boy, and on the previous evening the captain of the Checkers Club, to whom I looked up with an almost worshipping reverence, had slapped me on the back and told me that I was a corker. I felt that nothing could be excessive payment for such an honor. That night I gave a party at which orange phosphate flowed like water. It was the turning point.

I had got the habit!

I will pass briefly over the next few years.

I continued to sink deeper and deeper into the slough. I knew all the drug-store clerks in New York by their first names, and they called me by mine. I no longer even had to specify the abomination I desired. I simply handed the man my check and said: "The usual, Jimmy," and he understood. I neglected my business and undermined my health. It became a regular thing for me to steal out during office hours and hurry to a drug store. My manner with customers became strange. I was nervous and distrait. I became a secret candy eater.

At first, considerations of health did not trouble me. I was young and strong, and my constitution quickly threw off the effects of my dissipation. Then, gradually, I began to feel worse. I was losing my grip. I found a difficulty in concentrating my attention on my work. I had dizzy spells. Eventually I went to a doctor. He examined me thoroughly, and shook his head.

"If I am to do you any good," he said, "you must tell me all. You must hold no secrets from me."

"Doctor," I said, covering my face with my hands, "I am a confirmed soda fiend."

He gave me a long lecture and a longer list of instructions. I must take air and exercise and I must become a total abstainer from sundaes of all descriptions. I must avoid limeade like the plague, and if anybody offered me a frosted chocolate I was to knock him down and shout for the nearest policeman.

I learned then for the first time what a bitterly hard thing it is for a man in a large and wicked city to keep away from soda when once he has got the habit. Everything was against me. The old convivial circle began to shun me. I could not join in their revels and they began to look on me as a grouch. In the end I fell, and in one wild orgy undid all the good of a month's abstinence. I was desperate then. I felt that nothing could save me, and I might as well give up the struggle. I drank two pin-ap-o-lades, three grapefruitolas and a milk shake before pausing to take breath.

The old convivial circle began to shun me.

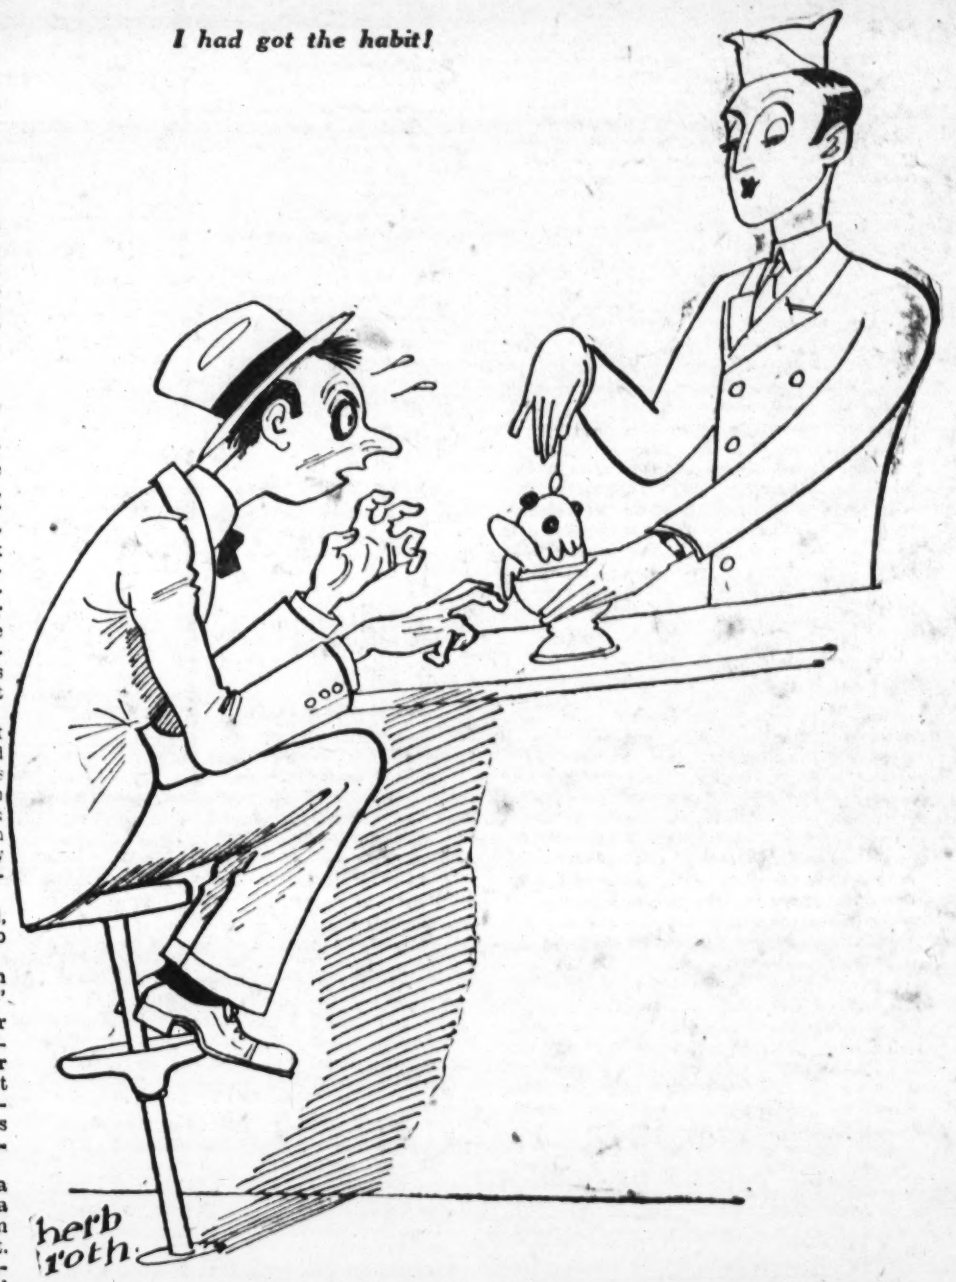

And then, one day, I luckily met May, the girl who effected my reformation. She was a clergyman's daughter who, to support her widowed mother, had accepted a non-speaking part in a musical comedy production entitled, "Oh Joy! Oh Pep!" Our acquaintance ripened, and one night I asked her out to supper.

I look on that moment as the happiest of my life. I met her at the stage door, and conducted her to the nearest soda fountain. We were inside and I was buying the checks before she realized where she was, and I shall never forget her look of mingled pain and horror.

"And I thought you were a live one!" she murmured.

I confessed everything to her. It seemed that she had been looking forward to a little lobster and champagne. The idea was absolutely new to me. She quickly convinced me, however, that such was the only refreshment which she would consider, and she recoiled with unconcealed aversion from my suggestion of a crushed violet frappe or a whoopee college ice. That night I tasted wine for the first time, and my reformation began.

It was hard at first, desperately hard. Something inside me was trying to pull me back to the sundaes for which I craved, but I resisted the impulse. Always with her divinely sympathetic encouragement, I gradually acquired a taste for alcohol. And suddenly, one evening, like a flash it came upon me that I had shaken off the cursed yoke that held me down: that I never wanted to see the inside of a drug store again. Cocktails, at first repellent, have at last become palatable to me. I drink highballs for breakfast. I am saved!

I had got the habit!

FREE TO ASTHMA SUFFERERS

Free Trial of a Method That Anyone Can Use Without Discomfort or Loss of Time

We have a method for the control of Asthma, and we want you to try it at our expense. No matter whether your case is of long standing or recent development, whether it is present as occasional or chronic Asthma, you should send for a free trial of our method. No matter in what climate you live, no matter what your age or occupation, if you are troubled with asthma, our method should help you.

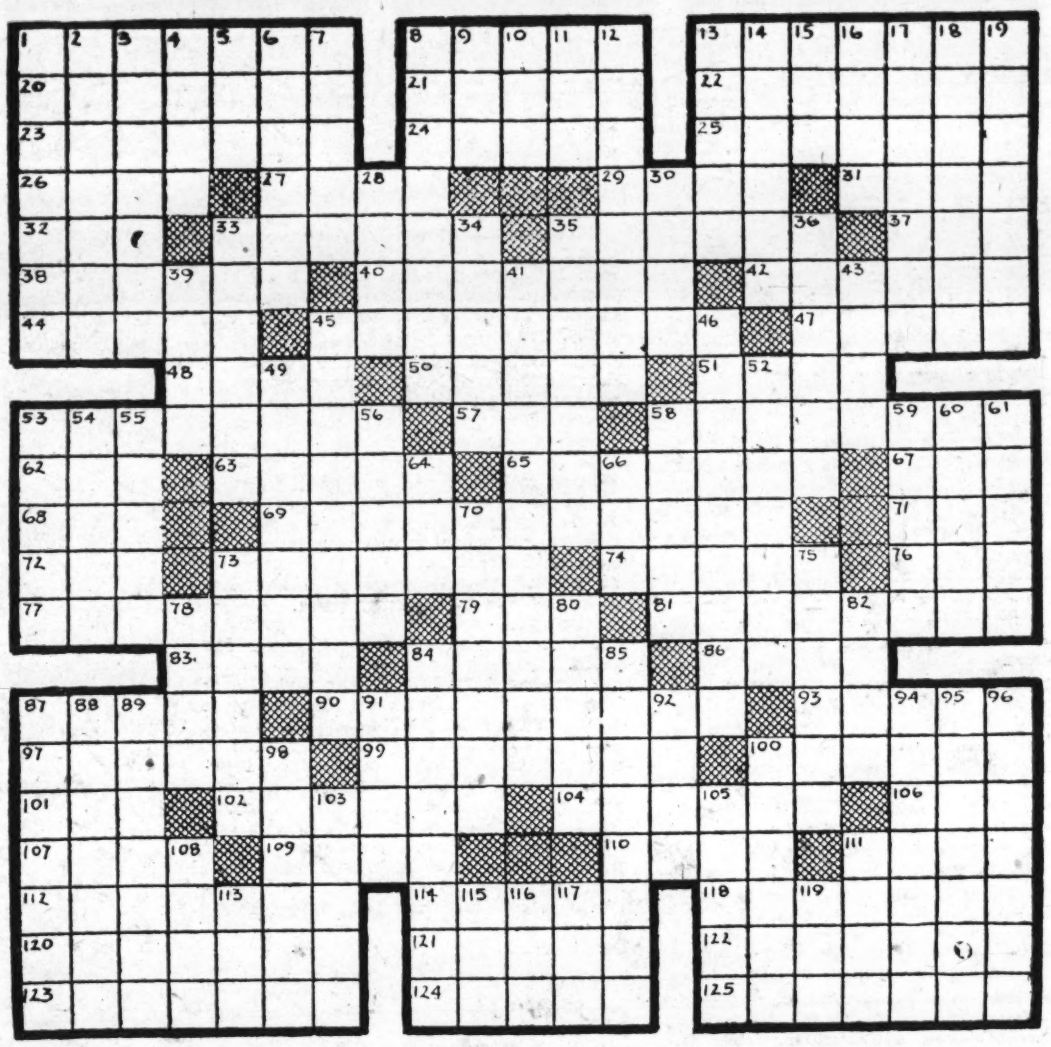

We especially want to send it to those apparently hopeless cases, where all forms of inhalers, douches, opium preparations, fumes, "patent smokes," etc., have failed. We want to show everyone at our expense, that our method will end all difficult breathing, all wheezing, and all those terrible paroxysms in many instances.

This free offer is too important to neglect a single day. Write now and begin the method at once. Send no money. Simply mail coupon below. Do it Today.

Solutions of Last Week's Puzzles

Your Flower and Vegetable Garden

By W. Elbridge Freeborn

MAKING FRIENDS IN A BOOK

SOME of our very finest plants, both in the flower family as well as in the vegetable family have come to us from far off countries and were first introduced to us through the medium of books. There is no greater thrill than that one found in having some plant that has never been heard of in the neighborhood growing in the garden to perfection. Oftentimes plants that will grow well in other sections of the country have never been tried here for no good reason other than our natural preference for those things that we are already familiar with.

Recently we remember an instance of white calla lilies being planted out of doors and growing well—a thing that almost anyone would tell you should never be tried. Yet having been seen growing in that manner in Florida they were planted here in the same manner and not only grew but bloomed the first year. So that gardener had made a new and valuable friend. As long as she gardens she will remember those first white calla lilies that grew so well out of doors.

This instance occurred after a trip to Florida—but it isn't necessary for each one of us to make those trips—as a great many people make them for us, and then write of their experiences that we may profit by them—oftentimes to a greater degree than themselves.

In the illustration may be seen three gentlemen from widely scattered spots—Mr. Rockwell on the left makes his home at Cape May, N. J., while the two Mr. DeGraffs make theirs in Holland.

They met and the picture was taken in the far northwestern corner of our country. All three of them had gone there for the same reason—that of seeing the more than 200 varieties of daffodils that were blooming there at that time.

Mr. F. F. Rockwell is quite well known in almost every garden circle for the fine books that he has published in the last few years. He was one of the first to introduce the new style in writing about gardening—that of writing in a pleasant, interesting manner without too much display of botanical names. Concerning this point there was published in the Boston Transcript ". . . . and interesting enough to read, not as a mere reference book, but from beginning to end . . . ."

Although he has written more than a dozen books on gardening in its various phases, one of the most interesting of them all is a recent one entitled—"Book of Bulbs."

Because of the illustration showing the two Mr. DeGraffs with the author, the dedication of this book is most interesting:

TO MY FRIEND
WILHELM H. DE GRAFF
OF DE GRAFF BROTHERS, HOLLAND WHOSE BULB FIELDS HAVE CONTRIBUTED SO LARGELY TO THE BEAUTY OF AMERICAN GARDENS
I TAKE PLEASURE IN DEDICATING
THIS BOOK.

Further insight into the pleasure that may be gained by the reading of this almost a novel may be found in the author's foreword:

"Through the past decade, the interest in bulb gardening in this country has developed astonishingly. And yet we have had no American book on bulbs for a generation long before there was any commercial bulb production, or any real bulb gardening in this country. All that was written, even long ago, was modeled largely on the existing European works, being mostly in the nature of comprehensive compendiums on bulbs from the botanist's point of view. Splendid as these older works were in their way, none of them meet at all adequately the needs of the present-day amateur bulb gardener; in fact, the "bulb garden," in the modern sense of the term, was a thing unknown in the days when these books were published."

So much for the book—it was so very interesting when we read it again recently that we felt that we must recommend it to you, not only as a good reference book in case of trouble but also as a pleasant way to spend a couple of winter evenings by the fire.

With but half a look at the calendar we know that by the time we turn around once and a half it will be the middle of November. The middle of November means two things to every gardener in Atlanta—the middle of roses and the middle of bulbs. So many things must be done now that it is hard to choose what is the most important. Roses—and a thousand thoughts come to mind; new varieties that were introduced this year and should be found in every garden this coming year; old favorites, like radiance, that must be added to; bone meal to work thoroughly into the soil; peat moss that must be worked in at the same time. The hybrid perpetuals should be pruned somewhat. But roses will have to wait until next week—then they may have more space which they more than deserve.

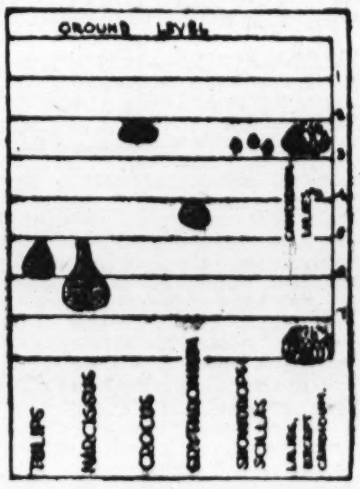

So we are in the middle of bulbs:

Those who know the beautiful poppy anemone—anemone coronaria—with its brilliant reds, blues, rose and pinks, usually with a conspicuous white zone about a dark central boss, make them an annual feature of their garden.

The little dried up tubers that arrive when ordered do not look as if there was any life in them, but they are one of the most certain of all bulbs to grow. The difficulty is to tell which side up to plant them. The side having the depression is one indication, and the stubs of dry roots another. The depression is the top. The dry roots indicate the bottom. In case of doubt plant them on the sides and they will grow. Bury them about two inches deep.

They want rich, well-fertilized soil. The St. Brigid is one of the finest strains. These are semi-double and from the original St. Brigid there have been selected several very fine strains. The large flowered singles are preferred by a great many to the St. Brigid strain and the Caen or French strain is very fine in this line.

Plant them six inches apart late in the fall so that they will not start into growth too early. They have foliage much resembling plain-leaved parsley, and from this foliage rise stems of from six inches to a foot, bearing the large flowers, which in coloring rival the tulips. A number of stems are sent from each tuber.

While bulbs are the nearest to foolproof plant material there is, and unless buried so deep they can never reach the surface, a crop of bloom is sure to result, proper planting means a great deal in the quality and quantity of bloom. A few general principles should be observed.

First of all, bulbs need good drainage. This is a prime factor and if the soil is heavy and not well drained, raise the beds six inches above the surrounding soil level to give the necessary drainage.

Plant the bulbs deep enough. With very few exceptions it is better to err on the side of depth than of shallowness. The two notable exceptions are crown imperials and candidum lilies. These two bulbs, although of large size, suggesting that they should be down at least six inches as needed for other bulbs of their size should not be covered with more than two inches of soil.

Tulips will burrow to 18 inches or more and come up regularly and bloom if left to themselves, but from five to six inches from the top of the bulb is their proper planting depth.

Narcissi need the same depth from the top of the bulb, but owing to the different shape and sometimes the much larger size, the base of the bulbs is usually an inch deeper than the tulip. Snowdrops and scillas should go down about two and one-half to three inches. Crocuses should have two inches of soil above them. The erythroniums need about four inches of cover. So do the checkered lilies, fritillaria meleagris. The anemones for cold frame planting need only an inch of soil to cover them.

The lilies need the deepest planting and they can go as deep as a foot down for candidums, with good results. The distance apart is rather elastic, but in general five inches is the closest any of them should be planted.

They should not have any barnyard manure as fertilizer. Bone meal is the only safe fertilizer to dig in the soil, with potash salts or wood ashes an excellent dressing upon the surface.

The trumpet narcissi—the branch of this family known as daffodils, while the smaller cupped forms are known as narcissi—give the finest early spring display of soft yellows and at the same time furnish the first out-door cutting material of the year, often coming in March in favorable seasons.

Mr. F. F. Rockwell and Messrs. Wilhelm and Jan DeGraff, for New Jersey and Holland, respectively, met in a field of more than 200 varieties of daffodils.

WHAT TO DO IN NOVEMBER

IN THE HOUSE—Preparations should be constantly made for bulbs and other flowering plants for use in the house. Jardinieres should be resurrected and cleaned ready for pots of lily of the valley, paper white narcissus, hyacinths and other flowers.

SHRUBBERY—This is the proper season of the year for mulching roses and shrubbery as well as perennial borders and beds, and this may be best done with the use of peat moss and leaves. Too many leaves will sometimes cause rot by holding too much moisture, but if the leaves are mixed with peat moss and straw there will not be as much danger of rot.

TREES—This is the proper season for protecting and repairing all kinds of trees. For the lesser injuries, this may be done very simply, but in the case of large cavities, an expert had best be called.

PEACH TREES—Use paracide to combat the peach tree borer.

WHAT TO PLANT IN NOVEMBER

PLANTS—Set out roses, strawberry plants, all kinds of shrubbery, irises, both Japanese and Spanish-Dutch and peony crowns.

BULBS—November is the best month for planting bulbs. Plant snowdrops and crocuses for early spring flowering. Plant tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, ranunculus, anemones and grape hyacinths out of doors. Plant paper white narcissi, Soliel d'or and Chinese sacred lilies in water. Use freesias, double and single early tulips, Roman hyacinths and Dutch hyacinths in pots.

SHRUBBERY—November is the finest month in the year for planting flowering shrubs and broad leaved evergreens.

ROSES—Now is the best time of the year for planting roses. Prune your old bushes and mulch them thoroughly. Put on plenty of mulch if your roses are budded. Most of them are.

LILIES—Plant regal lilies, golden-rayed lilies, tiger lilies, speciosum magnificum and lily of the valley.

VEGETABLES—Sow lettuce, cabbage and onion seeds in the cold frame. Plant your asparagus bed now.

FRUITS AND BERRIES—Now is the best time to plant all kinds of fruit trees, berries, grapes and nut trees.

JOHN VANDERLYN'S ADVENTURES

line. My view is that he was successful both on the ground floor, where the menservants sleep, and on the first floor. But he must have been disturbed when on his way up to the third floor. That is where the marchesa's apartments are situated. One of the servants may have accompanied him up there. Unluckily, according to a bad custom hereabouts, the laundryman takes the clean linen into all the bedrooms himself, so that now and again some good natured fool may give him a big tip."

"He had no occasion to go into my room," said Vanderlyn quickly, "for I haven't been long enough to send anything to be laundered; that's one reason why I'm sure I lost it at Monte Carlo."

Colonel Bruce looked puzzled. "He may have just chanced it—in your case! The peasantry in these parts are practically Italian, as you know. They're extraordinarily quick witted, and fantastically eager to make money. A passport such as yours would be of the greatest value to, say, an international crook who speaks English perfectly."

"I feel sure I shall find mine in the casino," said Vanderlyn firmly.

Colonel Bruce was too civil, as he would have put it to himself, to express his disbelief. But the two men, as always, parted on cordial terms.

* * * *

As he drew up in front of the casino at Monte Carlo, Vanderlyn felt as if years, instead of only hours, had passed since he and the marchesa's house party had arrived there just about this time yesterday.

During his long motor drive, which, as he was at the wheel, meant constant watchfulness and care, his subsconscious self was absorbed in trying to recapture the elusive personality of Dina Hitrowo. It was of her, not of the errand on which he was bound, that his mind was full. It was as if some strange madness was working in his blood.

The great square in front of the casino was almost empty. The denizens of Monte Carlo were all in the rooms gambling, or engaged on worthier occupations in the white dwellings, high and low, which stretched upwards beyond the palm studded green oasis which is known to Monegasques as "le fromage," "the cheese," because of its peculiar shape.

A man in a chauffeur's uniform sprang forward, and in excellent English he exclaimed, "May I take monsieur's car to my garage?" and he held out a card. One of the uniformed attendants came forward. "This gentleman," he said in French, "is on the list of approved garages. Monsieur can have every confidence in allowing his beautiful car to be taken there."

The man gave Vanderlyn what looked like a huge gold medal, on which was the number 43 and an address. "This means," he said proudly, "that I have forty-three motors already in my garage. There is not one that I will treat with greater care than monsieur's. When monsieur has finished—he can stay till 2 in the morning if he likes—he has only to send me this medal and his car will be round in a few moments wherever monsieur has had dinner, or enjoyed a little dancing."

Vanderlyn walked up the steps of the casino into the Atrium; and then he turned into the comparatively small office where, since the war, every would-be player must undergo a certain scrutiny, show his passport, and pay a small fee for his entrance card.

The man behind the broad counter knew the American at once as having come with the Marchesa Trescobaldi's party the day before.

"Surely monsieur has already got a card which will admit him for a month both to the rooms and to the private club?"

Vanderlyn told him of the lost passport. But alas! there was no trace of it. "I have to admit," said the official regretfully, "that if a foreign gentleman leaves his passport in his coat pocket he runs a very good chance of getting it stolen. You see an American passport visaed for Italy is worth about $300 to the thief. Can you wonder that they are often stolen?"

Vanderlyn went back into the hall, feeling annoyed that he had lost his afternoon for nothing. What a fool he had been not to seek out Achille in order to find out the way to the villa where dwelt the enigmatical girl who had made so deep an impression on his mind! For a moment he toyed with the thought of trying to find the place. But he realized that to do so would, in very truth, be like looking for a needle in a bundle of hay. The whole of the sea coast, for miles and miles on either side of Cannes, is bordered by villas of the kind of which Dina Hitrowo had given him so brief and vague a description.

With a queer half-whimsical feeling that he would like to try his luck at the tables, if only to prove the truth of the old adage, "Unlucky at cards, lucky in love," for already he found himself, rather shamefacedly, thinking of Dina as a man thinks of the woman he knows he is going to love—he turned into what is known to the habitues of the casino as "the kitchen." It is there that humble players have a chance of winning, or losing, small sums of money. And, naturally, it is always crowded. Indeed from the moment the casino is open there is a rush for the roulette tables there.

He was passing through "the kitchen" when the crowd surrounding one of the tables moved apart, and something seemed to make him stop and gaze at the back of the head of a girl who was sitting at one of the roulette tables. He could see—he was half ashamed of himself for noticing it—that she had a lovely, creamy white neck. Was it—surely it could not be—Dina Hitrowo?

The crowd closed up again, and he walked quickly round till he reached the other side of the roulette table, and then he saw what, deep in his heart, he already knew to be the truth.

The Russian girl he had borne in his arms last night, and whose frankness had at once attracted and repelled him this morning, looked extraordinarily different to what she had done yesterday and when they had parted today. In place of the pathetically shabby little red and white cotton frock, and close white straw hat she had then worn, she was wearing an elegant looking, scrupulously neat, buff coat and skirt, and a felt hat that matched her costume.

But what interested the hidden watcher to a painful degree was that with her ringless hands she was staking quietly and systematically plaques which were each worth 20 francs on that portion of the green baize cloth marked rouge. Looking neither to the right nor to the left, she appeared as if she belonged to another sphere from any of the women players round her. For one thing she was, what none of them were, scrupulously and fastidiously clean.

After a while he noticed that a swarthy, stern looking man of about 40 stood close just behind her chair. Something seemed to tell Vanderlyn that Dina knew this man, and a moment later he was proved right, for the person in question leaned over and said something to her.

All at once she looked straight across the roulette table, and Vanderlyn saw that sitting exactly opposite to her was a singular looking elderly woman. She was—she must be—the Countess Gregorovitch!

Walking a little to the right he began watching them both, with a growing feeling of unease, it might almost be said unhappiness, filling his burdened heart.

This then was the meaning of their poverty? The old woman was a gambler—a fierce, unreasoning, instinctive gambler—as are so many Russian women. And it was she who must have taught Dina Hitrowo her vice. There was an intently eager, as well as a completely concentrated, look on Dina's countenance. Indeed she was so absorbed in the system she was playing, which, as the American soon realized, required two to play it, that she never lifted her eyes above the roulette table before her. The man behind her was probably a mere casino acquaintance.

As for the system played by aunt and niece, it was almost childishly simple, and was evidently proving very successful.

That system was played as follows: Each of the two partners staked simultaneously, the one on red and the other on black, one plaque of exactly the same value in each case. One of the two, of course, lost, and the loser doubled her stake, while the winner took her winning plaque off the table, leaving the other plaque on. The system was played as a kind of martingale which, if it prolonged the agony, diminished the loss caused by a fatal run on either color. But when the colors came up alternately, or fairly alternately, a large sum of money was won by the partners before there came the serie of eight, nine, ten, dreaded or welcomed, as the case may be, by all players of roulette.

Vanderlyn lost count of time as he stood there gazing at the two women. He wondered that no one followed their game, for today it was as if they could not lose. Always, always, always, they won!

He watched intently the almost mechanical movements of Dina Hitrowo's lovely hands. Once there was a run of six on red, and her face flushed and paled by turns, as she followed the little ball spinning round and round till it slowed down and hovered, as if in human perplexity, over a group of black and red numbers. Indeed so instinctive was his sympathy with her that he found himself sharing her almost gasping relief when the seventh spin resulted in the ball, after a long quivering hover over a red number, finding its final haven in a black cavity.

But it was not with him, the as yet invisible watcher, that Dina shared her almost agonizing sense of relief. It was with the swarthy, stern looking man, who still stood behind her chair as if—or so Vanderlyn now suspected—wishful to guard her from touch of alien hands. When the croupier at last shouted out black, she turned and smiled up into the dark face, as if mutely asking him to share her joy that at last all had come right. But there came no answering gleam of pleasure or relief on the man's stern countenance.

Vanderlyn told himself in vain how natural it was that the girl should be on terms of kindly comradeship with all and any members of the curious little world of regular gamblers in "the kitchen" section of the casino. Her evident familiarity with this curiously powerful looking, high vitalized individual filled him with jealous unease.

All at once she rose from her chair with a quick movement, leaving her piles of playing tokens on the green baize coth. Quickly the man behind her slipped into her chair, and at once began playing in conjunction with the countess. So he was a member of a syndicate formed to exploit this system? Vanderlyn breathed a sigh of unconscious relief.

Hastening along on the outskirts of the crowd standing round the table, the American at last found himself face to face with Dina Hitrowo. But on seeing him, a look of embarrassment and of discomfort filled her lovely eyes, and he felt sharply chagrined.

"Have you been here long, Mr. Vanderlyn?"

She glanced nervously behind her as she asked the question. It was plain she did not wish her aunt to see her talking to him.

"I've been watching you for some time, mademoiselle. You've had great luck today, haven't you? I was dreadfully afraid you were going to lose all your winnings just now."

"So was I——"

"Now that one of your friends has taken your place, won't you come out on the terrace? The rooms are getting so full."

She hesitated perceptibly. "If I go away, I must tell the countess where I shall be," she murmured, as if to herself. Then to Vanderlyn she said smiling, "You see there is a small syndicate engaged in playing our system, Mr. Vanderlyn; and if my aunt becomes weary, I must take her place, unless the fourth member of our syndicate has arrived. He ought to have been here a long time ago."

A gambling syndicate? Why hadn't he thought of that when that dark man had leaned over her in such a familiar manner? He felt absurdly happier all at once. What a fool he had been just now! The stranger who had aroused such a sensation of dislike, aye, and a kind of jealous fear, in his heart, was simply that most sexless of comrades, a fellow gambler.

Together they walked round to where the countess was sitting. Dina cleverly threaded her way through the throng of men and women, some of whom were obviously hoping that some player, having to purchase fresh supplies of tokens, would vacate his seat.

She whispered something in her aunt's ear, and the older woman turned and looked thoughtfully, measuringly, at the American. Apparently she approved of her niece's new acquaintance for, "She says that it's all right, and that I may go out of doors, for that the man who will take her place when she is tired is coming in five minutes," said the girl.

"I wonder how your aunt knew that?" Vanderlyn spoke his thought aloud.

Dina smiled. "We have a code of signals. The man who took my place held up his finger just now, it seems. That means that it is all right, and that the other player will be here soon."

The two walked in silence across the empty spaces between the roulette tables, and so out of the great building, on to the terrace which commands the most splendid and picturesque view on that southern coast.

There were very few people there, and in the now waning sunlight the Russian girl looked wan and tired.

Vanderlyn touched her elbow—and, a second later, would have given his soul to have touched her again.

"Let us sit down," he said. "The sun is going down, and soon it will be too cold."

She sank down on a bench with evident weariness, and for a few moments neither of them spoke. And then all at once that for which he had felt a few minutes before he would have given his soul, happened. She put out her hand, and laid it on his.

"You're very kind," she said gently, "wonderfully kind, Mr. Vanderlyn. When I am with you I feel I can be myself."

She said those words with an air of almost desperate sincerity. He clasped her hand, and held it for a moment tightly in his. Then he let it go. John Vanderlyn was not the kind of man who takes advantage of a woman's momentary feeling of gratitude.

"All I want you to be, when you're with me," he said in a low voice, "is just to be—yourself."

"I'm being so now," she whispered back: and then she became silent.

"I suppose you come here, to Monte Carlo, very often," he said.

She started, as if roused out of a deep abstraction. "Yes, I suppose I may say that I do come often here. Though now and again the countess comes by herself or with a friend. Unfortunately for me, this system which is proving so successful requires two to play it, and it is more easy for a woman to get a chair, and to keep a chair, in 'the kitchen,' than it is for a man. However, if we go on winning, we shall play for higher stakes. But I confess the thought of that makes me feel nervous. Yesterday there was a series of fifteen on red! That, for us, would have meant ruin."

She said the words very quietly, but in a tone that made it clear that she meant what she said.

"Have you been playing a good deal this last week?"

He hardly knew why he asked the question.

She shook her head. "No, we have not been here for nearly a month."

She saw the surprise in his face, and added, "It is all a question of money! The countess cannot play without money, and she has not always got the money to play with. She is angry now that she did not begin today at a table where the stakes are high. If we had done so, the profit might have been very large. You see she believes in luck!"

"Are you staying on for dinner at Monte Carlo?"

"I think so."

"In that case will you and your aunt dine with me?" He saw her hesitation, and added, "Of course I shall be delighted to entertain also the other members of your syndicate."

Vanderlyn felt an intense desire to know the two men who must surely be constantly thrown with the girl now sitting by his side—if that is they always played the system together.

"There will be no necessity for that," she exclaimed, "they always look after themselves."

"And then will you be playing on after dinner?"

"We generally come into the Casino again for about an hour. If we have lost, we go on and try to make up the loss. If we have won, the countess hopes her luck will last."

"And then I suppose you take the train and a taxi from Cannes?"

"No, we always take the tram," she said in a low voice. "It passes very near the villa."

"Of course I shall motor you both back tonight."

"Can you really do so?"

"Of course I can!"

She got up. "I would rather you stayed out here on the terrace, Mr. Vanderlyn, while I fetch the countess. There is no necessity for you to go into the Casino again."

He could see by the way she spoke that she meant what she said. And she hastened off, not by the way they had come, but through the passage that now links the

HER LEG HEALED AFTER 16 YEARS

Mrs. J. Hinze, R. 2, Sealy, Texas, who was entirely healed of leg sores after suffering 16 years, urges all sufferers to write Dr. H. J. terrace to the square in front of the Casino of Monte Carlo.

Vanderlyn watched her slight, swaying figure; the wind caught her skirt and made her appear like a skiff skimming on the surface of the sea. He remembered what she had implied—that she was hardly ever herself. Would she ever be so far herself as ever to tell him something of her past life? Was it true, as they supposed at Belle Colline, that she had gone through such awful experiences during the Russian revolution that she wished to pass a sponge over all that part of her short life? He wondered. And he wondered the more when she at last came back with the woman whom he told himself he now really saw as she was for the first time.

The Countess Gregorovitch had an ugly, clever, secretive face. It was clear that today she was in a very good humor. Indeed she had cause to be, for, "You must have brought me good luck," she observed graciously. "I saw you watching my play, and me. I have done very well today. Most excellently well! Not one single serious run on black or red. Always an intermittence. Two reds, two blacks, one black, one red, one red, one black; four reds, three blacks, and so on. All is well for us up to a run of eight. When it comes to six or seven—O la! la! we become nervous."

"But surely there are not often runs of eight on one color?" he observed.

"Not often?" She turned to her niece "Why there were four of ten in one hour the other day! But I thank God that we were not at the moment playing. We were simply looking on. Tomorrow I shall begin operations on a greater scale."

Vanderlyn noticed that she never said "we," but always "I"—"I have won"—"I have lost." She was evidently the head of the syndicate, perhaps the one who provided the money.

"My niece tells me that you are kind enough to offer us dinner, and to motor us home afterwards. We are not going back to the Casino tonight. It does not do to tempt Providence."

* * * *

John, Dina, and the countess walked through the passage out on to the now lighted up square. And as they walked up through the great garden studded with high palm trees, Vanderlyn now and then caught a strange look in the eyes of a foreign passerby. He grew hot and cold with indignation. It was all too clear what some of those men, aye, and women, too, thought of the trio. No one, looking at his two companions, could have told who they were or what they were, excepting that the girl was very attractive looking. As for him he looked what he was—a prosperous, care-free stranger, no doubt visiting Monte Carlo for the first time in his life, and so eager for adventure.

John Vanderlyn would have been surprised, even indignant, had any candid friend told him that this was exactly what he was.

Yet Vanderlyn would have admitted, at any rate to himself, that this fortuitous meeting was something of a real adventure. All thought of his lost passport was completely forgotten. And, had he thought of it, he would have blessed the chance which had brought him over to Monte Carlo today.

He felt consumed with a burning curiosity not only with regard to Dina Hitrowo, but with regard to her aunt, Countess Gregorovitch, also. And as the three walked in the darkening twilight round "The Cheese," he again looked at her and tried to take his measure of her.

She was a tall, dark, elderly woman with high cheekbones, and possessed of what it is the fashion to call an aristocratic profile. She wore a dress which he realized was made in a very old-fashioned way, for it was of black silk, had a curved-in bodice, and the wide flapping skirt only just cleared the ground.

As they hastened along the sanded path the countess addressed no word to the American who was about to entertain her. Now and again she murmured something in Russian to her niece, and when the three reached the top of the curiously shaped public garden there began between the younger and the older woman an eager, sharp discussion of which Vanderlyn, to his discomfort, understood every word, for in his boyhood, while in Germany, he had learned Russian.

Dina Hitrowo was trying to persuade her aunt to go to some different restaurant to that to which she wished to go. "Why take him there? What is the object of doing such a thing?" she asked. And then the countess said sharply, "There are several quite good reasons why we should go to that place this evening. One reason is what is in my bag. Another, and a better one, is why should we not have a good dinner for once and do our friends a good turn as well?"

That was the sense of what each said to the other over and over again. And, as always seems the way with Russians, they argued the matter at great length.

The girl gave way suddenly. She turned to Vanderlyn. "We are going to a small restaurant which is run by some of our compatriots. I hope you will not find it very expensive."

"I'm sure I shan't," he said heartily.

He thought by the look of relief that came over her face that this was what had been troubling her.

"Monte Carlo," she went on, "is an expensive place. I would have preferred our going down to the Condamine, where there are quite nice little restaurants, but my aunt is well acquainted with the Russians who are running the place we are going to."

At the top of The Cheese they turned down a wide boulevard to their right. It was curiously solitary at this time of the evening, though now and again they passed an automobile standing in front of a business house or villa.

All at once the Countess Gregorovitch addressed Vanderlyn for the first time. "How well I can remember," she exclaimed in French, "when there were only a few beautiful villas set in large gardens in this part of Monte Carlo! The town has been sadly spoiled."

Dina chimed in. "We are going into part of one of those old villas now, Mr. Vanderlyn. It has been turned into what I believe is called an apartment house in America. Our friends possess what was once the first floor, that containing the reception rooms."

They walked on for a few yards, and then the girl said quietly, "Here we are," and led the way into a kind of alley running between two high walls. Then she stopped before a low door above which was painted the double Russian eagle.

Dina Hitrowo knocked on the low door. Three single knocks. And after some delay the door opened. There came the Russian equivalent of "Who goes there?" The countess mentioned her name, and Vanderlyn, feeling amused and rather excited, followed his two companions into a paneled waiting room where there were a few unoccupied chairs and, on a First Empire console, a bowl of roses.

It had evidently formed the last apartment of a fine suite of reception rooms with splendid views of the long coastline.

A double door was suddenly opened by the man, dressed in a kind of black and yellow uniform, who had admitted them. And then, to the American's astonishment, he saw that what must have been another, and rather larger drawing room, had been fitted up as a kitchen.

Two chefs were moving quickly round a large cooking stove, and Vanderlyn, who had felt that morning too angered and disappointed by Dina's disappearance to eat much of the delicious lunch provided by the marchesa at Belle Colline, welcomed the aroma which drifted toward him from the various copper saucepans simmering on the stove.

"As you see, everything here has to be what the English call 'a makeshift.'" said the girl in a low voice, "and we have to traverse this kitchen to get to the restaurant."

Traverse? She seldom used a French idiom, and Vanderlyn sensed that she was feeling extremely nervous.

Dina motioned to her escort to open the double doors which were opposite those they had just come through. He did so, and then he stepped back to allow his companions to precede him into a large lofty room, obviously the restaurant.

This fine apartment had a concave painted ceiling which the newcomer noted had been copied from one in the palace of Versailles. From the center of the ceiling hung a fine cut glass chandelier, the only reminder there that this had doubtless been the ballroom of a luxurious villa.

On the parquet floor, which was none too clean, stood a number of small tables, laid for two; and in each of the embrasures of the five wide, unshuttered windows, stood a table laid for four.

Though it was now the hour when Monte Carlo dines, there were only four people, and all men, in the restaurant. Each of the diners rose in his seat as the two ladies appeared, and the countess made her way deliberately to the best table, one of those laid for four, which filled up the center window. But before she sat down she said in Russian to her niece: "You had better go and see Catherine now. Then the business will have been transacted."

The girl obediently turned round, to be recalled in sharp, raucous tones: "Dina! Are you asleep or awake? You have forgotten the bag!"

Dina took up her bag, and, walking quickly across the room, disappeared through a small narrow door cut in the grisaille paneled wall.

"My niece will only be absent for a few minutes," said the countess in Fench. "She has gone upstairs to see a friend of ours who is not well," and she sat down.

As Vanderlyn followed her example, he gave a quick glance round the room. It was plain that the four other men there were all Russians of the noble emigre class.

The door through which Dina had just gone opened—and through it there came a tall, thin, good looking man, who took up, with a negligent gesture, a menu from a sideboard on which there stood two round basins of fruit. Then he walked straight to the table where Vanderlyn and the Countess Gregorovitch had just seated themselves.

The latter exclaimed, "Now we shall be able to order our dinner and choose the wine."

As the tall thin man, who, it appeared, was the one waiter in this curious restaurant came up close to the table, Vanderlyn, with a thrill of incredulous surprise, knew him for a military attache who had formed part of the Russian embassy in London at the time when he, Vanderlyn, had been a boy.

The countess said, smiling, and in Russian: "Hail, Dimitri Alexievitch! We shall require three dinners tonight. Dina Hitrowo and I are the guests of this American gentleman. He is staying at the Chateau Belle Colline with the Marchesa Trescobaldi."

The man gave a quick glance at Vanderlyn and then he asked: "Did everything go as you desired yesterday evening?"

She nodded her head.

"Where is the little Dina——?"

"She has gone upstairs to see Catherine. I wonder you did not meet her."

"And did she also do well?"

"As well as I thought she would do," said the countess, dryly. "Her heart is not in anything she does for any one but herself."

The ex-military attache went off towards the door giving into the kitchen and the countess turned to Vanderlyn.

"That waiter is, as you probably realized just now, a friend of mine. At one time he commanded the czarina's own regiment of guards."

Then she beckoned imperiously to a white haired man who was wearing the rosette of the Legion of Honor in the buttonhole of his very shabby coat. He got up, walked across the wide room, and bowed low before her.

"This is an American friend who has brought me luck at the tables!" she said graciously.

The old gentleman turned to Vanderlyn and in good English he exclaimed: "You are very welcome, sir, as the friend of a friend. Are you making a long stay at Monaco?"

Before Vanderlyn could answer the countess broke across: "My friend is a guest of the Marchesa Trescobaldi at Belle Colline. We had a rather serious accident near to the chateau last evening. Dina Hitrowo was driving our auto and it turned over! We were flung out on to the road and things looked bad, for it was near midnight. But suddenly the marchesa herself appeared, in the guise of an angel of mercy! She took my little Dina into the chateau for the night, and all ended happily."

"I am glad of that," said the old man gravely.

"I hope the dinner is really good this evening," she went on.

"It is always good here," said the old gentleman solemnly. "Good, but expensive?—Yes!" and then he walked back to his little table.

"There is no menu from which to make a choice, Mr. Vanderlyn. There is the same dinner for each client; but I think it will please you, for the two chefs were those of the Grand Duke Nicholas. It was said—a joke, no doubt—that as they remained faithful to their imperial master, should they ever return to Russia, the cheka—I beg their pardon—the ogpu, will have them roasted to death."

She laughed aloud at the amusing picture her words had evoked in her mind, and Vanderlyn, glancing across at her, told himself that she had a horribly cruel face.

Dina had come back noiselessly, and, as she took the third seat at the table, she put the bag at her feet.

The first item on the menu was Bortch soup, and the ex-colonel of the most famous of the Russian guards regiments served it from a dumb waiter he had unobtrusively rolled up close to the table.

Suddenly the countess exclaimed: "We have forgotten the wine!" and she looked expectantly at Vanderlyn.

"I think," he suggested diffidently, "that we might have some champagne; that is"—he looked from one lady to the other—"if you like champagne."

The countess gazed at her host with quickened interest. So curious was her intent, almost avid, gaze that the color mounted slowly to Vanderlyn's forehead. With a touch of real regret he told himself that it was from this unpleasant woman Dina must inherit her curious, to him repugnant, interest in money.

The Russian noble who had once been a popular figure in the London pre-war world of fashion, brought a bottle of dry Heidsieck, and after it had been in the ice pail just long enough he opened it skillfully and poured it quickly into the rather rough wine glasses which, like the table china, were of poor, common quality.

The rest of the dinner—a fresh Rhone salmon and some admirably roasted partridges, followed by an omelette en surprise—was as perfect as the Bortch soup had been. All three enjoyed their coffee with cream, a rather unusual luxury in France, and the countess and Vanderlyn each had a liqueur brandy which was of the same fine quality as had been the champagne.

"And now," said the Russian lady, with a touch of malice in her cold, inscrutable eyes, "has arrived Rabelais' 'quarter of an hour,' Monsieur. I think my niece warned you that this is not an inexpensive restaurant."

And, though he was a generous man and careless about money, Vanderlyn felt surprised when the bill was put before him. No items were marked; simply the words, 'Trois diners,' and the curiously exact sum of two thousand francs.

He took out his pocketbook. Then he hesitated and looked at Dina inquiringly, "Does the ten per cent rule as regards the waiter exist here, Madamoiselle?"

He saw that she was troubled by his question.

"I do not think," she answered, at last, under her breath, "that you need give the waiter here anything. But if you do do so you must also remember the chefs."

He put down two notes of a thousand francs each and two of five hundred francs each. To him there was something unutterably painful in the thought of a distinguished soldier who had once lived so delightful, so careless, so amusing a life, acting as waiter in this—he could not help suspecting—rather strange establishment. The restaurant was probably but a cloak for some nefarious commerce; still he would have been surprised had some one told him how soon his suspicions were to be proved right.

Once more he noticed how the countess fixed her eyes on him with that measuring and peculiarly avid look which had so repelled him just before. No doubt she was surprised at the largesse of his gifts to the waiter and to the chefs.

As the three went through the kitchen the two white clad men saluted the American in military fashion and smiled broadly. They, at any rate, had been delighted with their "tips."

In the ante-chamber the ex-attache joined them: "Surely you are going to play tonight, countess?"

The lady addressed hesitated. But Dina said sharply, "No, no, Dimitri Alexievitch——"

"But I say 'Yes! Yes'" he replied, teasingly.

"Ask the American if he would like a turn at roulette," whispered the countess to Dina.

"Would you like a little gamble, Mr. Vanderlyn?" and Dina Hitrowo looked frowningly at the American.

"I'm ready for any further adventure——'

The Russian turned the handle of a door which seemed to form part, like the one in the restaurant, of the paneled wall, and all four passed through into a passage leading to a hall which evidently formed the center of the front of the large villa. To the right, in what had probably been the dining room of the large house, two roulette tabics were in full swing. No windows were visible, for the walls of the whole room were hung with heavy yellow velvet curtains.

Vanderlyn felt an authentic thrill, for he knew that this must be one of those illegal gambling hells against which the government of Monaco fights continuously, with the aid, as Colonel Bruce had told him the other night, of exceedingly heavy penalties.

Dina Hitrowo muttered in his ear: "We will play for ten minutes, Mr. Vanderlyn. Not more. I feel sure this place will be raided one day soon!"

"Why stay more than five minutes?" he whispered back, for the girl looked terror stricken, and he himself did not like the appearance of some of the men and women who were sitting round the tables.

The Woman With the Parrot

SECKATARY HAWKINS

The woman with the parrot came down the stairs slowly, the bird resting on her left wrist. She paused to smile down at us, where we waited, before the cheery log fire in the hotel lobby.

"I'm sorry to have kept you waiting so long, Mr. Jeckerson," she said.

"You have been very prompt, Mrs. Callas," said Jeckerson, as we all rose to our feet. The innkeeper hurried forward to lend her his arm. Mr. Crail, dressed in his great red robe with the golden dragons, fell back to a seat in the shadow of the fireplace, while Shadow Loomis and I, the only two boys in our club who had been given the privilege of taking part in this great night of adventure on Lake Tapaho, stood on either side of our good friend, Jeckerson.

"Take this chair, please," continued Jeckerson, as Mr. Parr led the woman with the parrot to the hearth. He shoved a great armchair forward so that the light from the fire fell directly upon the one who would sit in it.

"Thank you," said Mrs. Callas, and the parrot gave a sharp squawk and raised its wings to balance itself as his owner sat down. "It was so good of you to return my parrot—"

"We found the bird walking the upper corridor," explained Jeckerson, "and shouting out some words about 'Odd's Blood' and a dagger—"

"Oh his same old foolishness!" broke in Mrs. Callas, with a little giggle. "It's his only stock in trade—that foolish gibberish—you see, Aristophanes—"

"That's the bird's name, I suppose, broke in Jeckerson, lightly.

"Yes," said the woman, nodding, as she smoothed the rumpled feathers of the bird. "You see, I bought him from a man in San Francisco—I bought Aristophanes from a salior, and he in turn had bought him from a captain of a ship that had come from South America. He claims the bird is very old. But all that he is able to say is that silly talk about a dagger and blood—I imagine Aristophanes must have had quite a wonderful lot of adventure—"

"Even before he came to Lake Tapaho?" cut in Jeckerson, with a nod and smile.

"Yes, Mr. Jeckerson, I am sure if that bird could talk, he could tell us a lot that would astonish us—you see, Aristophanes is so smart, and he is so kind and sympathetic—"

"I shouldn't say he was kind," said Jeckerson, grimly. "One of my men, who has just gone outside with my lieutenant to watch the front of the house, has a very bad double-gash in his finger from the beak of the bird when he captured him in the hall upstairs about a half-hour ago!"

"Ah!" exclaimed the woman with the parrot. "I'm sorry. It is only when he thinks he is being attacked that Aristophanes really goes to such lengths to defnd himself—"

"We are not here to talk about your bird, Mrs. Callas," said Jeckerson, softly. "Nor do we wish to keep you up longer than your wonted hour, but we should like to ask you one question. You perhaps know why I am here at Lake Tapaho."

"There have been whispers, Mr. Jeckerson," she answered, with a smile. "Some say that you are a detective, trying to find out who is playing the ghost that is haunting this lake."

"That is true, Mrs. Callas. And I have had several messages from this so-called ghost, warning me to give up the job. The last two messages warned me that I had only a few hours to live—"

"My dear sir!" exclaimed the woman, sitting up so straight that the parrot squawked and flapped its wings. "I'm shocked! Do not tell me it's as bad as that—"

"Furthermore, Mrs. Callas, each warning has been sent me on a peculiar kind of note paper. We have enlisted the aid of Mr. Parr in this hotel, and have found that this peculiar kind of paper is in possession of only one of its guests."

"Indeed, this gets more and more thrilling, sir!" exclaimed the woman with the parrot.

"You are correct, madam. And I expect it to reach the heights of thrills that we do not even yet dream of. But I shall work it out along my own lines regardless of the thrills that are in it for others who are watching. I do not want to alarm you unduly, Mrs. Callas, but—let me show you the latest message we have received from the enemy."

Jeckerson slowly opened the fist he had held out as he spoke, and now in the palm of his upturned hand lay the crumpled bit of blue note paper that the parrot had been carrying in its beak when we stopped its noisy stroll in the upstairs corridor a half-hour before.

"My dear sir!" she shrieked, and leaped up so suddenly that the parrot uttered a series of indignant squawks and flapped its wings to a safer place, alighting on the arm of my chair, and, looking up at me as if to see how dangerous I appeared, uttered excitedly: "Odd's blood! See to it!"

"You recognize that blue note paper, Mrs. Callas?" asked Jeckerson, still holding the paper in front of the parrot woman.

"Yes, yes—it is my own, my specially ordered paper, sir. If you will hold it to the light—please hold it between your eyes and the fire, sir!"

Jeckerson smoothed out the wrinkled paper and held it up in front of the blaze. The light shining through it showed a watermark of the initials "J. M. C." in the paper.

"Those are my initials, Mr. Jeckerson," said Mrs. Callas. "A friend of mine in the paper business made this special lot of paper for me—there is no other paper like it in the world, that I know of."

"I am glad you are so plain spoken, Mrs. Callas," he said, softly. "I did not like to think that you had anything to do with the sending of these messages, or even of knowing who did send them. Your out-spoken manner has taken from my mind all suspicion. I do not believe you know about the sending of these messages, or that you have anything to do with the ghost of Lake Tapaho."

"Oh, my dear sir!" exclaimed Mrs. Callas. "How could you?"

"But how do you account for these messages being written on your paper, Mrs. Callas?"

"I don't account for it, sir. Why, I am astonished, sir. No—no, wait a bit! Now, it comes to me. Perhaps it was that—yes, yes, I'm sure of it now! It WAS that! It just couldn't be anything else, my dear sir!"

"What are you talking about, madam?"

"That night—you will remember—when I screamed, and woke everybody in this hotel? It was a dream, I thought. Mr. Parr had come running—but I told him it was a dream, and I had screamed in my sleep. Now, I know it wasn't my scream that had wakened me. It was that thing in the room—"

"You mean that something had entered your room while you were sleeping—?"

"It must have been that, Mr. Jeckerson. It was—well, Mr. Parr will remember it."

"Yes, I do," spoke up the innkeeper, and he turned toward me. "Seckatary Hawkins will remember it, too. My boy, Robert, had been horse-back riding with Seck that day, and they had explored around and had quite an outing. They were returning to the hotel late that night, after putting the horses in the pasture. They saw something come sliding down a rope—"

"It was the Ghost of Lake Tapaho," I spoke up. "It came down a rope, and with a sudden jerk it swung the rope clear of the window up above—the second floor window. I think it was—and Robert Parr and I chased after it—but we couldn't catch it. I dragged the rope along with it and escaped in the lake."

"No; I mean it RAN into the water, and disappeared. And the rope disappeared after it, for all the world like a long, wriggling snake that was disappearing in a whirl pool—"

"Yes, so my son told me," broke in Mr. Parr, nodding at Jeckerson.

"And the next morning, Mrs. Callas," said Jeckerson, turning again to the woman. "Did you notice anything—"

"Now that we are talking about it, I recall that I did find my book of stationery upon the floor beside the table. The top had fallen off—at least I thought so at the time—"

In the palm of his upturned hand lay the crumpled bit of blue note paper.

"That ghost of Lake Tapaho was helping himself to another piece of your writing paper," said Jeckerson, "and so that explains that, Mrs. Callas. Whoever the culprit is, he knows enough not to be caught by such a clue. Whenever he sends me a message, he uses your stationery, thinking that you might be suspected."

"Of course, my dear sir," said the woman, softly. "I don't mind him taking my writing paper, but he must not open the cage and let my dear Aristophanes out, like he did tonight—"

"A watch shall be kept on your room, and it shall not happen again," spoke up the innkeeper.

"You were asleep, then, when he set the bird free?" askd Jeckerson.

"Yes, I had gone to sleep early—tired out. I closed my window but did not fasten it. I was awakened by a strong breeze from the lake—I looked up and saw the window open—then I glanced at the cage—Aristophanes was gone! The cage door was opened—he must have been in the room long enough to write the note, put it in the cage, and then left by the window—"

"He must have put the parrot out in the hall first," said Jeckerson. "We found the bird in the corridor, with this bit of blue paper in its beak."

"Ah, my dear sir!" exclaimed the woman. "Aristophanes is very proud of such a thing. Give him a bit of anything in his beak—except food—and he will carry it all over the place, and shout his few words—"

"You may go now, Mrs. Callas," said Jeckerson, rising, suddenly. "You have been very kind, annd we are sorry to have kept you from our rest this long."

"Oh, I don't mind, my dear sir. If I can be of help, I am happy. Aristophanes! Where are you, sir?"

"Here he is," I said, pointing to the parrot on the arm of my chair. "I'm afraid he might bite me like he did Olaf, if I hand him to you—"

"Come, Aristophanes!" she said, pausing beside my chair to stoop and hold out her wrist. The bird walked slowly and took his perch on the woman's arm. "He won't hurt anybody who doesn't hurt him. There now, Aristophanes. Say good night to the gentlemen."

"Squawk!" yelled the bird, giving us an indignant look. Then, resting his gaze upon Jeckerson, the bird shrieked: "See to it! See to it! There's blood upon the blade!"

We all rose as the innkeeper led the woman with the parrot to the foot of the stairs. We watched her in silence as she went up the steps, the bird on her right wrist, her left hand on the balustrade.

"Well, sir," said the innkeeper, after the lady was out of sight. "I am glad you do not suspect her, sir. I do not like to have any guest at my hotel—"

"Oh, forget it, innkeeper," broke in Jekrerson, sharply. "I am sure that no one in your hotel is playing ghost. It is unfortunate that the lady should have been imposed upon by the scoundrel who has stolen her note paper to write his messages. However, I am not going to sleep. You had better get you to your bed, Mr. Parr."

"What! And leave you here alone, when your very life is threatened—"

"That is why I am sitting up. I shall not be alone, either, as I intend to keep Hawkins and Shadow Loomis—"

"But what good will the boys be, if trouble comes, Mr. Jeckerson?" asked Mr. Crail, who had been sitting in a corner of shadows around the hearth. In his dressing gown he had not felt free to participate in the conversation until now.

"These boys," said Jeckerson, slowly, "are of more help to me, Mr. Crail, than ten men like you and Mr. Parr. So get to your beds, both of you."

Mr. Crail nodded. He walked over to Jeckerson and laid his hand upon the detective's arm.

"I shall see you in the morning," he said, softly.

"Who knows?" asked Jeckerson, lightly and with a laugh. "You see this message in my hand—"

"I know," cut in Mr. Crail, nodding again. "And I also know you, Mr. Jeckerson. That's why I say—I shall see you in the morning."

"Thanks, old man," said Jeckerson, in a low voice, as he shook Mr. Crail's hand. "Good night and pleasant dreams!"

After the two men had gone to their beds, we sat silent there in that lounge room, and the fire burnt low before any of us made a sound.

"I've just got to keep awake," I said, suddenly. "I won't let anything catch me napping, Jeckerson. I'm afraid for you—I'll be afraid until I see the morning come—"

"Nonsense," said Jeckerson, softly. "You two kids take forty winks while I keep watch—"

"Not me!" exclaimed Shadow. "No, sir, Jeckerson! You've been mighty nice to us boys—bringing us up here to this lake and showing us good times. I think it's little enough we can do, to show you we will stand by you when you're in trouble—"

Jeckerson put an arm around the shoulders of each of us.

"Kids," he said, "maybe this will be my last night with you. But I don't think so. I've had a lot of confidence in myself—and I believe that's what counts. I mean, never even dream of being beaten, until you are. Be a winner, or die trying to be one. You see, a winner has got to be some fellow who never stops. Once he's stopped, he's a quitter. And a quitter is a loser. But the fellow who can't be a quitter just naturally has to turn out a winner in the end. And I know, having you two with me, I'm safer than if I had an army of men—let's look around and see if we can't find something to keep us awake tonight—a checker-board and some checkers would be good—"

"Mr. Parr has one behind his desk there," I said.

"I'll find it!" said Shadow.

Together we ran to see what we could find, and believe me, I never saw such an assortment of things as was behind that desk. It was the check-room of the hotel, I imagine. Shadow found the checker-board all right, but before he could bring it out I had picked up something—

"Look, Jeckerson! It's the old telescope that Burleigh Jones used over on Mud-Branch!"

We forgot the checkers for the moment. Jeckerson took the telescope out of its case, and drew out its four sections.

"A mighty fine instrument," he said, half to himself, as he eyed the thing.

"Let me take a look!" I said, and holding up the long telescope, I pointed it at the window and looked out across the great expanse of water that was Lake Tapaho. "I've always wanted to see through a good telescope—"

"Well, now's your chance," said Jeckerson. "That's about the best that's made—"

"Oh, Jeckerson!" I exclaimed. "I see something! Out on the lake! In a canoe—an Indian!"

"An Indian? In a canoe. At this hour of night?"

"Yes, Jeckerson—paddling toward one of the islands—toward Minnewaukan—"

"Chief Two Feathers, most likely—Robert Parr's old Iron Man. How many feathers in his hair?"

"Two Feathers nothing Jeckerson, this one has a whole head-dress of feathers—"

"Give me that telescope!" snapped Jeckerson, suddenly, and I felt the think jerked from my hands. When I looked up, Jeckerson had his eye glued to the thing; he steadied it for a moment on the window still, and focused the lenses to fit his eye. Then he gave a sharp exclamation.

"Quick, Hawkins!" he whispered, as he threw the telescope down upon the lounge. "We've got to get to Minnewaukan island! Hurry! Shadow, come with us. We've got to hurry!"

Which we did.

Our Weekly Meeting

You certainly are the finest bunch of club members in the world, and I don't mean maybe. It was great to see how many letters came in during the past week, and how hard you are all working to win. That's the finest think anybody can have coming to him—the acknowledgement that you are trying. If you never would try you never would win, and it's the same way all through life. It's the fellow who does not get discouraged when he fails, but gets up again and starts over. That fellow is bound to win in the long run. Just keep that little motto in your mind—"TRY AGAIN," and you will find it one of the most faithful helpers you have ever known.

Now for this week's contest we are going to have lots of laughter and fun. The title of it must be "My Funniest Experience," and you may tell of any funny happening or saying, or you may compose a little verse about it. See which one can make all of us laugh the longest. I know you are away ahead of me, and already are thinking of that funny experience you had once upon a time. All right—let's go. Send in yours today.

And now our regular meeting will come to order, and we will proceed to make the acquaintance of some of our new members. First we have a letter in verse from a member in Ohio:

Dear Seck:

Our club, which is called the same as yours and has the same motto as yours, wishes to read one of your books that tells about some of your adventures which I am hopink to win.

I think you would like to know about our club, so I will tell you. We meet down on the creek bank because we have no river bank. We have a building in which we meet and which we call "the club house."

We have some adventures, but not as thrilling as yours. There is another club down the creek frem us, but they do not harm us because we treat them fair and square. I will have to close. Hoping to win a book.

Yours, fair and square,
HARLEY FREER.
431 East Main St., Ashland, Ohio.

A NEW CONTEST EACH WEEK

READ THE RULES CAREFULLY

In this weeks contest the title must contain the words "My FUN NIEST EXPERIENCE." You may write a letter or story or verse. Write on one side of paper only. Your composition must be written without any assistance from older persons. All contributions must bear the writer's full name, address and age. The contest will close Thursday. Prize winner will be announced November 23d.

PRIZE: A SECKATARY HAWKINS BOOK

Address all submissions in this contest to Seckatary Hawkins, care The Constitution.

WHAT CITY IS THIS?

Last week the solution of our puzzle password was "Turkey Dinner," which is something I hope everyone of our members will enjoy when Thanksgiving Day rolls around.

This week we are going to have a different kind of password. It was a message sent from a reporter from a city where he had gone to get some news. He telegraphed back:

"NO REAL NEWS."

There you have the password. Take all of the letters in those three words and change them around, and you will have the name of the city from which he sent his message. As a starter, I'll tell you this much—it's a southern city. Now, see how keen your wits are.

Next we will give the California delegation the floor and hear from a very interesting member in that state:

Dear Seck:

First of all I am writing for a membership for your very interesting and entertaining club. I did not know of the Secretary Hawkins Club until a few weeks ago my sister discovered your page in the paper and told me to read it.

My sister, a friend and I have a club. We haven't decided on a name for it yet, but we are pretty well organized. Our clubroom is the second story of our garage. We are adopting a poor family for Thanksgiving and Christmas. On Thanksgiving we are going to send them a $1 bill, and for Christmas we are going to bring them clothing, canned goods and toys. Please don't think that I am boasting. I mention this so that if you do print this letter in your section, some other boys and girls might see it and do the same things, and in that way a great many needy families would have a real Thanksgiving and a "Merry Christmas."

I always look forward to reading your section on the funny page. We all enjoyed the part about Little Herman, the Fiddler, the hunchback and the three-eyed ape.

Yours, fair and square,
ADELE WATKINS.
422 S. Orange Drive, Los Angeles, Cal.

Down in sunny Tennessee lives the member who will address us next. The town he lives in was made famous by a certain event some years ago:

Dear Seck:

I have tried before to win one of your books because I have read two of them already. They were "The Chinese Coin" and when you were in Cuba with Link.

I have read about you for about two years and have wished for one of your books.

And I think Jeckerson is the best detective I ever heard of. I read the mystery of the Green Mansion; and, when I think of it, I think of poor Stephen.

I hope this wins a book, because reading is my hobby.

Yours, fair and square,
RAY WYRICK, 13.
292 N. Market St., Dayton, Tenn.

Here comes a pen pal from down in dear old Georgia who would like to hear from the girl members of our club:

Dear Seck:

I have been a member of your club for a year and written a good many times and I have never won a book. I sure do want one. I saw in the paper where one of my school friends won a book, and I do want one, too.

My birthday is September 17, and I am 12 years old. Have I a turn! If so, write me.

My sister is writing to you. She says that she is going to join your club. She likes to receive letters. So tell all the girl members to write to her. Her address is the same as mine. Her name is Louise.

Yours, fair and squar,
ELIZABETH SWANSON.
Route 1, Palmetto, Ga.

A little 9-year-old member in the Cotton State tried so hard to write a nice letter and good penmanship that he wins for this one:

Dear Seck:

I hope you have not forgotten me. I have not forgotten you. I still read about you in the paper. I am nine years old and in the fourth grade. I am sending a verse of a day in October.

Yours, fair and square,
ROLLAND MANN.
Notasulga, Ala.

NOTE TO ALL CLUB MEMBERS.

If your letter is printed in the "Seckatary's Mail Box" it means that it has received only honorable mention. But if it is picked out for special mention like the above letters and the Seckatary introduces it with a few words of comment, THEN YOU WILL GET A BOOK.

From old Kentucky comes the next communication who has the spirit of a real winner:

Dear Seck:

I have been in your club a long time and I have received one book. The name of it is "The Knights of the Square Table." It was one of the best books I've ever read. I would like to get a book, and if I don't get one this time I will try again until I do get one. I like the colors of the pin fine because blue and white and red are my favorite colors. If my letter is good enough I hope you'll put it in the paper with the others.

Yours, fair and square,
EUGENE KEITH, 11.
Memorial Hall, Richmond, Ky.

Time to lower the curtain again for another week, when we meet again on this page. Hope you all have a good week in school and make up your minds to make a better mark today than yesterday. That's a good slogan, you know—BEAT YESTERDAY. And all the while keep whistling for the blue bird—that means happiness, of which I wish you all a big portion.

Bye, till next week.

Yours, fair and square,

Seckatary Hawkins

Dear Seck:

I've been a member of your club for a year.
And your stories I think are very dear.
I'm crazy about our motto, "Fair and Square,"
And I hope of the letters I get my share.

I am five plus eight,
November 11, is the date.
It will soon be Halloween,
I think that is a wonderful scene.

For pets I have three cats,
Of course they all catch rats.
I am trying to win a book,
For it with pleasure I will look.

ESIIE RUTH PAYNE,
Route 2, Villa Rica, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I have often heard that a quitter never wins, nor a winner never quits. I will try not to be a quitter. I read your adventures in the Sunday and daily papers. They are very interesting. I have lots of hobbies, they are reading, writing, sewing and drawing. Also collecting stamps and Indian arrow heads.

I am 12 years old. I go to Pennington school, and am in the seventh grade. My favorite studies are geography and hygiene.

Tell the other members of the club to write to me and tell me what grade they are in, their age and what school they go to. Thank you.

MARY WILLIAMS.
R. F. D. 1, Newborn, Ga.

Hello Seck:

Here comes a new member who has only written to you once. This new member is certainly enjoying being a member! You bet she is!

Now getting down to real, serious business, Seck, I want a pen pal. You know what I mean by that. I want some one to correspond with me. I am 11 years old and have red hair with blue eyes. Some one please write to me.

Gee, Seck, but I certainly do like to read your adventures.

Yours, fair and square,
RUBY LOCKE,
Box 45 Hartwell, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I have been reading your stories for some time and sure do enjoy them.

For pets I have a dog and a cat, my dog's name is Laddie Boy. I love dumb animals. I am 12 years old and i nthe seventh grade.

My favorite hobbies are swimming, reading and hiking. I love poetry also. My favorite authoress is Louisa May Alcott and my favorite author is Zane Grey. I think Herman the fiddler is a wonderful little boy.

Yours, fair and square,
ELIZABETH PARKER,
Route 1, Box 54, Barnesville, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I have been reading your club page and enjoyed it. And I want to join it very much.

I am eight years of age and I'm in the third grade. I like my teacher very much. I made A in everything the last six weeks. I am going to Oklahoma next month. Please print my letter so that my daddy in Oklahoma shall see it.

Yours, fair and square,
EUGENE YLAR.
Royston, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I read your adventures in both the daily and Sunday papers. Hurry and solve the mystery at Lake Tapaho, but I shouldn't say that you will do your best, I'm sure.

Seck, please tell some girl's to write to me, I'm thirteen years old and my birthday is May 5.

Hoping to hear from other members, I remain,

Yours, fair and square,
VONCILE ELLIS.
Alpharetta, Ga.

Dear Seck:

Guess you'll be surprised to have a new member away down here in this little town of Cairo, Ga.

I am fourteen years of age, would like very much to be with you to help you discover the mystery on "Lake Tapaho."

Some of you members write to me.

Yours, fair and square,
HAMON EUGENE PHILLIPS, JR.
Box 115, Cairo, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I go to school and am in the seventh grade. A day in school is a happy day for me, and I wish I could spend every day in school for I enjoy everything we do, reading, writing, playing, and I also like history, geography, health, arithmetic and spelling.

As I am a new member I will describe myself. I have light hair, blue eyes and fair complexion.

Tell all the members to write to me.

Yours, fair and square,
SARA COOK.
Route 4, Franklin, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I am a little girl 8 years of age. I am in the third grade at school. My school dosen't start until in October or November. I will be glad when my school starts. Well Seck, I will tell you how I look: I have brown eyes and blond hair and fair skin, and I am 52 inches high. I live on a farm. I like your colors, white and blue, and your motto, "Fair and Square."

Yours, fair and square,
BETSY B. GLENN.

Dear Seck:

I would like to have my name enrolled as a member of your club. I have a broken limb. I won't to able to walk for a few months. I am a girl of 12 and am in the seventh grade at school. My birthday comes on April 3. Have I a twin! If so I would like to hear from her.

Yours, fair and square,
LOUISE MILLER.
R. F. D. 1, Smyrna, Ga.

Dear Seck:

Have written you once but one time is not enough times for me. It may for some not me. I like to go to school. I am fond of spelling and especially fond of arithmetic. Am always glad test day comes for them. I am the girl that is going to try to do as your rules said. When we come from Louisiana we had to come through Mississippi. We saw about a hundred oil wells. You could taste oil in the water you drank.

I am so proud of my pen I don't know what to do. I put away the card, wouldn't take nothing for my pen.

Always, your fair and square,
ESTELLE BRITT.
Tanner, Ala.

A Day in School

When in the morning first of all,
We have arithmetic,
I like this best of all my subjects,
And in this I'm pretty slick.

Then next the reading,
And history, too—
I like both of these,
Don't you?

And after lunch we sometimes draw,
And have a lot of fun
Then comes geography and spelling,
And the school work is done.

KATHERINE BROOKS,
506 S. McKay Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I am at school. You will be surprised to hear from me, for I don't write very often. I wonder if you miss me. I read your part in the paper every day. The more I read it the better I like it.

This is our first month at school. We have a new school house. I like it fine, because it is blue and white. I like to go to school. I am in the seventh grade.

I wonder what Link is doing. Seck, I don't think there is no other club in the world as fine as yours. I wish I could attend the meetings. You and the other boys sure are brave.

I made up a little poem Friday for your club. When I let my sisters read it they said that I did not write it. Anybody can do anything when they try.

Yours, fair and square,
DOROTHY WALL.
Route 3, Ellanville, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I am a little girl 7 years of age. I have light brown hair and brown eyes. I am in third grade at school.

Yours, fair and square,

Dear Seck:

I received my club badge. I was so proud of it. I said to every boy and girl friend, "Look at my Seckatary Hawkins' pin."

Seck, tell all of your club members to write to me as I will be delighted to have a pen pal. Well, I will describe myself now: I have brown hair, blue eyes and fair complexion. I am about 4 feet and 7 inches tall. I am 11 years of age and in the 6th grade at school. Seck, I like your colors, blue and white and also your motto, "Fair and Square."

Yours, fair and square,
LORENE MAYSPARRACK,
Glade Spring, Va.

Dear Seck:

Here's another "lass from the land of cotton, knocking at the clubhouse door.

I have been picking cotton, but we are almost through now. And oh boy, will I be glad—"

I have been a member for almost a year and have written you lots of times. I have read one of your books, "The Grey Ghost," but it belonged to my sister. I hope I'll win one of my very own some time.

I remain, fair and square.
SARAH ESTELLE GILES,
Route 2, Douglasville, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I am so disappointed, sad and blue. You did not publish my letter to you when I joined the nice club, and I have never heard from any of the girls and boys. Have I a twin! I am 10 years old and a perfect blonde. I love to make new friends and still keep my old ones. Well, this is "Halloween night" and we are having a great party. Please ask the girls and boys, too, if they will write me. I buy a paper every week. With best of wishes to all.

Yours, fair and square.
MINNIE WILLIAMS COX.
Rowland, N. C.

Dear Seck:

Your mystery is in a peculiar shape now, but you and Jeckersen will surely clear it up. I almost know you will be a big detective some day instead of just "Junior Police."

Yours, fair and square,
RUBY LOCKE,
Box 45, Hartwell, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I have written you lots of letters but I've never won a book, so I am writing again. I know I can't write as interesting letters as some of the members, but I do my best to. I like your motto and colors, and I also like your adventures. I read them every Sunday and I sure do enjoy them. I like your club rules too. I have learned them all from memory. I have six pen pals, but I want a lots more, so tell all of the members to write.

Yours, fair and square,
AGNES CATLETT.
Gibsonville, N. C.

Dear Seck:

As I have just got through studying my lessons will try to write a few lines.

I started to school second Monday in October and have been going ever since.

Listen, I have been in several clubs at school, but I have not been in one that is as good as old Seckatary Hawkins club, and don't believe I will ever, but I don't care if I don't for this will be better than any I can ever join I'm sure.

Seck, I am in the seventh grade at school and find that it is very hard.

Yours, fair and square,
HELEN MATTHEWS,
R. F. D. 4, Box 106, Conyers, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I read your stories in the paper every Sunday and I sure do enjoy them.

I am a boy of 12 and in the 5th grade. My hair is light, have grey eyes, fair skin, and my favorite sports are baseball, swimming and reading.

I For pets I have a cat and a dog. My dog will bark for bread and stand up on his hind feet.

November's Potpourri

The Whole Month of November Is One of Fine Feasts, for the Glories of Thanksgiving Are Presaged All Through the Month With the Harvest Cider and Pumpkins, Tangerines, Reindeer, Turkey and Artichokes. These Are Menus for a Flavorful Week

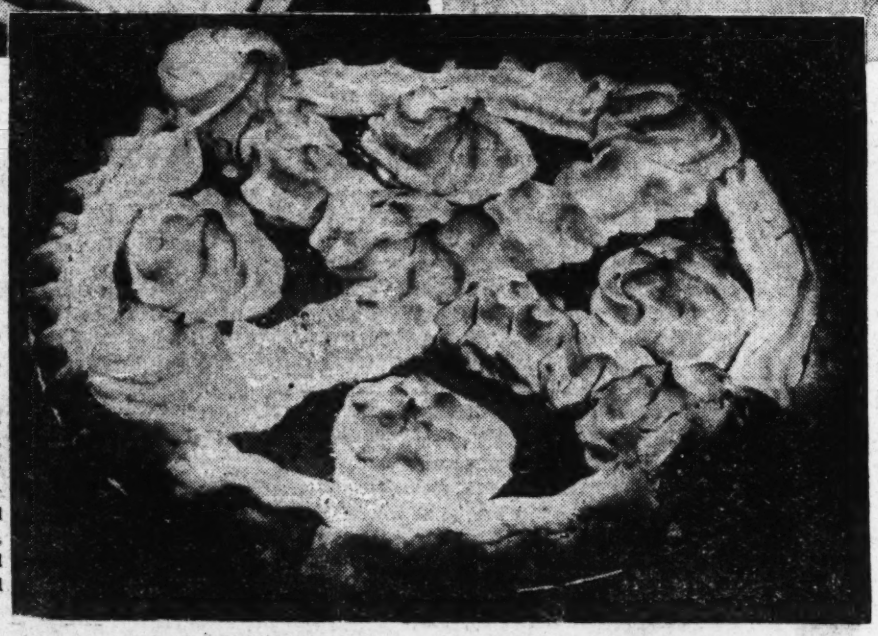

By the Magazine Staff

Broiled Filets of Reindeer

Artichokes, with Butter Sauce

Cocoanut Pumpkin Pie Photographs by Zerbe

A SUGGESTION of great feast days to come and lesser feasts at hand hangs over the markets at this season, for here, true to autumn, are foods with a tang, foods in brilliant colors and foods with good, hearty substance to give balance.

Cider and tangerines, pumpkins ready to spice and put in pies, apples plumped up for brown bettys, sprouts and sweet potatoes to accompany pork dishes, nuts and citron ripe for fruit cakes and fragrant grapes to follow or between repasts. Rounding out November food supplies with characteristic timeliness are newly arrived dates and figs, cauliflower, carrots, endive, Edam cheese, haddock roe, brown rice and those November classics, reindeer and turkey.

From this potpourri of interesting offerings it should not be difficult to arrange appealing menus. They will, of course, be built on the basis of good soups, nourishing cereals and our reliable and perennial greens and meats. The Magazine presents for a week in November seven days' menus with some recipes.

Reindeer Filet Chops

Buy prepared reindeer filets, one for each serving, rolled and held securely with a skewer. Grease the rounds of the broiler and place the filets on it about two inches from the flame. Sear on one side and then turn. When well brown on both sides lower the flame and cook more slowly until the meat is done to suit your taste. A chop one inch thick will require about ten minutes to cook; if two inches thick the time will vary from twenty to forty minutes. Place the broiled meat on a hot platter, sprinkle with salt and pepper, pour melted butter over it and garnish with watercress.

To Prepare Artichokes

To cook artichokes prepare them by cutting off the stem close to the leaves and clipping one inch from the top of the leaves. Soak the artichokes in cold water for half an hour, drain and cook in boiling salted water for half an hour. Remove from fire, turn upside down to drain and serve hot.

Cocoanut-Pumpkin Pie

To one pint of sifted pumpkin add one pint of rich milk, half a cup of grated cocoanut, one tablespoon butter, half a teaspoon each of salt and ginger, one cup sugar, one teaspoon vanilla, half a teaspoon mace and a little grated nutmeg. Beat the yolks of three eggs and beat into the mixture. Beat the whites of the eggs and put over top of pie in fancy designs with pastry tube after it is put in a previously baked lower crust. Bake in a moderate oven twenty minutes. Sift grated cocoanut over all and brown five minutes.

FRIENDS!

Is anything too good for him? Is anything too safe? You know it's not! And you know what you are doing when you give your child Castoria.

It will help to keep your child "the picture of health." Because it prevents many little upsets that make a child cross and restless. It soothes away those fretful spells before they make him feverish. It coaxes the little bowels to work before he has had time to become badly constipated.

When it's something more serious, Castoria is still a mother's standby. Be sure there's always a bottle in the house. Be sure it's never empty. Colic calls for quick relief. Constipation must be checked without delay. You can always trust this proven remedy. Children love its taste and will always take it. Don't resort to anything stronger! The case that Castoria won't help is a case for the doctor.

Castoria is sold in every drugstore. The genuine bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. It is a harmless vegetable preparation. Always safe to give for those little pains that worry an infant. Always ready to ease older children who are "out of sorts" and in need of gentle regulation.

DIRIGIBLE-TRAIN WHICH MADE SPEED OF 94 MILES AN HOUR—Strange-appearing "Zeppelin on wheels" as it appeared after a successful test run in which it made a speed of 94 miles an hour. AT LAST! A QUICK SURE WAY TO BANISH "Skin Congestion

"But I keep my skin perfectly clean!" you answer if someone suggests Skin Congestion as the cause of your complexion worries.

Of course....soap-and-water clean! But if you want lovely skin in spite of smoky cities and dusty roads, you must cleanse deep down in the pores where these millions of tiny "breathers" become clogged.

This Cream eliminates impurities from millions of pores

Plough's Cleansing Cream makes this deep pore-cleansing easy. Its light oils quickly free every pore of dust, smut and make-up and effectively overcome the causes of skin congestion.

Use this cream tonight! See for yourself how immaculately fresh and clean—how clear-toned, smooth and beautiful it leaves your complexion.

Plough's Cleansing Cream is of the highest quality and economically priced wherever beauty creations are sold. The 50c size contains more than twice the quantity of the 30c size, and the 75c size is the most economical to buy.

"Skin Congestion denotes the presence of a hardened substance in the pores caused by the accumulation of dust, smut and make-up.

We also suggest Plough's Peroxide (Vanishing) Cream, 50c and 30c, for protection and Plough's Cold Cream, 50c and 30c, for nourishing the skin.

MOON MULLINS

OH YOU'LL BE SORRY, HAWKINS! YOU'LL BE SORRY! WHEN I GET RICH I'M GONNA BUY THIS JOINT AND FIRE YOU!

SAY KAYO, MY DELIVERY BOY'S HOME SICK TODAY AND THIS MEAT ORDER GOES TO SOME SWELL PEOPLE WHO ALWAYS GIVES HIM A NICE TIP AND IF YOU'LL BE REAL CAREFUL I'LL LET YOU TAKE IT OVER.

OH GEE! THAT'S GREAT OF YOU, MR. HAMHOCKS.

MEAT ORDER FROM HAMHOCKS BUTCHER SHOP!

HECK! THEY DON'T SEEM TO BE ANYBODY HOME WELL, I GUESS I'LL JUST PARK IT IN THE ICE-BOX.

OH BOY! PICKLES AND STRAWBERRY PRESERVES AND EVER'THING.

SAY, LEGGO ME YOU-

OW! STOP THAT!

HAWKINS- WHAT IS THE MEANING OF THIS?

BOP!

I CAUGHT HIM IN THE ICE-BOX, MADAM.

COME HERE, LITTLE BOY. I WOULD NOT HAVE HIT HAWKINS ON THE LEG LIKE THAT IF I WERE YOU.

WELL, YOU WOULDA IF YOU WAS AS LOW DOWN AS ME, LADY.

HAWKINS, PUT ANOTHER PLATE ON THE TABLE—I WANT TO TALK TO THIS YOUNG MAN SO I AM GOING TO KEEP HIM FOR DINNER.

YES MAM.

I DON'T MIND TELLIN' YA LADY, THAT I THINK YOU'RE THE BERRIES BUT THAT HUSBAND OF YOURS IS A AWFUL QUINCE.

GOOD HEAVENS! HAWKINS IS NOT MY HUSBAND-

NOW TAKE OFF YOUR HAT-AND TELL ME WHAT IS YOUR NAME AND WHO ARE YOUR PEOPLE-

YOU KNOW ME BRUDDER MOON MULLINS OF COURSE. HE'S THE GREATEST POOL-PLAYER IN TOWN- WELL, I'M HIS KID BRUDDER, KAYO.

HUMM- SIT DOWN. I WANT TO TELL YOU A STORY ABOUT WHAT HAPPENED TO A BAD LITTLE BOY.

OH OH!

WELL, ONCE UPON A TIME THERE WAS A BOY NAMED NATHAN, WHO WAS VERY FOND OF MOLASSES CANDY AND ONE DAY HE SAW A PAN IN A STORE-WINDOW WITH SOME BEAUTIFUL YELLOW MOLASSES CANDY IN IT, HE THOUGHT- SO GREEDILY HE STUCK IN HIS HAND AND—

HOW HE YELLED WHEN HE DISCOVERED THAT IT WAS STICKY FLY-PAPER AND NOT MOLASSES CANDY IN THE PAN AND—

KAYO-COME HERE, I AM TELLING YOU A STORY ABOUT WHAT HAPPENED TO A BOY WHO TOOK THINGS THAT DIDN'T BELONG TO HIM.

ALL RIGHT, GO AHEAD. BUT YOU'D BETTER GET THAT GUY HAWKINS. TO LISTEN TO IT TOO- I JEST CAUGHT HIM TRYIN' TO GET AWAY WITH MY HAT.
